Puterbaugh was not a drinking man and had the reputation of being an honest and peaceable citizen. He suffered from grip last spring and since then has not been in the best of health, frequently complaining of a pain in his head. He was a man about 38 or 40 years of age, and his wife was a year or two younger. The murdered children were as follows: Carrie, 15 years; Mabel, 13 years; Charles, 10 years; Ralph, 2 years. One son, Allen, 17 years of age, survives. He was away from home at work.

Puterbaugh was in Beatrice a few days ago and is said to have then purchased the revolver with which the terrible deed was committed. In the barn near the house were the two mules and three horses. Hitched to a wagon in front of the barn were two more horses, and in the field a number of cows.

The house was fairly well furnished for a farm house, and in the cupboard was an abundance of good food. Puterbaugh owned 240 acres of land, which he purchased in March last from A. Wisnell, of Beatrice. He was liked by all who knew him there and at his former home in Diller.

The Electric Chair.

So far as preventing publicity in the press is concerned, the law seems to be a failure. Perhaps it would be more exact to say that those who are charged with the execution of the law talk too much.—Indianapolis Journal.

Those electrocutions in New York appear to have been entirely successful in removing from this life the four condemned murderers. Electrocution is probably more merciful than hanging.—Dayton Times.

If we must have capital punishment it is possible the new method is preferable to the old, but the people are entitled to know whether that is so or not, and they never could know if the press gag clause of the law were respected and observed.—Rochester Herald.

It will undoubtedly be many years before the electric death is adopted in the other capital punishment States of the Union, and perhaps before it is generally adopted there may be simpler, although probably no less painful, methods of execution.—Detroit Free Press.

On the whole, there is every reason for the opinion that electrical execution of criminals is a distinct advance of civilization. The only respect in which the new law is a failure is in its attempt to prevent the press of the United States from giving the news with regard to that important change.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Evidently the electrical process of killing is more humane than hanging, although it is barbarous enough, heaven knows. Capital punishment is a hideous and an awful thing, and it seems a safe prediction that twenty-five years hence it will not be practiced in any form by any people pretending to civilization.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

It does not need a careful reading of the official story to convince any one that the attempt to regulate by law the sensationalism in reports of executions is a farce, and that the regulation cannot be repealed too soon. Apparently executions by electricity comply with all the requirements of a humane law, but the official report must be filed away with other unsuccessful experiments.—Troy Times.

There are differences of opinion as to the deterrent influences of the death penalty on evil-doers, but there is no room at all for doubt that while this penalty remains in vogue the electrical system of inflicting it has many and conspicuous advantages over all other methods yet devised.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It does not make much difference whether murderers are hanged by the neck until they are dead or whether they are put to death by electricity. The thing is to kill them, and that swiftly.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

"Electrocution" draws the just condemnation of the New York Times. "Electrothany," which the Press was first to propose a year ago, is the best form yet suggested. It is philologically accurate; it has analogies in other words, such as euthanasia, and its meaning is perfectly clear, and the verb "electrothanize" can be derived from it in accordance with sound usage.—Philadelphia Press.

The only feature of the affair which merits condemnation is that provision of the law which prohibits the newspapers from publishing any of the details of the execution, and which excludes representatives of the press from witnessing the official killing. When the New York Legislature again assembles it will strike that silly provision from the law.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The success of the executions by electricity at Sing Sing will probably have the effect of silencing the objections to the law providing for this method of taking off criminals. That it is more humane than hanging is practically certain, and it is probable that for a time at least it will have a more terrorizing effect upon the imagination of criminals.—St. Louis Republic.

HAY AND GRAIN CROPS.

GOOD PROSPECTS THE RULE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Michigan and Wisconsin Only Will Be Short on Hay—Grain Damaged in Localities, but a Heavy Crop Assured—Causes of Occasional Failure.

The reports of our correspondents in twelve States show that in some the hay crop will be enormous, and in two or three an almost complete failure.

In Illinois fifty-nine correspondents say that the prospects for a large crop are good. Thirty-five correspondents say that in their counties the crop will be light, owing to the spring drought. The outlook for the State, as a whole, is good.

The condition of the hay crop in Kentucky is just the opposite of that of the three States previously referred to. In two-thirds of the counties the crop is very poor. The drought in May gave it a back-set from which it was not able to recover. In some counties the clover is good, but timothy, in the same counties, will not make half a crop.

Michigan is very much worse off than Kentucky. Forty-six correspondents report the outlook as bad, and only ten report the crop as average in condition.

Missouri is rejoicing in an abundant crop; the hay crop was never better. Only one county reports the crop as below expectations.

Kansas and Nebraska are in the same condition as Missouri, the hay crop being uniformly large, and in good condition. The reports from every correspondent in Nebraska, and from all but one in Kansas, are to the same effect.

In Wisconsin the drought has blasted the hopes of even a fair hay crop, and only ten correspondents report the condition as good, while, on the other hand, fifty-three report the crop as in a very bad condition.

In Iowa the early drought was not able to retard the grass beyond recuperation, and the copious rains have brought it forward in fine shape. Fifty-eight correspondents report that the crop is first class, while only a few report it as from one-half to three-fourths of an average.

The condition in the Dakotas is even better than in Iowa, eight out of every nine correspondents giving an encouraging report.

The annual crop report of the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, Racine, Wis., which is made from careful reports sent by their agents throughout the country, states that should no adverse condition set in during the next two weeks the Northwest will have secured the largest grain crop ever known. The dangers to be apprehended are from too much rain and hot winds. Except in Central Wisconsin and some parts of South Dakota there is an excess of moisture already, seriously interfering with the cultivation of corn and causing an excessive growth of straw in wheat and oats. Harvest is progressing in Southern Iowa and Nebraska. The following table gives the results, in summary form, as reported from the States mentioned:

Iowa complains of too much rain, especially in the north and northwest, and damage by hail and flood in northwest counties. In Minnesota the conditions are very favorable throughout the State. Nebraska reports excessive rain in the eastern part. Harvest is now under way and well over in the southern portions. North Dakota's present prospect is for a crop in excess of any ever raised. South Dakota conditions are favorable for wheat. Cold and late spring and cut-worms injured corn. Wisconsin—This State, except in the northwest and along the south line, is below average, owing to dry weather in April and May. The last storm appears to have been quite general, and doubtless did more or less damage to the heavy stands of small grain, besides further delaying attention to the corn-fields where the weeds are struggling for the mastery.

CONFESSES AN OLD MURDER.

An Acquitted Man Says He Killed J. P. Cash Twenty-four Years Ago.

About twenty-four years ago J. P. Cash was murdered four miles west of Paris, Ill., and Bruce Ray and C. W. Perry were arrested charged with the crime. Vendever Perry escaped. Ray and C. W. Perry were acquitted. A letter was received at Paris which exonerates Vandever Perry of all complicity in the crime, and is as follows:

LAMAR, MO.

To all whom it may concern:

Believing that I am about to die, I wish to make a confession of the murder of J. P. Cash on the evening of the 18th of December, 1867, at the residence of the deceased's brother, Johnson Cash, about four miles west of Paris, Edgar County, Illinois, the crime of which my brother, Vandever Perry, was charged. But when I met my brother on the 26th of January, 1868, I told him just how it was, and that if he had done as I wanted him to do and kept out of the way as much as he could and did accidentally get caught, I would step in and give myself up and he should be vindicated and exonerated from all harm. If he did not he would have to suffer an unjust punishment; that I had been tried and acquitted, and they had nothing against me as far as they knew. Some of them thought my brother had a knife, but he did not. I took the knife and used it, but in self-defense, as Mr. Cash came at me with a club, swearing he would knock my brains out. He struck at me with the club. I threw up my left arm and knocked the lick off, and we came together and I had to do something to save myself. Now I make this confession to let the people know who did it and to clear my brother of the charge against him, as I am about ready to die and be out of the way.

PERRY.

P. S.—When this is found have it published in the papers so all who are concerned may know that I was the man, and not my brother, who killed Mr. Cash.

California's New Lake.

IF a lake has been permanently restored to its ancient bed in California by an earthquake shock it will be a very unusual case of seismic beneficence for which the State should be duly grateful. A lake is better than a desert.—Brooklyn Citizen.

FOR half a century we have been gradually reducing our great American desert, until finally it was consigned almost to oblivion in Southern California, where it sunk below sea level. Nature has at last concluded to wipe it out entirely, and has sprung a leak from the Colorado River, and will very soon convert the desert into a lake.—Omaha Bee.

Victory for the State Police Board.

In the Superior Court at Terre Haute, Judge McNutt, on motion of counsel for State Police Board, granted the application for a review of the judgment previously entered holding the State police law unconstitutional. The court then set aside the judgment heretofore entered against Messrs. Kelsem, Earley and Sankey, the three State Police Commissioners, and dissolved the injunction restraining them from organizing the police force. The effect of this reversal of the former decision is to make the police law passed by the Legislature constitutional. City Attorney Simson was granted an appeal to the Supreme Court. The cause of this action on the part of Judge McNutt is the discovery of the decision in the 121st Indiana, in which it was held that the clause providing that the policemen be selected from the two political parties did not invalidate the whole law, because the prior clause provides that the commissioners shall take oath not to be influenced by party considerations in the appointment or removal of policemen. Judge McNutt's former decision was made when unaware of this. This places the State Board in charge of the police, they having been restrained from exercising authority since March 14.

Minor State Items.

—Gibson County expects to export 1,500 car-loads of wheat this season.

—Wm. Brown, aged 72, dropped dead at Crawfordsville from heart disease.

—Clay City Reporter says there are sixty-five widows in that town "including grass."

—Onions are being shipped north from New Albany at the rate of 1,000 barrels per week.

—Morgan County wheat averaged twenty-five bushels to the acre, and brought 80 cents.

—A dog, supposed to be affected with hydrophobia, bit several dumb animals, near Bloomington, before it was killed.

—Stella Webb, of Jeffersonville, was handling a revolver when it was accidentally discharged, sending a bullet through her leg.

—During the past year no less than seventeen insane persons have been sent to the asylum from Morgan County, caused mostly by religion.

—Albert Hicks, a brakeman, fell from a freight train near New Albany, and when the engine went back after him he was unconscious and dying.

—Philip Stephens, a deaf old man of 81 years, was run down and killed by a Pennsylvania engine at Fort Wayne. He leaves an aged widow and several children.

—A wreck occurred on the Pennsylvania road south of Elizabethtown. The engine and fourteen cars left the track. Edward Fenton, engineer, and John Boese are perhaps fatally injured. An old blind horse had wandered on the track, causing the smash-up.

—A distressing accident occurred on the Vandalia Railroad between Camden and Flora, resulting in the death of Sylvester Kingery, a son of one of the best-known families in Carroll County. Kingery and a young man named Edgar House, both of whom live in Camden, went to Flora and were returning home at 1 o'clock in the morning. About midway between the two places they sat down on the track to rest, and fell asleep. House rolled off the track in his sleep, but a fast freight came along and cut off Kingery's head.

—John W. Coons, Deputy Auditor of State under Bruce Carr, is in Washington doing a little figuring on that $50,000 retained by the Government when the direct war tax money was paid, the claim being that $46,000 from this fund had been paid over to the State years ago. Governor Hovey is satisfied that Indiana never received the $46,000 in dispute and the government officials are equally confident that the records show to the contrary. The Secretary of the Treasury is anxious to see Indiana demonstrate her right to the amount, and will afford Captain Coons every opportunity possible to get at the facts. The latter is deputized by the Governor to act as agent for the State in this matter.

—Deputy Internal Revenue Collector John Platt is inspecting the many stills in Perry County, where apple-jack and peach brandy are manufactured.

—Miss Irma Albert, who was suddenly stricken blind at the home of her parents in New Albany, several weeks ago, is gradually recovering her eyesight.

—The mother of Isaac Montgomery, the young man who was frightened to death recently, at New Albany, will begin suit against the practical jokers who nailed him in a box.

—George Tapp, of Crawfordsville, has gone to Terre Haute to test the virtues of a mad-stone, he having been bitten by his favorite dog.

—Bert Hardspath, a colored barber, was found near the tracks, east of Rushville, in a dying condition. There is suspicion of foul play.

—Henry Seig and James Yeager will have to go to law to find out which one of them owns a field of wheat in Harrison County which both claim.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. MCDOUGALL.

REMEMBER KLINCK IS THE NAME OF THAT Wonderful Remedy

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER VI.

SHORT-LIVED JOYS.

When Joe woke up the next morning the sun was shining across the floor; the pattern on the carpet looked brilliant; such beautiful, bright colors she had never seen on a floor.

There was a prodigious noise outside. Chickens were cackling and cackling, cocks crowing, geese cackling, turkeys gobbling, men shouting and calling to each other. There was a sound indoors—a rattling of pans and sound of dishes and many feet moving.

Joe sat bolt upright. Everything was so strange. She did not know where she was until she recalled her journey. She had slipped out of her bed, was slipping quietly into her clothes, when suddenly a head was thrust in the door.

"Oh, you are up. Well, you'll find some things on the chair over there, and an apron."

Then the head was withdrawn.

The voice was Samantha's. It was sharp and disagreeable. Joe did not like it. But she turned to the chair, where she found a brown stuff dress, a world too wide and much too long for her. The sleeves were so long they came down over her hands. When she was fairly in the dress she gave herself a shake.

"Humph! I feel like—like a granny in this. I suppose I've got to wear it. I'd rather have my old one—but here goes."

She turned up the sleeves and put the apron on and tied it. Then she discovered it was wrong side out. She turned it, and wondered if she did not look like a woman. Then she walked down to the kitchen.

"You are here, are you?" said Mrs. Wonder. "Go out and bring in the pans the chicken feed was in. Wash them out—clean, mind; then wash the milk pails, and mind you scald them with hot water."

Joe, who was very quick-witted, wondered how they could be scalded with cold water, but she obeyed the orders promptly. Samantha observed her critically, then deliberately washed the feed pans and scalded the pails.

"Now, maybe you can do it the next time."

One or two of the farm hands were looking on. They were waiting for their breakfast, and Joe blushed for shame.

The men ate breakfast first. Mr. Job Wonder was so busy he did not see Joe for a good while. Then he asked her abruptly:

"Well, how'd you sleep last night? Pooty good, I reckon. My wife's beds ain't ekalled in Acorn County; leastwise I never find none like 'em."

"I slept very well, thank you," said Joe with burning cheeks.

When the men were gone, Mrs. Wonder, Samantha, two girls that were here, there, everywhere, Joe thought, at once, and Joe sat down to the table. The breakfast was not as bountiful as the supper; but there was more on the table, and a greater variety, than Joe had ever beheld on Mr. Zeke Caper's private table, of which she had obtained many glimpses in passing his rooms.

When breakfast was over, Joe, without being prompted, was helping to wash the dishes, when Mrs. Wonder told her to drive the cows down the lane into the meadow, and put the bars up after them.

Joe went about her task like one who understood it. One little cow, a brindle, with crumpled horns refused to follow the others. She turned on Joe, and Joe retreated precipitately. Again and again Joe returned to the charge, and the cow with the crumpled horns invariably drove her back.

Finally, when she was a little frightened, she picked up a stone, threw it, hit the cow on the horn, and brindle about-faced and trotted into the meadow after her fellows. When Joe returned to the house, she was perspiring with her exertions.

There was a curious twinkle in the other girls' eyes, and even Mrs. Wonder seemed to be trying to keep her countenance. Samantha snorted out:

"You let brindle get ahead of you. You've got to make the cows mind you if you'll make your salt in the country, miss?"

"What must I do now?" Joe asked Mrs. Wonder.

Mrs. Wonder gave her numerous orders. They were so many that Joe thought it impossible to perform the duties in one day. But she obeyed her instructions to the best of her ability. Then, to her surprise, she found she had abundance of time.

Availing herself of the opportunity, she stole out to the barn where the chickens were hunting food. Then she ran down to the brook, and watched the ducks and geese playing in the ponds made for them.

To return to the house, get her treasures, and slip out the back way, and make a circle to the barn occupied less than fifteen minutes.

"I can play here, and no one will hear me," said Joe to herself gayly as she thummed the banjo, and hummed a song. Then she tried the wheezy old accordion by way of variety. When she satisfied herself she had found a hiding place for these treasures, she concealed them, and returned to the farm house, where Samantha contrived to find work for her.

When Job Wonder entered the house in the middle of the afternoon, he found Joe lying with her head against her chair, fast asleep, her needle lying in her lap.

Job called his wife. "What makes you set her to sewing them rags!"

"I didn't do it."

"Where's Samanthy?—Samanthy's did it then."

"What is it now?" Samantha asked, coming in.

"Job don't want the new girl to be killed with work, I reckon," said Mrs. Wonder, scornfully.

"'Tain't that, ezackly—only I want you to break her in easy like. She ain't used to steddy work."

"Well, she'll learn it if she lives here," responded Samantha tartly.

"Now, Samanthy, you go slow. I've some say here, I reckon."

"You wouldn't, then, if I was your wife. I'd not have any man meddlin' in the house."

Job felt ill at ease. He was not quite sure he had done right bringing a girl home from the poorhouse. But he controlled himself and walked out.

Poor Joe, who was wide awake now (the conversation aroused her), from that moment disliked Samantha fully as much as Samantha disliked her.

In time she began to feel more at home. At the end of a week she knew and called every farmhand by his name, knew the names of the horses and cows, and learned, like the others, to call Samantha "a crank."

But she made many mortifying mistakes. Both the women forgot she had no opportunities. Both expected quite as much of her as of any girl of a similar age familiar with farm life. Both indulged peculiar whims; both were set in their ways. Samantha, to make herself more disagreeable, was stiff, precise, angular, exacting. She was a thorn in her brother's side. Mrs. Wonder, if left alone, would have sympathized more with her husband's aims, and fell more in his ways and views of life. With the best intentions in the world, Samantha rendered her brother miserable at times.

Job was well named. A more patient man did not live in Acorn County.

He was looking over some papers one wet day, when Samantha suddenly burst in upon him.

"Brother Job, I'll not have that girl about here."

"Hoity toity!" exclaimed Job, rising suddenly. "What ye flustered for, Samanthy?"

"I'm not flustered. You'd not be flustered if she was your hand."

"There you go agin, now. Fussin'—fussin' for a trifle."

"What do you call a trifle, Job? I told you from the first you had no business bringin' a girl from the poorhouse here. She's unbiddable, too."

"You'd orter to—to make some 'lowance for her."

"Allowances! Job Wonder, you talk like a—a——"

"Why don't you spit it out, Samanthy? An eejiot. Is that it?"

"You've said it."

"What's the gal done now?"

"I told her to boil a quart of rice."

"Well—go on."

"I was busy—so was Maria. Well—I was busy over the bedding, and a good while afterward I called to Joe to put on some cabbage, as the other girls were helping Maria with the peas and things. She asked me what she'd put the cabbage in. I said to put it in the pot. She said the pots were all full. 'That can't be,' says I. 'Nothing to put the cabbage in?' I called down. 'No,' says she; 'everything's full of rice.' Now, Job, what do you think that ignorant creature did? Instead of putting on enough rice to make a quart, she deliberately measured out a whole quart of rice and put it in the pot! Of course the rice swelled, and swelled, and swelled! She got out all the pans and put it in them, and got out the other pot—and it swelled and swelled!"

"There, there! Stop! You'll kill me!" said Job, putting his hands to his sides as he laughed until tears rolled down his cheeks.

Samantha bounced out of the room, angry with him, with his wife, with everybody and everything. Poor Joe was laughed at by the women folks for a week.

The next formal complaint was made by Mrs. Wonder.

"Will you listen to me, Job? You must take that girl away. After all the trouble I've been at to get my hair matched, didn't Joe take my new switch, that cost me eighteen dollars, plait it, and make a whip out of it to chase the cat with."

Job was consuming with inward laughter, but he did not dare to look at his wife.

"The gal's lively—full of ideas, that's all."

Another and greater grievance was poor Joe's tenacious hold upon her banjo and accordion. The farm-hands surprised her playing one day. If she had any spare time she hastened to the barn, and thummed her banjo and played the accordion.

I will explain here that these sole treasures were bequeathed to her by a poor wretch who died at Barnesville poorhouse—a man who in his time was a negro minstrel, but could not stand prosperity. He took to Joe from the first, and when he found his fingers had not wholly lost their cunning he taught her as he sadly picked up and played upon the instruments that had made his name famous.

Joe remembered—treasured up scraps of the songs he sang, and what she could not remember, she "pieced out," woman-like, with her own composition. She made parts of tunes. Anything more laughable or whimsical than Joe's performances on the banjo and accordion, wheezy, torn as it was, could scarcely be conceived. This was a sample of the extempore performances the farm hands enjoyed when they prevailed upon her to bring her banjo and accordion to the farmhouse, and play while they gathered around her in a wondering, admiring group.

Come day, go day,
Lord send Sunday;
Shake dat nigger out ob de grass,
Or he'll never see Monday.
Never see—never see Monday.

(With accordion—very dismal.)

O poor Lucy Ne-a-a-l,
O poor Lucy Ne-a-a-l,
If I had you by my side
How happy I would feel.

(With banjo—rapid.)

A little man came riding by,
Says I, "Ole man, your hoss will die."
"Well, if he dies I'll tan his skin,
An' if he lives I'll ride him agin."

(Very rapid):

I'll bet my money on de bobtail hoss,
Who'll bet on de bay-y-y?

As Joe entertained the group beside the farm door, she "worked hard" to borrow Job's language. Her feet, head and hands were in constant motion, showing, as Job Wonder said, a commendable resolution to "get there."

But Joe's accomplishments were not limited to the banjo and accordion. She was nimble-footed, and remembering some of the "steps" the negro minstrel taught her, she would dance and play the accordion. This was a treat to the farm hands, who sympathized with the girl, and who applauded her performances beyond their deserts.

Unnecessary to add that her dancing was Joe's crowning disgrace in Samantha's eyes. "It was an abomination." Samantha never could see what there was in Joe's "antics" to make her brother Job laugh.

In all probability Joe's life at the farm would have flowed on more evenly in time, but fate ordered that it was to be cut very short.

A young lady, bred in the city, a relative of Job's, visited the farmhouse in company with a young gentleman. A party was given in their honor to which many were invited. The company was so large that the dancing was confined to the clean swept barn floor. Foremost among those who helped to put the barn in order was Joe. She helped to bring in and arrange the evergreens, and for once displayed good taste in Samantha's judgment.

When the night came Joe was in her element. Contrary to all expectations, all the festivities after the supper was disposed of centered at the barn. The old-fashioned games were begun, and progressed merrily there. Old-fashioned dances were revived there. Joe, attired in a new calico dress, with her hair done up for the first time (it was usually in a tangle of curls), was among the spectators for a time until the needs of the merrymakers compelled them to press Joe into the dance. She was enjoying herself as she had never dreamed of enjoyment, when suddenly Miss Barkley exclaimed:

"I have lost my diamond ring."

The dance was interrupted. Speculation was rife as to the manner in which it had been lost. Miss Barkley's partner, a young farmer, suggested that the ring might have fallen between the boards composing the barn floor, which Job Wonder speedily demonstrated was impossible.

Samantha, too, said if the ring was really lost somebody must know where it was.

"Oh," said the owner of the ring, in visible distress, "say no more about it."

"But it is my duty to speak," said Samantha, looking at Joe.

"Don't say any more," said Job, appealingly, to his sister.

"I tell you the ring is stolen, brother Job. I must speak. What did you do with Miss Barkley's ring, Joe?"

Poor Joe looked at her accuser in amazement, then at the curious faces about her. Her own face was deadly pale now. She confronted Samantha with flashing eyes.

"How dare you say I stole it?"

"Do you deny you have it?" Samantha demanded angrily, looking down on her.

"I don't deny it. Why should I deny it any more than any other person here. Nobody else is denying it—why should I? You have no right to ask me if I saw the ring."

"The impudence of her," exclaimed Samantha. "I never did see such a bold, brassy creature. I will look in your pockets!"

"O pray—pray don't," said the owner of the ring.

But Samantha made a motion as if to execute her threat.

"If you do, I'll bite you," said Joe. "You shall not search me."

"Hear that, Brother Job?"

"Yes, I hear it. Yes, and you're making very little of yourself, Samanthy," said Job sharply.

"She shan't search me—I'll die first!" Joe reiterated.

She pushed those nearest her aside, and ran out of the barn, exclaiming: "She shan't search me—I won't stay to be called a thief!"

"Stop, Joe," said the farmer, running after her. "Stop! stop!"

But Joe was running toward the road, running with a fleetness that laughed pursuit to scorn. Even while the farmer stood shouting to her to return, she disappeared in the darkness of the night.

"O, do stop her—do!" said Miss Barkley; "I've found my ring in a fold in my dress."

It was true. Although a dozen men ran hither and thither searching her, not a trace of poor Joe could be found anywhere near the farmhouse.

Joe had vanished—vanished utterly.

"Must" and "Mustn't."

"A fellow can't have any fun," growled Tom. "It's just 'must' and 'mustn't' from morning till night. You must do this, you must learn that; or you mustn't go there, you must say that, and you mustn't do the other thing. At school you are just tied right up to the rules, at home—well a shake of mother's head means more than a dozen 'mustn't.' Seems a pity a boy can't have his own way half the time and do something as he likes."

"Going to the city, this morning, Tom?" asked Uncle Thed from the adjoining room.

"Why, of course," answered Tom, promptly.

"Going across the common."

"Yes sir; always do."

"I wish you'd notice those young trees they've been setting out the last year or two. There's something rather queer, it seems to me. Of course the old trees will die sooner or later, and others will be needed, but—well you must observe rather carefully, so as to describe their appearance, etc."

"What about those trees, Tom?" asked Uncle Thed after tea, as they sat on the piazza.

"Why, they're all right; looked a little cramped to be sure, snipped short off on top, and tied up to poles, snug as you please, every identical twig of them; but that's as it should be, to make them ship-shape—don't you see? They can't grow crooked if they would. They'll make as handsome trees as ever you saw one of these days. Haven't you noticed the trees in Mr. Benson's yard?—tall and scraggy and crooked, just because they were left to grow as they pleased. The city fathers now don't propose to run any risks——."

"But I wonder how the trees feel about the must and mustn't," remarked Uncle Thed, dryly.

Exit Tom, wishing he had not said quite so much on the subject of trees—and boys.—Sunday Afternoon.

MATTERS like the telegraph, telephone and electric light only come when the world is ready for them. In 1808 Sir Humphrey Davy produced electric light, but two generations have had to pass away before it could be improved and brought into general use. Faraday's discoveries made the application of electricity for this purpose not very difficult. Davy feared that the electric light would cost too much to ever come into general use, and even within twenty years so high an authority as Tyndall spoke doubtfully of distributing such a light from house to house. Davy's light was produced by a battery of two thousand voltaic cells, and was, of course, very costly. The incandescent light is quite a recent application of electricity. The improved dynamo has greatly reduced the cost of generating electricity, which has now become one of the world's indispensable forces, and half a dozen able thinkers and investigators have made it possible for a hundred ingenious men to devise mechanism and make applications of electricity to lighting human habitations, and important improvements upon existing processes are still foreshawowed.

POSSIBLY the rarest fern in the United States is Asplenium ebenoides. It was first found as a solitary plant along the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, forty years ago. About ten years ago a number were found by Miss Tutweiler at Huntsville, Ala. Recently S. L. Powell of Johns Hopkins University has found it in considerable abundance on Kulp's Hill, a part of the famous battlefield of Gettysburg. It was growing with Camptosorus rhizophbyllus and Polypodium vulgare, the former its usual companion.

A CABLEGRAM from London says that the metropolis is much exercised over "a dress-reform movement." The new dress, it is said, "consists of brevity of skirt, duality of underdress, and shortness of upper drapery." And this the London reformers call the "rational dress." This is not new. We have seen this garb in its scanty abundance in Central America, and have heard that it was sometimes seen upon the stage in variety theaters.

HUMOR.

This Summer.

He—Are you fond of tennis, Nellie?

She (brightening up)—Oh, yes! I—— (a long silence) are you fond of rowing, Jack?

He—Oh! yes. I think rowing awfully jolly! Don't you?

He—Oh! don't you? (Another painful silence.)

She—I think the woods and the lake just lovely, Jack. It reminds me of Wordsworth's poetry. Doesn't it make you think of it?

He—I never read Wordsworth, Nellie. Have you? Recite me some.

She—Oh, Jack, I couldn't! But don't you like poetry?

He—I dun know.

(Another silence that renders them both nervous.)

Both together—Don't you——

He—I beg pardon.

She—I beg pardon; what were you going to say?

He—Nothing. What were you going to say?

She—Nothing.

(A silence that can be felt.)

She—Oh, Jack, if it wasn't for papa, we could be so happy!

He—Well, what does he say?

She—Oh, Jack, he says—that is—he says you're a blockhead.

He—Oh! He does, does he—well, my mother says you are an impertinent little minx.

She—Oh, Jack!

He—Oh, Nellie!

(Both on the verge of tears).

He—But, Nellie, you know I love you all the same.

She—And Jack, you know I love you with all my heart.

He—Then let us marry, and it will be to late for them to interfere.

She (of the frugal mind)—But on what, Jack? You are in college yet and I have nothing.

He (bravely)—I have a stout heart and a strong right arm.

She (sotto voice)—Oh, beautiful! (Aloud) But that won't support us.

He—If my arm can't do it then, it may now. (Slips it around her waist).

She—Oh, Jack, don't please, don't.

He—No, I won't stop; as your affianced husband I am now going to take the first of many——

She—What do you mean?

He (kissing her)—Of these, dearest.

(And they were engaged).

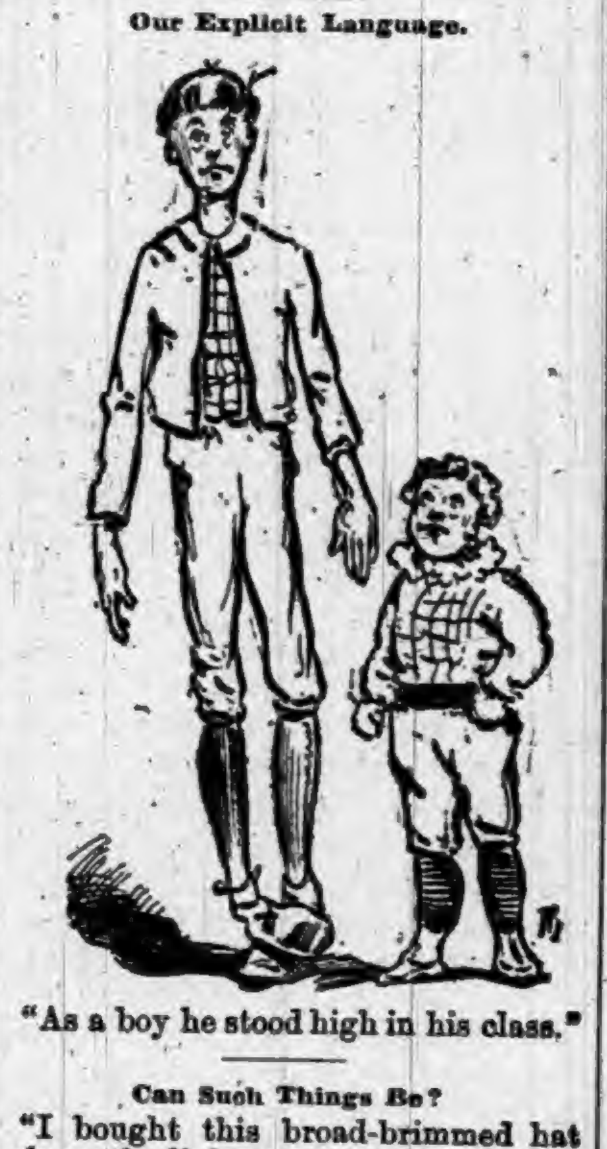
A Valuable Hand.

Fred—I am disappointed in you. It never occurred to me that you'd ask for the hand of Miss Giddyhead.

Joe—Why, there is a $10,000 diamond ring on that hand, old fellow.

Our Explicit Language.



"As a boy he stood high in his class."

Can Such Things Be?

"I bought this broad-brimmed hat to keep the light out of my eyes," she said, confidingly.

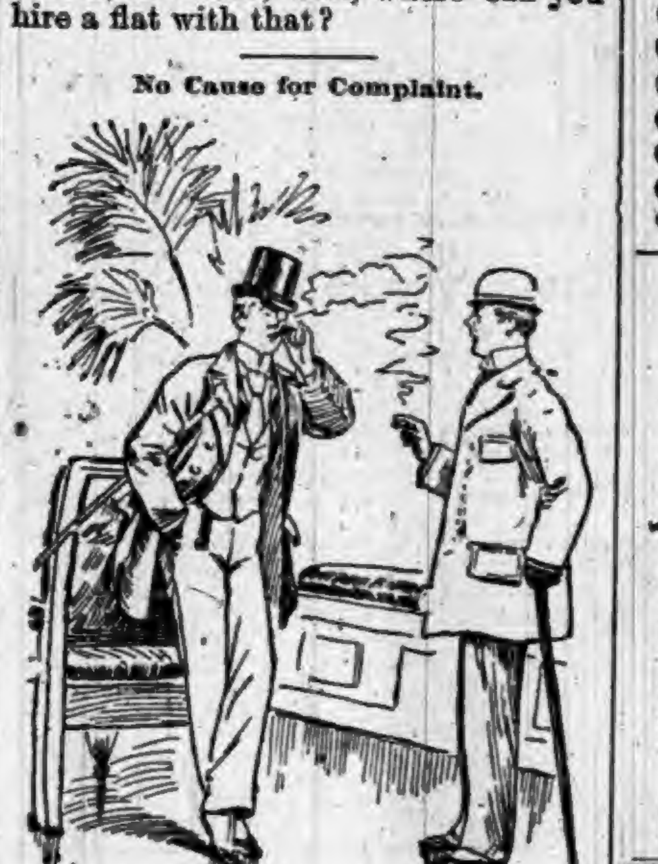
"Nothing can do that," he answered, gallantly, and the world revolved on its regular twenty-four-hour-a-day system just as usual.

The Vital Question.

Jacques—It may seem presumptuous for me to ask for your hand; I know that I am poor in money, but I am very rich in love.

Milicent—Yes; well, where can you hire a flat with that?

No Cause for Complaint.



"Ah, my dear boy! What made you withdraw from the club whist tournament?"

"Weally, old chappie; ther' was quite too much cheating going on, doncherknow."

Decisive Battles of the World.

Of modern battles the following were very important in their results: The victory of the Americans over Burgoyne at Saratoga, 1777; the battle of Valmy, 1792, in which an invading army of Prussians, Austrians and Hessians, under the command of the Duke of Brunswick, were defeated by the French under Dumouriez; the battle of Waterloo, 1815, in which the French, under Napoleon, were defeated by the allied armies of Russia, Austria, Prussia and England, under the Duke of Wellington; and the great naval battle of Trafalgar, on October 21, 1805, when the English under Lord Nelson defeated the French and Spanish. It destroyed the hopes of Napoleon as to a successful invasion of England. Lord Nelson was killed.

The greatest improvement in Corsets during the past twenty years is the use of Coraline in the place of horn or whalebone. It is used in all of Dr. Warner's Corsets and in no others.

The advantages of Coraline over horn or whalebone are that it does not become set like whalebone, and it is more flexible and more durable.

Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets are made in twenty-four different styles, fitting every variety of figures—thin, medium, stout, long waists and short waists.

THURSDAY............JULY 16, 1891.

BLAINE'S republican platform reads like this: Reciprocity with those with whom we trade but little, but no intercourse with the ones where we trade most.

MORE gold in Indiana. This time the report comes up from Morgan county that several farmers have picked up small pieces of the metal and and sold to jewelers. Everybody excited.

JAMES B. RYAN, died at his home in Indianapolis Friday. He was elected state treasurer on the democratic ticket in 1870. But was defeated for same office 1866, 1868 and 1872. He was born in Ireland.

A YOUNG couple were married in Newark, Conn., last week and started off on their wedding trip on bicycles. Both are skillful riders and will take in Chicago and northwestern towns before they get home which will be some time this fall.

BAPTISTS have organized a society called the "Baptist Young People's Union of America." It is intended to be for that church what the "Epworth League" is for the Methodists, or the "Christian Endeavor" for the Presbyterians.

THE Press asks if democrats have forgotten the best law passed by the Cleveland administration. We have not forgotten, but the present republican administration appears to have forgotten as it don't enforce the law. More immigrants have come over this year than last.

DEMOCRATS have reason to be proud of their legislature. When Gov. Hovey wanted them to put the state tax levy up to 25 cents, the members said 18 cents was enough, and so cut the governor's figures down one quarter. The people can see which party is careful of their interests.

THE Dispatch tried to deceive its readers last week, when it gave the assessment laws of 1889 and 1891, side by side. The point was to prove that the law of '91 did not lay as heavy a tax on corporations as that of '89. The two laws as quoted, had the important parts left out. Notice where the Dispatch has lines of stars. Had the entire laws been quoted, the great diffence in favor of the law of '91 would be plain. Where the stars are in the law of '89, it says there shall be collected 2 per cent on all the earnings of the corporations named, but only on such business as starts and also ends, in the state of Indiana. In the new law, that of '91, there is only 1 per cent collected on the earnings of these corporations, but this includes all earnings, inside the state and out. Take a sleeping car company, or telegraph or express, and it is plain that nearly all their business reaches beyond the state, going to Chicago, Toledo, Detroit, etc. Under the law of '89, none of them would pay a cent, nothing except the small amount that began and ended in the state. A tax of 1 per cent under the new law, will produce much more than 2 per cent under the old. Was the Dispatch ignorant? Did it take its article from another republican paper, without knowing it to be false, or why did it leave out those important points in both laws and put stars in to fill up?

Pension Agent Ensley, of the Indiana district, has completed his report of the business for the year ending July 1. There are now on the rolls of this office 57,513 pensioners, an increase of 7,317 during the year. Of these 7,317 names, 2,023 have been added during the last month. During the year $10,621,948.52 was distributed by the Indiana agency. —Exchange.

ILLINOIS has adopted a new election law that is almost a copy of our own. Ohio has enacted a school book law that is a close copy of ours. Several states are fighting to get an assessment law something like ours. Indiana democratic legislatures seem to have struck a popular line of reforms. The democracy is the great reform party of the year.

WE imported during the month of March just past, 23 bushels of foreign corn, mainly for seed of course, and the duty was added to the original price making it cost the farmer who bought it, that much more. That is the way a farmer is "protected." But during the same month, we sent abroad three million bushels of corn. And republicans say we must protect the farmer against the great influx of foreign corn—23 bushels. The vast amount of wheat, corn etc., we still send abroad proves that the tariff has not created a "home market" for us. It never can. All a tariff can do is to make the rich man, who is situated just right, that much richer, and make the consumer so much poorer, by making him pay higher.

THE Record still claims that foreigners pay the tariff. It seems almost a miracle that a man in this country of free schools would claim such a thing. Yet that is a sort of general idea in the party the Record represents. Does he think there are U. S. custom houses over in the old country, at which these duties can be paid? Or does he think there are custom houses on the ocean? If not in one of these two places, then they are in this country. Suppose the duty on a given lot of goods is $10. Does the foreigner send over $10 to pay this? No, the importer pays it, and then adds this duty to the cost, and then puts a profit on cost, duty and all, and sells it. And the consumer pays it all. Now let the Record take this same transaction and show our statement th be wrong. The COURIER has not "ignored" any feature of the tariff, but has shown the transactions exactly as they are. Again we ask how could the "foreigner pay the duty" on some articles where it is equal to or more than the article is worth? Would he send over $2 to pay the duty on an article that would bring him but $1. In the statement we made from McKinley, he had actually added the tariff to the cost, just any man would who knows what he is talking about.

NORTH OF PUBLIC SQUARE.

An Old Settler.

We were agreeably surprised Friday by a visit from Samuel W. Dickinson, of Branch county, Mich. He used to live here, having come to this county from Portage county, Ohio, in 1847. He was married at R J. Dawson's in Spencerville, June 20, 1853, having got his license from J. P. Widney, when he was county clerk. He remembers most of the early inhabitants of Auburn. He is the person spoken of in our last issue, in the old settlers' chapter, as having bought a daguerreotype outfit of Phillip Grube. Mr. Dickinson taught school here one summer and remembers A. J. and G. C. Ralston and many others. as among his scholars. He thinks the old school house is still standing on North Main street. He helped to raise the frame of the old M. E. church that has lately been moved, and recalls a feat of strength, when he and Dr. Ford, then active young men, lifted one end of a big sill by putting a handspike under it. each lifting on his end of the spike. He afterwards taught school at what is now the Walsworth district and later taught several terms at Orangeville and Newville. He got $11 a month and collected his pay by a rate bill. Quite an idea for the teachers of to-day. He also taught singing school here and elsewhere. He was for a short time deputy of Sheriff S. W. Ralston during the latter's first term, as Mrs. R. had been thrown from the buggy, and hurt, and her husband had to wait on her. He remembers that his brother, T. R. Dickinson at one time locked the 24 grand jurors up in the old jail for a joke, and when he, S. W, found it out, he liberated them, and mistaking him for their tormentor, they came near using him roughly, as he might have deserved. It was the custom then for judge and lawyers to go on a spree when court closed, and they often had lively times. Mr. Dickinson, Ed. Fosdick of Butler, and a man from Richland township a preacher of the Lutheran church, whose name he has forgotten, were the first board of school examiners in DeKalb county. They held the first examination ever held in this county, at the office of his brother on South Main street. He also planted a part of the present big maple trees in front of the residence, the present elegant home of Edward Eldridge. Mr. Dickinson took a part of one of the earliest assessments of the county his work being in Richland, Fairfield, Jackson and Butler townships, which would also include the present township of Keyser. The father of C. K. Baxter, late of Waterloo, was then county assessor. He says the present assessors don't have such a mean job, for then they had a new law that compelled a man to give to the assessor the number of his chickens, itemize his household goods, etc. It was a tedious thing to do. He remembers Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Berry, who started the first paper, the "Democratic Messenger." Mr. D's nephew, T. Y. Dickinson worked in this office, now and then, as he felt like it, and became quite a good typesetter. But the first one to really learn the trade at the office, was the late Joseph C. Loveland. He recalls one of the tricks the someone played on Joe, as printers often do on beginners. They gave Joe a dime to go up to the store near the Auburn House, and "get a pint of editorial." At the store, he was told to go to the saloon. At last Joe saw through the trick, and laid out the dime in beer. C. K. Baxter was the next apprentice in the office. And so we might go on. He has a fund of early reminiscences, though like many others, his memory is not so clear as it used to be. Like the late John Butt and F. E. Davenport, he can trace his family name back to the conquest of England by the Normans, their name then being "DeKuyson." We might add that he helped clear and burn off the logs on the public square.

Notice to Contractors.

Notice is hereby given that I will receive sealed bids for the construction of two brick school houses, one in District No. 5, also one in District No. 3, in Franklin township, up to

at 10 o'clock, a. m. Plans and specifications can be seen by calling on me at my office in my residence in said township. I reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

Notice to Bridge Contractors.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb county, Ind., at the Auditor's office, in said county, until 2 o'clock, p. m., of

for the erection a bridge across the St. Joe river in Stafford township, called the Webster bridge. Span of bridge 150 feet, roadway 16 feet. Contractor has to furnish plans and specifications with bids.

Bidders for the erection of the new bridge to also make a proposal for the old one, and take it down themselves.

Also at the same time bids will be received for a stone abutment for above named bridge, according to plans and specifications on file in the Auditor's office of said county.

A certified check for five hundred dollars, or good and sufficient bond, to have two sureties residing in the County, to be approved by the board of commissioners must accompany each bid, as a guarantee that the bidder will enter into contract within five days if the contract is awarded him. On entering into contract, good and sufficient security according to law will be required.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids

OF INTEREST TO PENSIONERS.

Instructions as to the Manner of Proceeding.

Pension Agent Ensley has issued the following circular with the request that it be copied by all county papers in the state:

The attention of pensioners on the rolls of the Indianapolis agency is called to the fact that by an act of congress under the date of March 3, 1891, all pension agencies are now arranged in three groups, thereby making a payment each month by six agencies—the Indianapolis agency being in the second group. The regular time of paying pensions has been changed from the 4th of March, June, September and December of each year to the 4th of February, May, August and November, respectively; said change taking effect August 4, 1891, making a payment covering a period of two (2) months, and thereafter payments will be quarterly, viz.: Nov. 4, Feb. 4, May 4, etc. With your check for payment of pension due June 4, 1891, was enclosed a voucher covering a period of two months, viz.: from the 4th of June, to the 4th of August. Pensioners are requested to execute said vouchers promptly on Aug. 4 and return for payment. It is very desirable that all vouchers be executed promptly on the 4th of each regular pay-month and forwarded for payment, thereby enabling the agency to expedite the necessary work incident to the payment of pensions. All properly executed vouchers received at the Indianapolis agency receive prompt attention and are paid with promptness and dispatch.

In this connection the pensioners' attention is called to the fact if they will examine their vouchers before forwarding to the agency and see that said vouchers are properly executed, viz: Pensioner's signature (letter for letter as it is written in pension certificate) appearing in three (3) places as designated on voucher, postoffice address to which pensioner desires his check sent, both in body of voucher and on back of bottom receipt; frequently the officer before whom the voucher is executed writes in his own postoffice address instead of the pensioner's; that the jurat is properly filled giving state and county, date of execution (being very careful to not execute a voucher before due) and that the officer before whom the voucher is executed has properly signed said jurat and fixed his seal to same, provided said officer's official position requires a seal to legalize his official acts. A pensioner who signs his voucher by making his mark, must have a witness who can write, attest each signature so signed. Pensioners following this practice of thoroughly examining their vouchers and seeing that they are properly executed before forwarding for payment, will find that many annoying and vexatious delays will be avoided and will always receive their checks promptly. Each quarter a great number of vouchers are necessarily returned for correction for such causes as signature by mark and no attesting witness, signatures by initial or abbreviated, date of execution not given or executed prior to date the same are due, officers failing to sign or giving their official character and failing to affix seal to the voucher; such being the case all improperly executed vouchers are necessarily returned for correction, consequently there is a great delay in the receipt of checks by a number of pensioners.

And further, pensioners should see that their vouchers when properly executed are forwarded to the agency from which they draw their pension. Each quarter a number of vouchers are received at this agency which should go to some other agency. All such vouchers are promptly forwarded to their proper destination. Thus a number of vouchers are delayed in reaching their proper agency.

The attention of pensioners classified as widows, mothers, minors and those under guardianship, is called to the fact that in addition to the above cited requirements "The Deposition of Witnesses" requires special attention, viz.: Two (2) witnesses who know the pensioners and that they are the persons represented in said voucher, and if such witness sign by mark, some competent witness who can write must attest said signature. A magistrate before whom a voucher is executed is not competent to appear as a witness to said deposition. In cases of widows having minor children and minors under guardianship, the name as given in pension certificate, of each child must appear in said deposition. Also the date to which payment is claimed, and in case of the death of a child or ceasing on account of limitation, such facts should be plainly stated and in such a manner that the fact would be easily ascertained. In all guardianship cases the name of such guardian and pensioner must appear in said deposition. Pensioners will kindly call the attention of magistrates before whom they have their vouchers executed, to the foregoing instructions and preserve them for future reference. NICHOLAS ENSLEY,
U. S. Pension Agent.

Persian Sherbet, Ginger Ale and Root Beer.

Directions to make—Disolve one package of any of the above extracts, and one pound of sugar in a gallon of water. This makes a delightful drink that is healthy, invigorating and refreshing. Wood & Co., of Madison, Ind., are the manufacturers' exclusive agents, and they will send a package of any one of the above extracts by mail, post paid for 35 cents or three for $1.00. The purity of these extracts and their extraordinary medicinal properties for general debility are acknowledged by the medical faculty; just the thing to sell at public gatherings and for confectioners.

Buttermilk for Freckles.

There is nothing that equals fresh buttermilk for removing tan, freckles, sunburn or moth spots, says The Ladies' Home Journal. It has the great advantage that it does not injure the skin, but renders it soft, like a little child's. Take a soft cloth or sponge and bathe the face, neck and arms thoroughly with buttermilk before retiring for the night; then wipe off the drops lightly. In the morning wash it thoroughly and wipe dry with a crash towel. Two or three such baths will take off all the tan and freckles. It will keep the hands soft and smooth.

ALAS!

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? Of course; but at the same time feel assured that in a measure he is to blame for the bad state into which he has fallen. A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. No mercury or deleterious drugs, not unpleasant to the taste, and always reliable—just such a remedy as you can pin your faith to without a shadow of disappointment. Read the testimonial, don't take our word for it:

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel, which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator, which gave me relief, without any interruption to business." J. HUGG, Middleport, Ohio.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of an execution to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Isaac Ochs is plaintiff, and Daniel Firestone is defendant, requiring me to make the sum of Eleven Hundred Forty-three dollars and Forty-three cents, with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

The undivided one-tenth (1-10) part of the east half of the northeast quarter of section twenty-two (22), the south half of the north west quarter of section (23) and the west thirty-two and one half (32½) acres of the north half of the northwest quarter of said section twenty-three (23) all in township thirty-five (35) north of range fourteen [14] east, situate in DeKalb County in the state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

At this season of the year, man is striving for all the comfort he can secure as a result of the least possible exertion. Don't jump up from your easy chair on the piazza and run down town after a cigar, but exercise discretion by taking a box of the Bill Head brand home, so that you have the best brand on the market close at hand.

Jane Gill, a lady representing the International Tract Society, of Indianapolis, is at present canvassing this vicinity for a book entitled "Bible Readings for the Home Circle." The work is a meritorious one, and should be read in every household, as it answers nearly three thousand questions on religious topics, practical, historical and prophetical.

Purchase your carpets and furniture where you can have the handsomest and largest stock to select from. A stylish design in the one, or a nobby feature in the other, costs nothing, but will be a matter of a good deal of pleasure to you and your friends. Northern Indiana has no other such place at which to make your selections as at the Foster Furniture Co., at Fort Wayne, Ind.

Boys in the habit of destroying birds' nests and eggs, should know that this practice is illegal, and that they can be severely punished for it. A law passed by the last legislature puts the fine at not less than $2 nor more than $50 and imprisonment may be added. English sparrows, crows, hawks and game birds are not included in this list. The intent of the law is to protect our common harmless birds, and the law should be observed. We hope every boy will make a note of this.

We received last week from Geo. P. Ball, now at St. Petersburg, Florida, late copies of the "South Florida Home" published at that place. It has much interesting news as to the country down there, its prospects, etc. There is also a map showing the town and its location which is on one part of Tampa Bay, and not far from Port Tampa, on the same body of water. Our readers will remember a letter from Mrs. Ball, written soon after she had gone there to join her husband. The papers speak in glowing terms of the country.

It perhaps will please some of our readers to know that the Reading Room has been a comparative success the past year. The number of books taken from December 8, to July 8, 1881, is 1,189. Of the number, 277 were of fact, and 912 of fiction. This goes to show that our people are beginning to realize the value of this institution, as it affords an opportunity to become conversant upon the leading topics of the day, through the distributive powers of the press. It is said that among the earnest and constant patrons of this fountain of literature, Mr. W. H. Bacher is entitled to highest honors. He is a great reader and seems inclined to read only books of the best quality.

The Presbyterian bug put in an appearance at the church Sunday evening, a little belated it is true, but with all his old instincts fresh upon him. Of course he went for the choir, but things were turned around, and that seemed to confuse him. Tom Scott he expected to find at the north end of the line, and the presence of George Allen there, broke him all up. So did the new organ. He hunted for the old one, and rested wearily against it awhile, then over the audience till he found Sadie Yesbera whom he had evidently missed from the choir. George Wittmer batted him out, but he recovered. Scott's familiar bald spot he missed, so he struck for the bright new reflectors of the electric lights, and nestled down on one of them as the next shiniest place. But the old, cherished landmarks had evidently passed away, and with a melancholy, droning hum he passed off and out into the dark night.

Ladies, the newest washer is the new swing washer patented by W. L. Messe, Auburn. Buy the best and save all the hard work you can.

Misses Lydia and Ina Ensley came up to Auburn Saturday and Lulu Stonebraker and Lillie Garrett accompanied them home to visit over Sunday.

Rev. Croy, will preach at the Church of God, Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon. In the evening there will be a talk to the people by Mrs. Croy.

All who have tried it agree that the new swing washer is the best, the easiest and does the best work. Wait till the inventor, W. L. Meese comes along, and then try one.

Now, that we are in the midst of the heated term, the congregations at the different churches are not so large as might be expected, especially at the morning services.

Mr. Samuel Mather, of Cleveland, has given $75,000 to the Woman's College of Western Reserve University at Cleveland. This college and whole university are rapidly growing.

Mrs. J. R. Moody has gone to visit her son at Leadville, Colorado. Mrs. Fair went west with her and will visit Lee Goetschius and wife at Sheridan, Montana. The Courier wishes a pleasant journey for both ladies.

Shaffer & Berg are the men to make you a valuable wagon. Every part of the work is done on honor. They live here, and their wagons are used here and they are not afraid to see one of their make go by with a heavy load.

We were a little wrong in our report of the Garrett races. The money was divided between Mr. Moody's horse and W. J. Wallace's, There was some disagreement over the matter, as to which was entitled, and it was settled in this way.

R. I. McClellan, a student from Colegate College, is in the city for a few days recreation. He has occupied the pulpit at the Baptist church while here. He seems to be a genial young man and we hope to develop a better acquaintance with him.

C. F. Wood and wife of Tiffin came down Saturday, the guests of Mrs. Wood's people, the family of George Steele. Charley says Auburn is the prettiest town he knows of, and still getting better. He has a position in the B. & O. office at Tiffin.

Plain Sewing: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Ed. Eldridge falls into the line of improvement in the matter of having a new cement sidewalk in front of his residence on South Main street. The town is also putting down a crossing on the south of the same material. Auburn's enterprise is still going on. Jno. Treesh, artist.

An epidemic of marriages usually prevails at this season of the year. We want all stricken with this epidemic to remember they can purchase their outfit of carpets and furniture at marvelously low prices at Foster's Fort Wayne, Ind. Bills amounting to $25 or more will be shipped to you free of charge.

A. Lewis' lumber building now shows a big front richly adorned with great black letters, which proclaim to the public just what this popular firm has to sell. The stock-in-trade is clearly depicted in "black and white," and a perusal will keep you well posted as to where to buy the best lumber, lath shingles, mouldings, casings, etc. Steele and Cass were the artists.

Our young friend Ira Bone, late of Concord township, was united in the bonds of matrimony to Mrs. Diadem Keeler, of the same place, at the residence of the groom's mother, Mrs. Lucetta A. Bone, on North Jackson street, July 4, 1891. The best wishes of the Courier go with the newly married couple, and as they live through the remaining years of life, may each successive Independance Day bring to them a more glorious celebration. They have settled down and will live in Auburn, thus adding interest and population to our bright little city,

WINE OF CARDUI, a Tonic for Women.

Town lots for sale. See our notice.

Nothing like the new swing washer.

The swing washer has proved a great success.

All kinds of window draperies at Foster's Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mrs. Dr. Miller, of Goshen, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Harter at present.

Mrs. Leasure came home last week after an extended visit with her people at Greensburg, Ind.

Mrs. Hare and daughters, Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Yesbera have gone to Lakeside for a season.

Mrs. A. J. and Mrs. Geo. Stout, of Hamilton, were visiting the family of C. P. Houser, last week.

Mrs. A. B. Richards and daughter Delia, went to Kendallville Tuesday to call on Mr. Lamport's family.

Levi Rice has moved into his new residence west of his gallery, and begins to feel at home. They will have a fine residence.

Wanted! Wanted!! Wanted!!! at the Auburn Woolen Mills, all the wool we can get. Highest market price, don't forget it. 19tf

Dr. Buchtel has a new driving horse in place of the one he lost recently. It is evidently a fine goer, and came from the Haw Patch.

The Y. L. M. C., will meet in the basement of the church, Thursday evening, July 16. Tea served at 6:30. Please note the change of evening.

Walter Hartman started yesterday for Montgomery county to work for the Western Publishing Company. He expects to be there for some time.

Prof. M. Seiler of Terre Haute Normal School was here one day this week. He was on his way to attend the National teacher's convention at Toronto.

Mrs. Morse, of Angola, and her daughter Lela, are visiting relatives in this place. They bring word that C. H. Jackson and family move into their new house this week.

E. R. Shoemaker was here yesterday in company with his son-in-law Mr. Frank Dills of Jackson, Mich. They seemed to be talking buggy, at Kiblinger's big factory.

Piano for Sale: A good square piano in good condition and on reasonable terms. Inquire of Dr. S. B. Johnston at his residence or dental office on North Main street, Auburn.

At odd hours, be thinking of something to take to the fair. Let us make the display bigger and better in every way than it was last year. This can only be done by individual effort and attention.

Warren Silberg of Spencerville, came up to Auburn last Friday to have Dr. Nusbaum treat his injured leg. It was broken last December, and for some cause, does not seem to knit together as it should.

The M. E. ladies of the north section are preparing to give a lawn social at Dr. Ford's Friday evening to which all are invited. Don't fail to come as they will give you a grand supper for 15 cents. Ice cream 10 cts. extra. Supper from 5 to 8.

The attractions of a trip to Mackinac Island via the Detroit & Cleveland Steam Navigation Co., are unsurpassed. It only costs about $13.00 from Detroit, or $18.00 from Cleveland, for the round trip, including meals and berths.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

Rev. J. W. Stringfellow delivered an able and eloquent discourse to a large and very appreciative audience at the Church of God, Sunday evening. He is now busy in church work, having Syracuse, Mt. Tabor, Garrett and Auburn, as his appointed field of labor.

The creamery project is gaining ground and at least half the money needed has been subscribed. This entitles the company to send a committee to points where these creameries are in operation, to see how they are working. Our committee stands: C. C. Shaffer, Cal. Husselman and C. C. Buss.

The entire system of cement walks at the new M. E. Church, and the parsonage, has been completed, and Mr. Treesh has given them a fine job. The slopes have been sodded, and all that remains now is to do the parking along both rows of trees on each street. Then, with the rubbish removed the great task is done.

Now, that the time of year is fast approaching, when fruits, berries' jellies, jams, etc., are to be canned up and set away for winter use, people may begin to wonder where and at what price they are going to get the necessary jars. If, while in town, you go to Beuret's, you will find fruit jars in abundance, with prices to suit the times.

Young men, who are in the habit of smoking in the presence of ladies should not disgust the feminine nasal sensibilities by puffing away at two-for, cabbage leaf, make shift imitation cigars, but arise, at once, to the dignity of nature's noblemen and smoke the Young America, whose fragrant "fume, fumare, fumus," and lasting qualities are pleasing to the delicate and refined tastes of ladies.

The Farmers Alliance will give a harvest picnic in Solomon Olinger's grove 2 miles north and 1 mile east of Garrett, July 25. They have arranged an excellent program to which all are invited. Among those who will speak we notice the name of State Lecturer Ham. The music will be furnished by the Garrett band and Maple Grove Glee Club. A good warm meal can be had on the grounds for 15c.

Court re-convenes next Monday, July 20. The case set for that day promises to be a very interesting and rather difficult and noted one. It is the outcome of the trouble at Edgerton some time ago in which J. H. Aldrich was injured in a difficulty about some horses. Mr. Hubbard the well known horse dealer is one of the parties, and the suit will have many interesting features. The horses, nine in number, were kept at Butler for some time, but are now here, Of course, their board, all this time has made a big expense, and this will figure in the case also. The plaintiffs will be represented by W. L. Penfield and Judge McClellan of this place, and Judge Charles Bowersox of Bryan. The defense will have Judge Allen Zollars of Ft. Wayne, and McElree's WINE OF CARDUI for female diseases.

Dr. Broughton and Ab. Kelley of Waterloo, were in town Tuesday. Not of the same political faith but great friends.

Mr. J. J. Zent who returned last spring from South America, has gone to Mankato, Dakota, on business for his House.

Mrs. James Campbell, who was up to Walkerton, about a week ago, brings word that the huckleberry crop will be very light this year.

Trustees Whetsel of Franklin, and Crooks of Butler, were here yesterday. The former will put up two new school houses. See notice.

Miss Bessie Klotz, daughter of Chas. Klotz, is visiting friends here, and will remain two or three weeks. Their home is at Van Wert, Ohio.

G. W. Stahl's residence and office on South Jackson street, assume a very attractive appearance as a result of being re-painted a short time since.

R. W. Cobb had the neat iron fence around his beautiful South Side residence, painted up in artistic style last week. George Quince manipulated the brush.

Samuel Lung, of Cedar Creek, called Tuesday, and made a brief but pleasant visit. He one of the Courier's substantial friends and left something to expand the editor's till.

Dr. Shook at Spencerville thinks the News might have given him a little credit for the work done in the operation on the late Mr. Metcalf, as we are told he did the main work.

A recent visit to Waterloo, showed us many improvements, especially in dwellings, lawns etc. And the marshal, too, should have a share of the praise for neat looking streets.

When you pass by, just step in and purchase a box of the K. & B. brand of cigars. They are so fresh, so fragrant and fair, that all partake of gladness wherever they are.

Geo. Grund and Emmet Paffner took a squirrel hunt Monday afternoon. Result, sixteen red, and one fox squirrel. They would have killed one more, but there is luck in odd numbers.

Bro. Weamer of the Bristol Banner was in town this week. He has fully recovered from the poetical attack occasioned by the South Bend meeting, and ranks with the rest of the Hoosier poets.

We have on our table a copy of the Columbian Exposition News, a periodical gotten up as an advertising medium for the World's Fair in 1893, which also gives a prominent notice to the business houses of Auburn.

Lagrange Standard; Marion county furnishes the first tax dodger, a rich old codger who lied about his personal property. He was fined fifty dollars as an example to his kind. Tax-dodging isn't a safe pursuit nowadays.

A. J. Ralston sold 440 quarts of raspberries Tuesday. He has been averaging over 300 quarts a day for some time. When we consider that Hebel, Garrett and perhaps other grocers have sold large quantities, it will be seen that small fruit has been popular in Auburn.

Two of our good friends E. Berry and S. Z. Dickinson last week, thought of the dull season, and how hard it was for the printers to get through harvest time, and helped us out by liberal cash. We also have the same sort of thanks for S. H. Long of Keyser. We'll try and give them all the worth of their money.

City government as contemplated in Kendallville's arrangements for this year, will cost them $1,600. This is the regular pay they propose to give the mayor, councilmen, marshal, clerk, treasurer, attorney and secretary of Board of Health. This is at least $500 more than it costs Auburn for a town government. Kendallville's valuation as shown by the assessor, is $1,544,817.

John Kruger has filled up the new brick room with groceries and is going to do a rushing business there. He has a large, cool, dry cellar which will be of great service, he has electric lights, with an extra globe out in front, making his rooms and the street in front equally light. Inside all is neat and roomy, new goods, cash sales only and consequently cheaper prices. He asks customers to call and see for themselves.

It is laughable to see so many of our exchanges copying that story about a man being killed on Syracuse Lake in 1863. They claim a letter from the murderer was recently picked up, having been kept all this while in a bottle. The pretended letter is dated at Viola postoffice which was not in existence till about 1880. But there is no telling what editors will accept, after swallowing the Garrett Bologna's "bottomless lake" and similar ghost stories.

Auditor Coffinberry was up to Chicago over Sunday, and went over while there, to look at the new suburban town of Franklin, they are booming so at present. He says it is growing to be a fine town, hundreds of lots having been already sold, and many buildings going up, some very fine ones. Mr. Coffinberry met there, Mr. Scott Blain and wife, of Chicago, who have already bought seven lots in the new city, and who could now double their investment by selling.

H. M. Showalter, who resides north of Butler, and his father, were here Tuesday. The former came over to buy an ocean steamer ticket of our agents, Rickel & Sprott. He goes to Scotland, more particularly, as he will invest in some more Clydesdale horses. In fact he will bring home quite a number of these valuable animals. He hopes to get home in time for the fairs. After the fairs are over, he may take them to the Pacific coast, in Oregon. We hope he may have a safe journey across the great water.

That New Paper.

We see that our remarks about the new paper to be published at Waterloo, have caused some ill feeling. Certainly not among those who have at heart the good of the democratic party, nor of those who care for the community whose pockets must bleed without cause to support the new paper, nor among those even, who have at heart the best interests of the parties who expect to publish the paper. No business man can see anything but financial disaster in such a venture. No democrat can see anything but additional weakness, and divisions. A few dissatisfied democrats and republicans cannot and will not support any paper. They may get it started, but they will not stand by it. Some say "The Courier is afraid of losing business." But that is too small a matter. The Courier is too well established to lose much. It is the people that will lose and the party be weakened. The Courier has worked faithfully for the party's good, as no other paper in the county has, and has often sacrificed its own personal wishes and financial interests for the sake of peace and party success. But it claims the liberty to take care of itself. The Courier has gone on increasing its circulation and other business steadily, in spite of all efforts to cut in on it, and will no doubt go on in this way. And in any event, neither loss of business, nor any other consideration will keep us from sounding a note of warning to the democrats of this county, that as they value future success, they should let this wild venture severely alone.

Obituary.

Mrs. C. H. Sailer died July 3rd, after a brief illness of typhoid pneumonia. She was buried at her old home near Bryan, Ohio, Monday, July 6. They had been married about 8 years, her age being 28 years, 8 months and 16 days. She leaves a husband and three children to mourn her early death. She was a member of the Lutheran church here and by all will be greatly missed. She was a kind wife and loving mother, and husband and children have the deepest sympathy of all.

"Beautiful toiler, thy work all done,
Beautiful soul into glory gone,
Beautiful life, with its crown now worn,
God giveth thee rest.
Rest from all sorrows, and watching and fears,
Rest from all possible sighing and tears,
Rest through God's endless, wonderful years,
At home with the blest.

It was so sudden, our white lips said,
How we shall miss her, the beautiful dead,
Who take the place of the precious one fled;
But God knoweth best.
We know he watches the sparrows that fall,
Hears the sad cry of the grieved hearts that fall.
Friends, husband, children, he loveth them all,
We can trust for the rest."

In Memoriam.

Head quarters DeLong post No. 67.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst comrade Wm. Clark, therefore

Resolved: That we cherish in kind recollections his many virtues and acts of kindness as were shown in his daily life.

Resolved: That in his death the post has lost one of its most earnest and best workers, and that we extend to the family the principles of our order, fraternity, charity and loyality.

Resolved: That we fully realize how feeble are our words of consolatian to the family, we wish to express ourselves as recognizing their affliction, and as comrades reverently bow in sorrow, knowing that they as well as ourselves reverence his memory.

Resolved: That the Post tender our heartfelt sympathy to the family and relatives, and offer our condolence.

Resolved: That the charter be draped in mourning for 30 days, that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the post and be published in the papers.

Corked Up.

This sounds like slang, but it was a matter of dead earnest to little Jay Nusbaum. Friday afternoon, he was playing with some lads, and boy-like, among other things, began chewing at a cork. He managed to bite it in two, when one part flew into his wind pipe, and he was literally "corked up." Of course, he was frightened, and his father made desperate efforts to get the cork out, but with all his skill as a surgeon, it could not be done. Probably the lack of the proper instruments was the greatest trouble. So, he bundled the lad into a buggy, drove over to Avilla, and took the first train south, and went to Cincinnati, where a friend of his, who had been a classmate at the medical college, was in practice as a specialist. The boy could breathe fairly well, although the whistling of the air in his throat was plain. But before he got there, it began to be painful. However, the doctor to whom they went, got it out with little trouble, and the boy came home all right. Now he don't like corks as a steady diet.

THE New York Sun, which is very critical in regard to the use of language, and generally very correct, says: "Various comments are made by various varieties of the press." If a wild Western paper were to speak of "various varieties of the press" the Sun would be pretty sure to have something to say about it. The Sun ought to shine for all alike and not stand in its own light.

AN East Indian Prince has recently had a bed made for him in Paris, the matress of which is a huge music box. In view of the fact that an East Indian Prince never knows when the throne is going to be yanked out from under him and he be reduced to beggary, it is wise forethought for such a man to provide himself while he may with the means wherewith to garner in the pennies of the charitable farers upon the highway.

THE late Count von Moltke was once asked to name the books which exercised the greatest influence upon his life. In reply he mentioned the following: The Bible, Homer's "Iliad," Littrou's "Wonder's of the Heavens," Liebig's "Letter on Chemistry," and Clausewitz' "On War." The works of Schiller, Goethe, Shakspeare, Walter Scott, Ranke, Carlysle and he gave as those which he never tired of reading. The "Iliad," in translation, he read when 9 years old.

THE German Kaiser's good horsemanship leads him to demand most dangerous manœuvres from his officers. While in Bonn other day he suddenly ordered the officers' corpse of hussars to ride at full gallop to where he was standing and to halt in line. A young lieutenant lost control over his animal as he was checking him immediately in front of his majesty and was thrown. He fell, sword in hand, almost under the feet of the kaiser's horse, and only by a hair's breadth missed piercing the body of the imperial charger his majesty was riding.

IN order to economize expenses the Italian Government has decided not to take an official part in the Chicago World's Fair, and has also withdrawn the offer of Government aid to the proposed Columbian celebration at Genoa. There can be no doubt of the urgent necessity of economy on the part of the Italian Government. Perhaps it would aid the country in getting out of debt if it would put a stop to Italian emigration to the United States. If it would help Italy any to keep her people at home this country would try and get along without them.

SCHWEINFURTH, the self-alleged Christ, is very angry about the way he was treated in Kansas City. He says: "Kansas City can ill afford to incur my anger. It is for what they hoped to do that I will send the floods from Heaven to harrass and overwhelm them. There shall be weeping and wailing in Kansas City because of the insults offered the perfect man." This alone stamps Schweinfurth as a blasphemous fraud. The man whom he thinks he apes was also insulted, and when his disciples wanted to call down fire from Heaven and consume the insulters he rebuked their spirit.

GEN. GRANT, in that new Galena statue, stands with one hand in his pocket. This fact brings out the following story: On one occasion about 50,000 people tried to pay their respects to him in person. He had shaken hands for hours, and was resting with his hands in his pockets, while a procession of enthusiastic admirers filed by. A little girl, 6 or 7 years old, slipped through the line of guards about the General and went close to him in a dazed, awestruck way. She looked him over with a puzzled expression on her face, and then, taking the right hand from his pocket, shook it, kissed it, and put it back, much as she would put down a sleeping doll. The crowd yelled for the little girl to "pass it round," and the General, taking her by the hand, stepped forward and resumed the handshaking.

THE South Fork Fishing Club has been sued for $100,000 by John Strayer, of Johnstown, Pa., who had a planing mill, lumber yard, and other valuable property swept away by the great flood two years ago. This will be an interesting suit if it ever comes to trial, and it will demonstrate whether a club or corporation can be held responsible for a great catastrophe which was possible only through the maintenance of a great dam in an insecure condition. The South Fork dam held back the waters fo the Conemaugh River for years and the people complained that it was not secure. The club still maintained it until the continuous rains sent down such a volume of water from the great water shed that the dam was swept out and Johnstown was destroyed. The stockholders of the club represent wealth amounting to $100,000,000, and should Mr. Strayer be successful in his suit it will open the way for no end of litigation in that region of Pennsylvania.

THE adoption of the new Constitution in Brazil has been shorn of its present effectiveness by the failure of the Constituent Congress, before adjournment, to pass laws putting it into execution. Thus, the new instrument provides for the complete separation of church and state, yet the administration has just refused to admit that ecclesiastical property is subject to the common law. It takes the position that the pre-existing body of laws was not annulled, ipso facto, by the adoption of the Constitution, and that, until they are specifically repealed and others enacted in their places, they must remain in force. The popular opinion was wholly to the contrary, and it is a matter of much public complaint and indignation that the executive is not putting the Constitution in force. In like manner the Municipal Government of Rio is in a singular condition of legal uncertainty. It derived all its power from the Provisional Government, which is now extinct, and has never been recognized by the Constitutional Government. It also maintained that the very members of the Cabinet are illegally in office, since they were put in office, most of them, before the adoption of the Constitution and have not been subsequently confirmed. Whatever may be said of the Government's contention that the Constitution does not execute itself without supplementary laws, it certainly seems absurd for it to say that old laws directly opposed to the Constitution are in force until repealed. If unconstitutional they are as if they never were. At any rate, the unsatisfactoriness of the whole situation is sure to make the Government trouble when the next Congress meets.

Vague Directions.

There are some old-fashioned cooks who not only never spoil the broth, but who can not possibly give any one else the secret of making it. Such was Aunt Huldy, who often tried to share the recipes for her pies and puddings, but always in vain.

"Give ye the receipt for my sponge-cake?" she would say. "Of course I will, dear. Give me a piece of paper, and I'll set it right down for ye. There 'tis!"

"But, Aunt Huldy, you say, 'a little water.' Now how much do you mean?"

"Why, some folks don't use any at all. They jest depend on the eggs and sugar and flour. But I like a mite myself. It gives that sort of dry taste, you know."

"But how much, Aunt Huldy?"

"Oh, just a little! Sometimes I pump a mite into the bowl, when I'm cooking near the sink."

At another time a young and painstaking housekeeper was trying to learn the process of bun-making.

"But how many currants?" was the puzzled inquiry.

"Oh, I don't know," said Aunt Huldy, placidly. "Here and there a traveler. You don't want to have 'em look too thick."

When Aunt Huldy is reminded that the ignorant or inexperienced cook can scarcely be expected to understand her directions, she looks as if such incompetence was much to be pitied, and can hardly conceal her impatience.

"Poor creatures!" she has been known to say. "Why, I guess I could ha' told whether mincemeat needed a little more biled cider if they'd gin me a taste of it in my cradle!"—Youth's Companion.

FIGHTING FOR PROFITS.

THE STEEL RAIL MAKERS AND THEIR METHODS.

How They Put Up Prices When Many Railroads Are Building—Using the Tariff Duty to Squeeze the Railroads—A Case for Domestic Tin Plate Gunners.

One of the best known among all the laws of trade is that a large demand for any commodity will cause prices to rise; and it is equally well known that a light demand will cause prices to decline. A familiar case in point just now is that of tin plates. As soon as the McKinley bill became a law last fall, with its increased duty on tin plates after July 1, 1891, our dealers began at once to lay in enormous stocks. The large orders received by the Welsh manufacturers showed them that consumers were determined to have tin plates, even at higher prices; and hence prices began to rise.

But prices do not move themselves; they are the result of the conflicting interests of buyer and seller. The buyer beats prices down to the lowest possible point; the seller demands all that he thinks the buyer will give. There is no question on either side of benevolence or of favoritism; it is purely a matter of self-interest—a struggle for the pound of flesh.

But the rise in price of tin plates in Wales has had a peculiar effect upon the protectionist mind in America. Our high tariff tin plate organs and our prospective tin plate manufacturers hasten to point out to us that we are exposed to the tender mercies of a foreign monopoly. Prices, they tell us, are fixed by this grasping foreign monopoly, and are always screwed up to the highest possible point.

Such is is the picture that our protected manufacturers and their newspapers see in cases where foreign trade is concerned. Why do they fail to see that in the home market precisely the same state of things prevails? Why do they strain at a foreign gnat and swallow a home market camel? They even pretend that there is a tin plate trust in Wales, though such a thing has never existed there. But why do they raise their hands in holy horror at a phantom tin plate trust in Wales, while our own blessed home market is overrun and trampled upon by trusts as no other land on earth?

In pointing out how the foreign tin-plate makers have raised prices under the influence of a brisk demand from this side, they overlook the fact that American manufacturers, that all manufacturers, are governed by the same rule in their business. If these people really have such a righteous indignation against the foreigner, they might find an even more worthy object of their wrath in our steel-rail industry.

For many years our rail men have been in combinations to control both prices and output. Whenever there has been much railroad building, they have shoved prices up and made enormous profits, lowering prices again when times were dull, and contenting themselves with smaller profits. At present they are selling at prices fixed last January ($31 at Chicago, $30 at Pittsburg), and firmly adhered to ever since.

The steel rail combination has always pursued the policy of raising prices when railroad building was most active. In fact, they have often made use of their combination for the purpose of squeezing the largest possible profits out of the railroads, bleeding them to the full extent which the high duty would permit. Thus about ten years ago there was a tremendous boom in railroad building. The demand was so great that our domestic mills turned out in the three years, 1880-'82, an average of 1,106,000 tons per year, and an average of 178,000 tons per year were imported in addition. The duty on rails was then $28 per ton, and the average price of domestic rails was for these three years $28.67 above the like average in England, the price here averaging $59.

During the preceding three years the domestic manufacturers had to content themselves with a much lower price, the average being $44.50 per ton, or only $17.50 per ton above the English price. Again, the two years, 1884-'85, were years of depression, and the demand for rails fell off to 980,000 tons a year. During these two years our rail-makers had to take $29.60 on an average for their rails, or only $6.47 above the English price.

In the two years, 1886-'87, there was another boom in railroad building, the yearly consumption rising to 1,836,000 tons of domestic and 89,500 tons of foreign rails. The tariff had meanwhile been lowered to $17 a ton, and the enormous profits already noticed were no longer possible. Still the rail-makers succeeded in squeezing out nearly the last drop of profit there was in the new duty, the average price for the two years being $35.80 a ton, or $16.60 above the price in England.

In view of these facts it is clear that our rail makers use the tariff to get as much profit as the market will bear. The price of rails has been manipulated in a very arbitrary manner, and has varied much more than tin plate prices have. Notwithstanding this fact our high-tariff organs deny even that there is a steel-rail combination in America, and go gunning rather for a mythical tin-plate trust in Wales, although the prices in plates showed an almost unbroken downward movement until the McKinley law was enacted.

The apologists for the rail makers may claim that the great rises and falls in rail prices are due to a varying cost of production. But this will not do. A varying cost of production there undoubtedly is; but the price of rails does not rise or fall with the cost of making. Indeed, the contrary is often the case. Thus, in February and March, 1887, the cost of making rails at one of our largest mills, as shown from its books, was $29.93 a ton, and the selling price was $39.50, a net profit of $9.57 per ton. In December of the same yera, however, the cost of production had risen to $30.83, while the selling price had fallen to $32, a profit of only $1.17 per ton. The conditions of the market had changed, and rails could not be sold at the former large profits. The manufacturers were forced to adjust themselves to an unfavorable market and tempt it with lower prices, when naturally some protectionist organ would rise and remark, What wonders protection hath wrought!

What Free Raw Materials Do.

The high tariff advocates spurn the idea that with free raw materials, and notwithstanding the higher earnings of American mechanics, we can compete without a tariff in the markets of the world with any country in the world. Occasionally, however, their organs admit the truth.

The only important industry in this country which, before the putting of raw sugar upon the free list, has enjoyed the benefit of free raw materials is that devoted to the manufacture of boots and shoes.

What American genius and skill has been able to accomplish in making boots and shoes is shown by an editorial in the July issue of the Boot and Shoe Recorder, as follows: "Foreigners who have visited us, and who, by the way, are thoroughly posted in the details of shoe manufacturing, declare that we lead the world in the combination of cheapness and style in footwear. We do not repeat this in a spirit of braggadocio, but simply as a means of leading up to an important point. Several practical English shoe men, who recently visited Boston, are now writing letters to the trade papers in their country, in the endeavor to impress upon the British manufacturers the superiority of American methods of work. One of these writers states that in the manufacture of medium to cheap boots and shoes the cost of labor per pair is considerably less than half the cost of similar goods in England, when the spending value of the dollar is taken into account. Another of our English visitors, writing on the American system of shoe manufacture, assents that he is so favorably impressed with American made boots and shoes that he should have no hesitation in opening a large store in London for their sale."

"During my stay in Jamaica, I have conversed frequently with Captain D. F. Murphy, an enterprising American merchant, who, in a short period, has established a large and profitable trade not only with the island but with Hayti and Central America. Beginning with his own specialty, Captain Murphy says that while shoes of English and German manufacture below 75 cents are cheaper than American goods, the condition is reversed for all above that price. At 75 cents and up to $1.25, a pair of American shoes will average 10 per cent. less than foreign goods; from $1.25 to $1.75 the average cost will be 15 per cent. less; and from $1.75 to $3, English, German, French and Austrian shoes will cost 20 per cent. more than New England shoes."

With free wool and free iron why could we not do the same with woolen goods and manufactures of iron and steel. That our manufacturers of such merchandise shall be allowed a trial is the aim of those who demand free raw materials.

Higher Prices for Fruit Jars.

There will be an enormous fruit crop in most parts of the country this summer, and as untaxed sugar is very low there will of course be a great deal of canning done everywhere by farmer's wives. Under these favoring circumstances the glassware trust has just decided to advance the price of glass fruit-jars. The trust evidently thinks that with abundant fruit and cheap sugar the housewife will stand some imposition in the matter of jars.

No reason is given for the advance in prices. There are no indications that it has become more expensive to make jars now than it was last year. But it is a little too much for the housewife to demand of the manufacturers that prices remain unchanged. Has she not heard that the good Maj. McKinley raised the duty on her fruit jars from 40 per cent. to 60 per cent.?

That increase of duty could have had but one object, viz: To enable the home manufacturers to charge higher prices. At any rate, the good Maj. McKinley defended his tariff bill on the ground that "where merchandise is cheapest men are poorest;" and he added, "we want no return to cheap times in our own country."

Neither do the glass manufacturers. They simply take you at your word, form a trust, and straightway proceed to raise prices and enjoy the "beneficences" of your tariff law.

There was absolutely no excuse for McKinley's higher duties on glass jars. There is ample evidence to show that the manufacturers of these wares make from 25 to 50 per cent. on their capital every year. They ought to be satisfied with that, but they are not. There never yet was a protected industry that did not squeeze as much as possible out of the consumer.

McKinley, the gushing patriot, gave the jar manufacturers a better chance than ever. Why should they not make profits of 60 or even 75 per cent.? Meanwhile the housewife should not complain. She is only a consumer; and consumers have no rights which tariff makers are bound to respect.

Purpose of the Potato Duty.

The New York Press, a very simple-minded protectionist organ and yet recognized in the protectionist camp as one of the leading protection phonographic machines of the land, has performed one excellent service for the country.

A correspondent has recently written to the Press about the duty on potatoes. He is much puzzled, being a city working man, to know just how the duty on potatoes helps the working people of the cities, since it adds 75 cents a barrel to the cost of imported Scotch potatoes.

To this stupid correspondent the Press, somewhat peevishly and with superior protectionist wisdom, answers: "Have we had one full farming or potato season since the McKinley bill became a law last October? Of course not. How then can you reasonably expect an increased duty, intended to increase home production and reduce prices, to do its work before the first harvest under the new law?"

This was for the consumption of New York City readers. Let the farmers note the innocent frankness with which this protectionist organ avows that the potato duty was intended not to raise prices, but to make him work harder to produce more potatoes, and then sell them at reduced prices.

Universities of the World.

Among the prominent nations of the world the United States ranks first in the number of educational institutions and students who attend them. There are in this country 360 universities, 4,240 professors, and 69,400 students.

Norway has one university, forty-six professors and 880 students.

France has one university, 180 professors and 9,300 students.

Belgium has four universities, eighty-eight professors and 2,400 students.

Holland has four universities, eighty professors and 1,600 students.

Portugal has one university, forty professors and 1,300 students.

Italy has seventeen universities, 600 professors and 11,140 students.

Sweden has two universities, 173 professors and 1,010 students.

Switzerland has three universities, ninety professors and 2,000 students.

Russia has eight universities, 582 professors and 6,900 students.

Denmark has one university, forty professors, and 1,400 students.

Austria has ten universities, 1,810 professors and 13,600 students.

Spain has ten universities, 280 professors and 16,200 students.

Germany has twenty-one universities, 1,020 professors and 25,084 students.

"PROTECTION to American labor" has nowhere failed more dismally to make laborers contented and happy than in the great coke and coal industry of Pennsylvania, where a long strike of some 15,000 men has only recently been settled after a loss of millions of dollars to both sides. But the evil star which presides over the destinies of the coal industry seems to follow it to the remotest West. The protected coal operators of the State of Washington are able to export considerable quantities of coal, but they have just been having a genuine Pennsylvania quarrel with labor, terminating at length in a riot. Now, however, there will be peace. It has just been announced that, "The presence of militia, it is thought, will prevent any further bloodshed."

ALARMED ABOUT WOOL.

FALL OF PRICES FRIGHTENS THE M'KINLEYITES.

A "Distinguished Congressman" Gets a Letter—Low Prices of Wool Hurting the G. O. P.—Sharp Words of a Protection Paper—Wool Tariff Matters—"Crassly Ignorant."

The fact that wool prices are so much lower now than before McKinley's increased wool duties took effect is alarming the souls of the faithful. "A Western man who is interested in wool" has recently written a letter on the subject to "a distinguished Western Congressman who helped to frame the present tariff law"—evidently Hon. Julius C. Burrows of Michigan. The writer calls attention to the marked decline in prices, and says "they bid fair to touch a lower level than at any time under Mr. Cleveland's administration, or even when the Mills bill was pending." Prices have dropped still lower since this was written.

The effect of this upon the g. o. p., as the writer points out, is rather discouraging. "It is so contrary to general expectation," he says, "and so damaging to all argument or effort in favor of protection, that the friends of protection, and those who have advocated that side of the issue before the farmers, may be considered well nigh dumfounded at the situation." He further says: "There has been nothing in the long fight of protection vs. free trade, or tariff for revenue only, that has been so prominent an issue for years, that is likely to be as effective a weapon for free trade to use as this."

This letter has been commented upon in the papers, and that sturdy exponent of protection, the Boston Commercial Bulletin, has been moved to admit that "the McKinley wool schedule is the great piece of botch-work which has given the opponents of protection their strongest argument against the tariff." This wool schedule, the Bulletin says, "was framed by men grossly and crassly ignorant of the ordinary conditions of the market, and indeed of everything except the belief of the ignorant that legislation is a cure for every ill."

Alas! that is all very hard on the good McKinley.

Our Western Congressman was not able to answer the letter quoted; it presented too grave a problem to his "crassly ignorant" mind, and hence he sent it to a prominent firm of protectionist wool dealers in Philadelphia. In its answer, this firm laid the chief blame on the decline of prices of Australian wool in outside markets. But this explanation will not hold water.

The Bulletin admits that "Australian wool has declined abroad, and that the English manufacturers are paying less for it to-day than a year ago." But that decline has had nothing to do with the fall of American wool prices, for this eminent commercial journal says: "Our buyers are paying the same that they paid a year ago (for Australian wool), and the additional duty of a cent a pound on grease wool makes the scoured cost to the American mill of Australian combing about 2 cents a pound more than a year since (80's quality merino were 78 cents then and are 80 cents now), while Ohio XX fleece costs in the grease 3 cents and scoured 6 cents a pound less than at that time."

"Ohio wool," says the Bulletin, "is a slowly vanishing industry. The Ohio farmer finds that other crops pay him better."

But what are the Ohio political shepherds to do when their occupation is gone? They will be of all men most miserable when they must "cease from troubling" and the weary public is at rest.

A Young Inventor.

Don't be discouraged, boys, because you are young. That is something that will soon remedy itself. And you can be of use to the world even now. Did you ever hear of William W. Rosenfeld? Perhaps not, but if you were an engineer you would have heard of him, for, although he is now only 23 years old, he is a very well-known man among engineers, because of his inventions. And the first and greatest of these he made when he was but 15 years old. He was a New York boy, and when traveling up and down on the elevated railroad he noticed the difficulty which the trainmen had in opening and closing the gates to keep people from jumping on the trains when in motion. Many thousands of boys probably noticed the same thing, but he did more, he thought of the matter till he had discovered a way to remedy it, and now the compound lever that he invented is in use wherever there is an elevated railroad. Now, at the age of 23, he has perfected probably the most efficient and comprehensive railway signal system known. By this system an alarm will be sounded in the cab of a locomotive when it gets on the same block with another train, when it approaches a misplaced switch, an open drawbridge, a broken rail, or a rail lying across the tracks. Not only will the alarm be sounded, but if desired the air brakes may be turned on by the same signal, providing for the safety of the train even against the engineer's carelessness or possible incapacity. Mr. Rosenfeld has secured the American patents on this invention and has applications filed in Europe.

Now, there was a boy who used his ideas to good advantage.

Amount of duty taken off	$60,000,000
Amount paid planters for duties	9,000,000
Balance to the credit of Republican legislation	$51,000,000

Whereupon it remarks:

"There is nothing slow or small about that showing."

Then the removal of the tax, which we are always told that the foreigner pays, is to the "credit of Republican legislation!" The tariff is no "burden" to the country—only the wicked free-traders say that—but the removal of the sugar tax makes a net saving to the consumer of $51,000,000!

CONSTANTINOPLE has fifty newspapers; nineteen of them are daily, five semi-weekly, seventeen weekly, three semi-monthly. eight monthly. In nationality five are Turkish, seven Armenian, eight Greek, six French, two French and English, one Italian, two Hebrew, two Bulgarian, one Arabian, one Persian, one German.

A PROMINENT manufacturer of tinware says that the increase of prices for tin plate, caused by the passage of the McKinley law, amounted up to July 1 to $7,000,000. On that date the McKinley duty took effect, and during the first year of its existence it may be safely said that this McKinley tax will cost the consumer at least $15,000,000.

LAST year the McKinleyites set out once more to make the country prosperous by means of a high tariff, but the failures in business during the first six months of this year were 6,037, against 5,446 in the same time last year.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.

Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.

After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause. Respectfully,

Hypochondria.

A physician in this country, who made a specialty of neural diseases, devised several years ago a system of treatment which he called the Rest Cure, for patients whose nervous systems were exhausted from overwork or other causes. The sufferer was taken from home and separated wholly from her friends, which at once did away both with old associations and with coddling.

She was put to bed in a sunny, cheerful chamber, in the care of a skillful nurse, and forbidden to move hand or foot. She was fed and tended like an infant; well fed, too, the meals being nourishing and frequent. Instead of exercise, she was manipulated once or twice a day.

Patients who were real sufferers rose from this treatment strong, fat and rosy. But unfortunately there are nervous patients who are shams to whom such a regimen would be intolerable. Dr. Dash was sent for once in haste to a wealthy woman in New York, supposed to be dying, though no physician could discover her ailment.

She had not tasted food for days. Her shrieks were incessant, her features livid and pinched as in articulo mortis. Her friends, exhausted by months of nursing, stood waiting to see her depart. The doctor made a close examination of the case. She recognized him and her eyes gathered intelligence.

"I'm dying, doctor," she moaned.

"Nothing of the kind," shortly.

"What ails me?" she said, after a louder shriek.

He looked her steadily in the eye. "A husband who has too much money," he answered, briefly. Then, turning to the attendants, he said, "Take her up, dress her, and bring her some beefsteak and bread and butter."

The treatment was brutally blunt, perhaps, but it cured the patient. She never, however, forgave the physician.

Another case was that of a leader of fashion in a Southern city, who came with her suite of husband, maids, lapdog, etc., to him to be cured, declaring herself "a perfect wreck." For a couple of days he watched her through her usual routine: lolling on a couch through the day—groaning, shuddering, helpless—then up at night brilliantly dressed for ball or opera.

As the result of his watching he ordered her into the hospital, and put her through the usual regimen of bed, absolute inaction, solitude and manipulation.

On the second day she dressed herself unobserved, stole out of the house and to the station, and literally ran away, never halting until she was at New Orleans, from which city she telegraphed for her husband and for her clothes.

Nervous diseases are alarmingly rife in this country. But there is a nervousness born of idleness, or of fashionable dissipation, or of morbid sensibility, which makes victims not only of the patient but of her family. Many a household is enslaved by these irritable invalids, who do not realize the cause of their nervousness, and who only need fresh air, hard, daily work and regular hours of sleep at night to cure them of their fancied ills.

Whether You Travel by Land or Sea

You need a medicinal safeguard. Changes of climate or temperature, brackish water, unusual diet, draughts from open windows that surly fellow passengers will not close—all these breed ailments against which the surest protection is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, finest of medicinal fortifiers. Sea sickness, land nausea, are promptly counteracted by this agreeable corrective, which is also a capital defense against malaria, the effects of a tropical or chilly temperature, damp and exposure. Persons of sedentary pursuits, mill operatives, mariners, miners, engineers, frontiersmen, persons of every calling involving mental fatigue, excessive bodily effort, and liability to unhealthful influences of any sort, regard it as an incomparable safeguard. Biliousness, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism, sick headache and kidney troubles are effectually subdued by the great alterative.

How They Are Made to Look Pleasant.

A traveling photographer in New York has a large monkey for an assistant. In fact, the animal does most of the work. Mounted on a forked stick stuck into the ground, he inspects the position of the person about to be photographed, burying his hairy head under the cloth that covers the rear part of the instrument. Then he stretches forward his long arm and removes the cap. For, perphaps, two seconds he holds it in his hand, while he frowningly stares at the subject. Then he covers up the lens, and the picture is taken.

NATURE'S BEAUTIES.

PLANTS THAT MAY BE USED TO ADORN THE GARDEN.

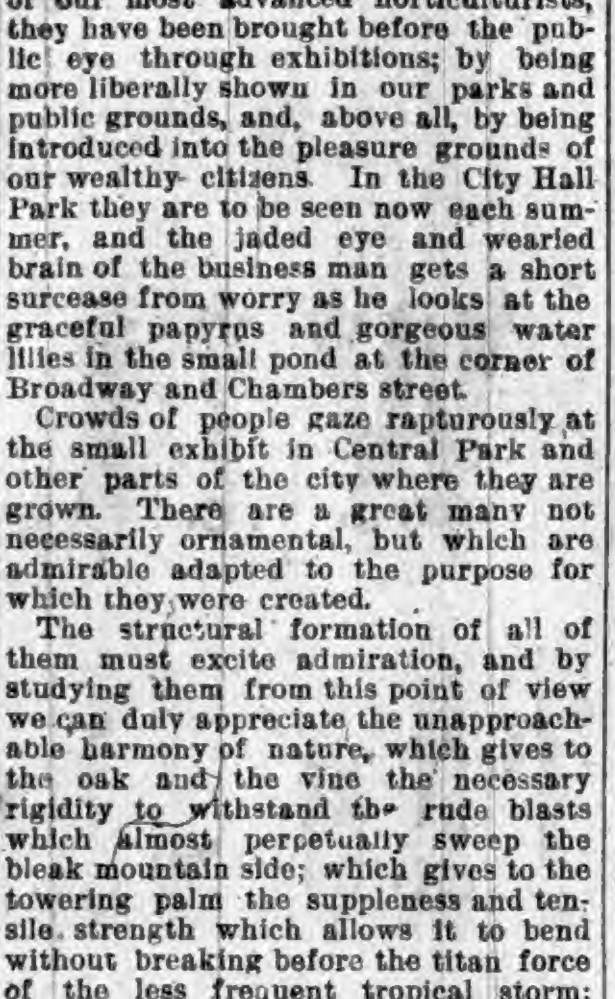
How to Grow Them—Some of the Varieties Which Are Preferred for Home-Made Ponds, and How They Should Be Cultivated.

The general title of water or aquatic plants covers some of the most interesting and beautiful members of the vegetable kingdom. For a long time they were unjustly relegated to a partial obscurity, but recently, owing to the efforts of our most advanced horticulturists, they have been brought before the public eye through exhibitions; by being more liberally shown in our parks and public grounds, and, above all, by being introduced into the pleasure grounds of our wealthy citizens. In the City Hall Park they are to be seen now each summer, and the jaded eye and wearied brain of the business man gets a short surcease from worry as he looks at the graceful papyrus and gorgeous water lilies in the small pond at the corner of Broadway and Chambers street.

Crowds of people gaze rapturously at the small exhibit in Central Park and other parts of the city where they are grown. There are a great many not necessarily ornamental, but which are admirable adapted to the purpose for which they were created.

The structural formation of all of them must excite admiration, and by studying them from this point of view we can duly appreciate the unapproachable harmony of nature, which gives to the oak and the vine the necessary rigidity to withstand the rude blasts which almost perpetually sweep the bleak mountain side; which gives to the towering palm the suppleness and tensile strength which allows it to bend without breaking before the titan force of the less frequent tropical storm; which places in sheltered nooks in the forest the delicate fern and modest violet, and which peoples our ponds, lakes, rivers, and seas with an infinite variety of plants both useful and ornamental.

She gives to these buoyancy and flexibility, enabling them to float and sway unharmed in the currents which would otherwise destroy them were they more rigid; she gives color and beauty to what would otherwise be but an offensive marsh in many instances, and her wise economy utilizes river side and pond edge to grow plants which are of much use to man in many ways. Want of knowledge deters a great many from cultivating these beautiful plants who could do it successfully. There is an air of mystery about their development not to be found in connection with plants which grow on the earth's surface, and this it is, perhaps, which causes many to shrink from attempting their cultivation; yet nothing is more simple.



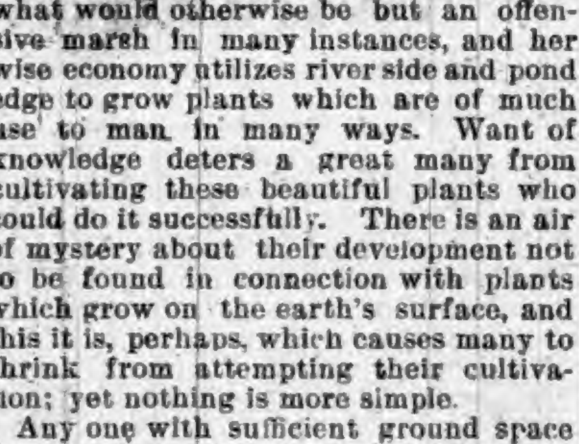
AT THE POND'S EDGE.

Any one with sufficient ground space for a tank, say 10x6 feet, and even less, can have a fine display; or failing this, they can sink a tub in the ground and at least have some common water lilies and aquatic grasses. A gentleman of moderate means living in Flatbush shows the possibilities in this line by having a grand collection in the rear of his house which attracts hundreds of visitors each summer.

His tank is oval in shape, about 15 feet long by 8 feet wide, in which is a miniature boat, goldfish, frogs which clamber up on the water-lilly leaves and play tag for the delectation of the onlooking white, blue, yellow and red water-lillies, aquatic grasses, water-poppies, etc., affording him and his numerous visitors infinite pleasure, yet the cost is comparatively trifling. The labor to dig a hole 3 feet deep, cement to make it watertight and about $5 worth of seed has given him more pleasure than twenty times the amount expended in the ordinary search after health-giving recreation.

One great point in favor of the cultivation of these plants which will appeal strongly to those who have to do their own gardening is that once planted they require little or no care, no pulling out of weeds or perpetual scratching, no dragging of a water apparatus, nor constant battling with industrious insects; they are entirely outside the many vexatious annoyances to be met with in ordinary gardening. It must not be inferred, of course, that they in any way are capable of supplanting the beds of plants which do so much to brighten up the lawn and small door yard; but they are a pleasing distraction, and will repay the cost to procure them.

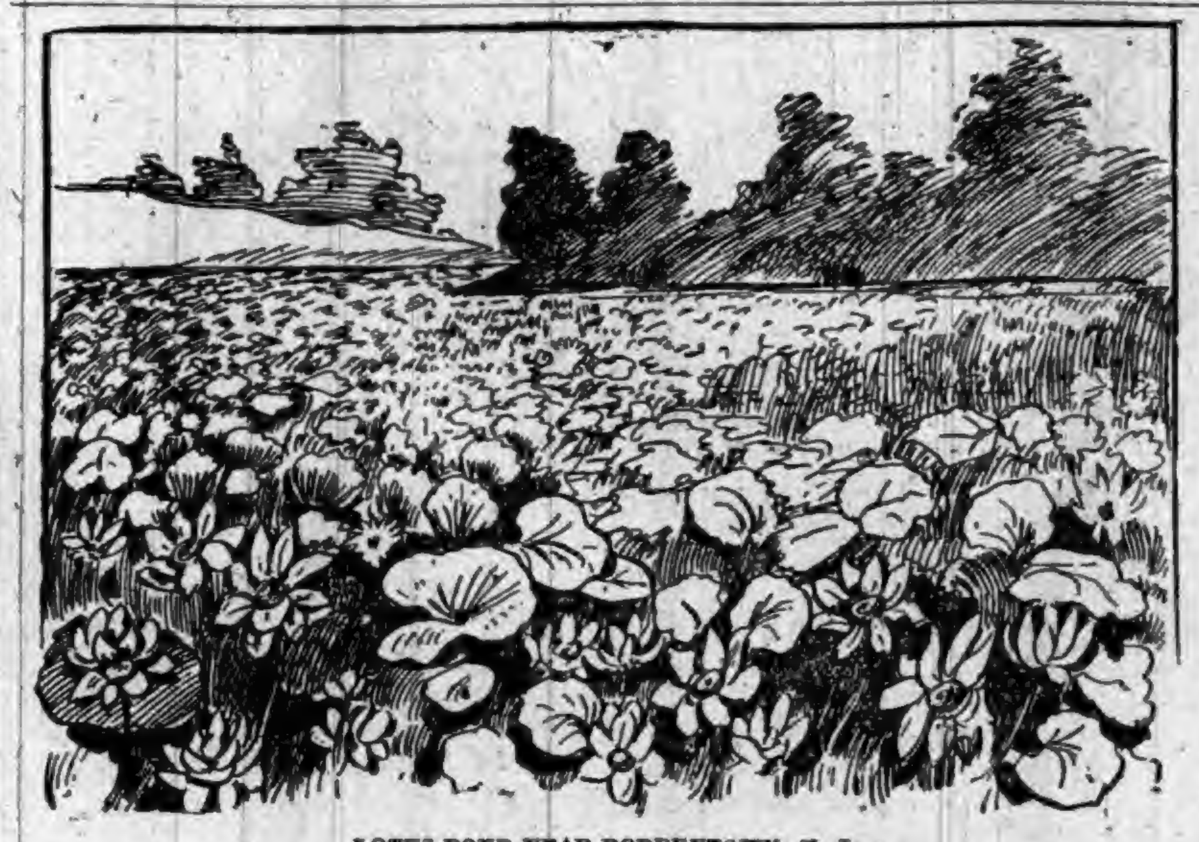
Suffice it to say that seeds of all the water-lilies can be had in any well-appointed store, and roots of most of the other plants can be procured from any specialist in this line. The tank having been prepared, pots, boxes or small tubs filled with good soil should be placed in it at proper distances, and about May 1 to May 15 the seed sown in these, then covered with an inch or two of clean, coarse sand and sufficient water let in to just submerge them; as the plants develop more water should be added until the tank is full, and provision should be made to drain off the water whenever necessary; an overflow pipe should also be supplied, and occasionally a fresh supply of water should be added to prevent stagnation. As the surface of the water becomes filled with leaves this will not be necessary, because the plants in growing keep down all scum and maintain a freshness in the water.



BUD OF DUCK PLANT.

There are some insect parasites which prey on aquatic plants under the water, and some of these larvæ settle on the leaves of the water-lilies, but fortunately they are easily combated. An abundance of goldfish in the tank will not only get rid of these, but will also help to keep the water clean. In addition to these some of the common spotted sunfish should be added, as they are voracious feeders and destroy any and all insects bold enough to make the tank their home.

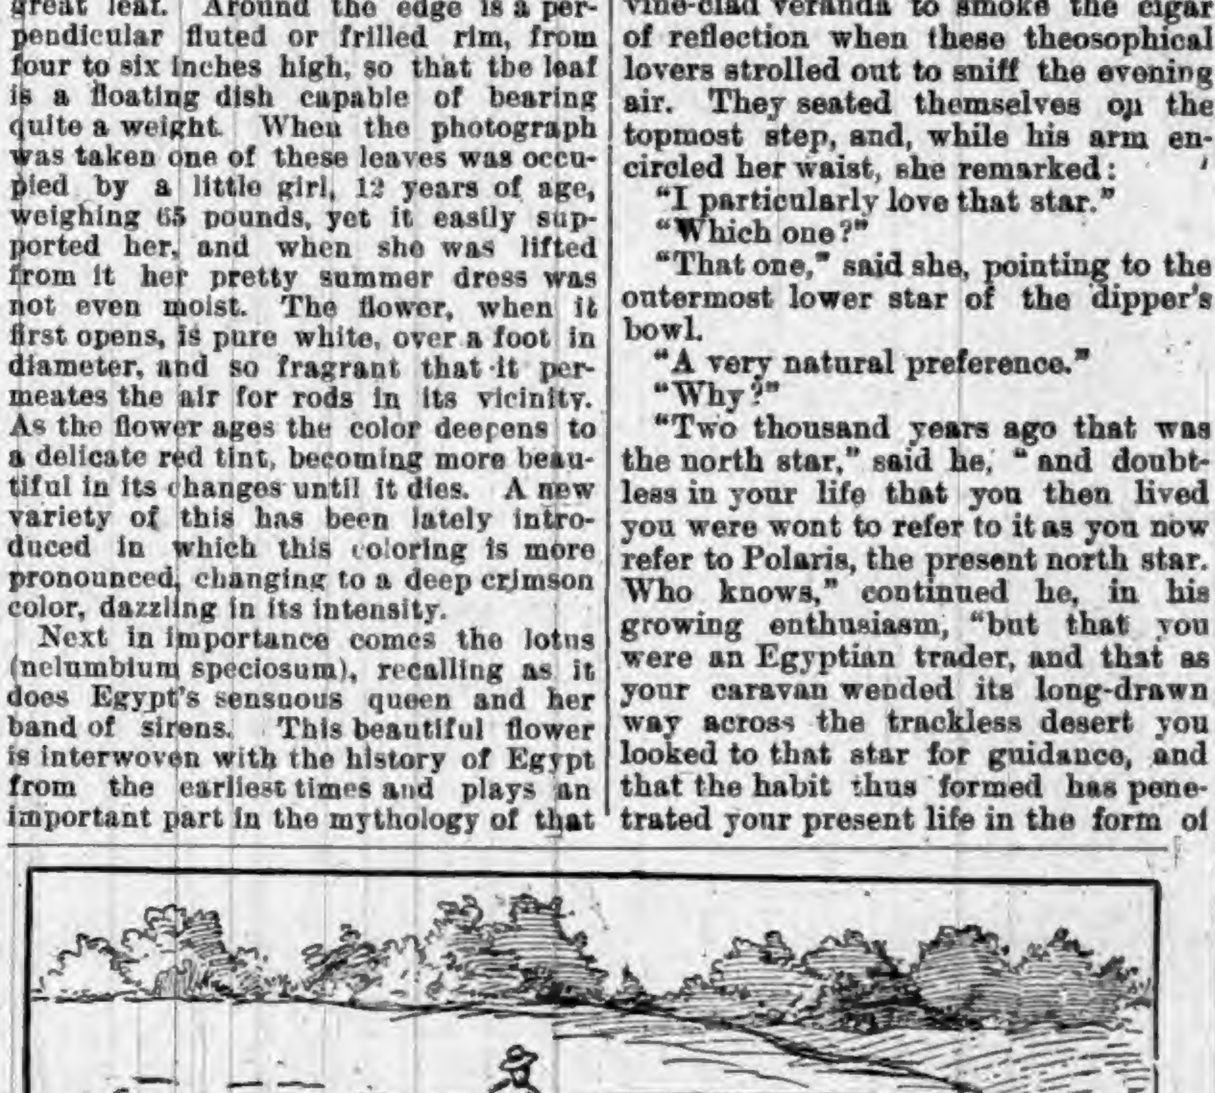
The water lily, of course, occupies the most prominent place in flowering aquatic plants, and for general utility the common white variety easily ranks first. Who that has ever caught a glimpse from a car window of a batch of these pearly white blossoms, with their golded-yellow centers, floating on the surface of some roadside pond, has failed to look back at them as they were whirled past, and felt a longing to linger and at the risk of a wetting gather a handful of them? Or who that has been fortunate enough—particularly a woman—to be rowed through a mass of them can ever forget them. The grandest of all water lilies is the Victoria Regia, introduced from South America, and named in honor of Queen Victoria. For a long time it was supposed that this magnificent species could not be grown in the open air in our Northern latitudes, but recent experiments have demonstrated the falsity of this, as it has been grown to perfection for several seasons at Bordentown, N. J., and last year a fine specimen was successfully grown outside at New Rochelle, N. Y. The illustration, taken from a photograph, shows this variety in a pond in North Carolina, where it was grown by Dr. Bahnson, who is an enthusiast in the culture of aquatic plants. The leaves are from five to six feet in diameter, bronzy green on the upper surface and deep purple underneath.



LOTUS POND NEAR BORDENTOWN, N. J.

From the center stalk radiates strong nerves, which are connected transversely by lighter ones; all these are hollow and give strength and buoyancy to the great leaf. Around the edge is a perpendicular fluted or frilled rim, from four to six inches high, so that the leaf is a floating dish capable of bearing quite a weight. When the photograph was taken one of these leaves was occupied by a little girl, 12 years of age, weighing 65 pounds, yet it easily supported her, and when she was lifted from it her pretty summer dress was not even moist. The flower, when it first opens, is pure white, over a foot in diameter, and so fragrant that it permeates the air for rods in its vicinity. As the flower ages the color deepens to a delicate red tint, becoming more beautiful in its changes until it dies. A new variety of this has been lately introduced in which this coloring is more pronounced, changing to a deep crimson color, dazzling in its intensity.

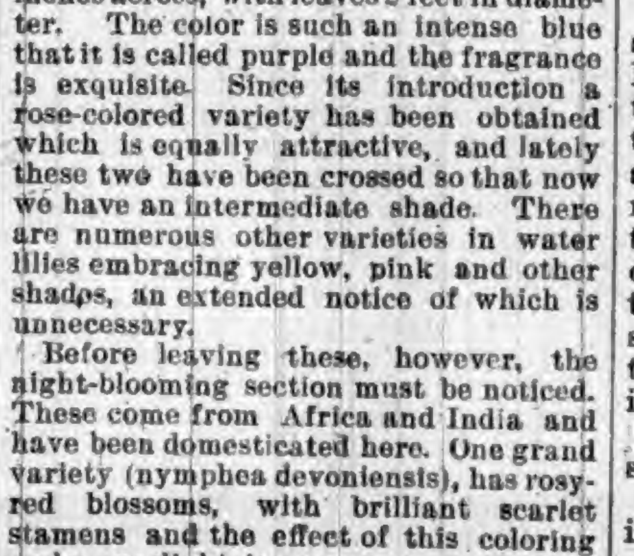
Next in importance comes the lotus (nelumbium speciosum), recalling as it does Egypt's sensuous queen and her band of sirens. This beautiful flower is interwoven with the history of Egypt from the earliest times and plays an important part in the mythology of that country long before the Ptolemies ruled. It also enters into the mythology of India, China and Japan. Little wonder, then, that as the busiest among us gaze on its robust yet gracefully languid green leaves and great rose-pink blossoms, a sense of dreamy rest steals over us and in fancy we hear lutes keyed to love tones, voluptuous song and the rustle of silken sails as Cleopatra drifted lazily down the Nile to meet and enthrall Anthony.



A VICTORIA REGIA USED AS A BOAT.

In 1882 was introduced into cultivation the royal purple water lily from Zanzibar. This is considered by many as the most gorgeous of the whole family. The flowers are frequently 12 inches across, with leaves 2 feet in diameter. The color is such an intense blue that it is called purple and the fragrance is exquisite. Since its introduction a rose-colored variety has been obtained which is equally attractive, and lately these two have been crossed so that now we have an intermediate shade. There are numerous other varieties in water lilies embracing yellow, pink and other shades, an extended notice of which is unnecessary.

Before leaving these, however, the night-blooming section must be noticed. These come from Africa and India and have been domesticated here. One grand variety (nymphea devoniensis), has rosy-red blossoms, with brilliant scarlet stamens and the effect of this coloring under gaslight is gorgeous in the extreme. There are other varieties in the same class producing white and light-yellow blossoms. In a pond of generous proportions an effect unequalled by anything in the floral line may be had by suspending incandescent electric lights over a mass of these, which will bring out their colors in their full brilliancy, and the enterprising hotel man who will attempt this will attract and hold many a guest who otherwise he would never see.



NYMPHÆA DEVONIENSIS.

The most wonderful of all aquatic plants is not only a wonder among these, but is unquestionably alone in its strange formation, and deserves to rank first among the wonders of the vegetable kingdom. This is the duck plant or pelican flower. So close is the resemblance to a duck that an amateur gunner might well be pardoned should he blaze away with both barrels upon catching sight of one of these wonderful flowers for the first time in some quiet nook. The "duck" when fully developed measures from fifteen to eighteen inches. It is attached to the plant by a good sized vine which joins the "duck" proper in the place answering to the beak in the live bird. The impression created on looking at it is that the "duck" is engaged in a determined effort to swallow a large worm, and this heightens the natural effect. The color throughout is a light green, tinged with yellow. The open flower is a deep wine purple, mottled with creamy white, the center being an intense purple, soft as the finest velvet—truly a rare species.—New York Herald.

THEOSOPHY IN MISSOURI.

A Pair of Star-Gazers Dilate on Love, Poetry, and the Pole Star.

He was an eavesdropper, but one upon whom the office had been thrust, says the Kansas City Star. He had esconsed himself in a corner of the vine-clad veranda to smoke the cigar of reflection when these theosophical lovers strolled out to sniff the evening air. They seated themselves on the topmost step, and, while his arm encircled her waist, she remarked:

"I particularly love that star."

"Which one?"

"That one," said she, pointing to the outermost lower star of the dipper's bowl.

"A very natural preference."

"Why?"

"Two thousand years ago that was the north star," said he, "and doubtless in your life that you then lived you were wont to refer to it as you now refer to Polaris, the present north star. Who knows," continued he, in his growing enthusiasm, "but that you were an Egyptian trader, and that as your caravan wended its long-drawn way across the trackless desert you looked to that star for guidance, and that the habit thus formed has penetrated your present life in the form of an indefinable presence."

"But where were you then?" she tremulously inquired, as she seized his disengaged hand, she being but a recent convert to the doctrines of Karma, and her feminine soul, with its pleasant dreams of wedding finery, suffering a slight shock at the thought of any condition in life in which there was neither prospect nor propriety of a husband figuring.

But the lover was now lost in the astronomer. He was a teacher, and, true to his pedagogic instinct, he proceeded, while he looked reflectively toward the east:

"Yes, indeed, and in 12,000 years that star Lyra, in the constellation of the Harp, that you see just rising through the trees, will be the north star, for the earth's motions, you must know, are precisely like those of a top. It revolves on its axis, and at the same time this axis describes a wide circle of its own. It is this latter motion that causes the change in the north star, since the orb so named is always the one toward which the earth's pole is pointing."

She sighed, and after a little pause said in a discouraged tone:

"I wonder what you and I will be doing when Lyra is the north star?"

Promptly the professor quoted:

"I vex me not with brooding on the years
That were ere I drew breath; why should I then
Distrust the darkness that may fall again
When life is done? Perchance in other spheres—"

"Poetry, and theosophic poetry at that!" muttered the eavesdropper. "This is too much."

There was a loud rustling among the vines. The professor's quotation ceased abruptly, and his arm took a more conventional posture.

Red Veins.

Red veins in the face are natural to some people, and cannot be removed nor prevented from coming. Veins of a bluish cast beneath the eyes indicate physical weakness, and are usually seen in people of delicate health. Large veins that are swollen when a person is in anger or exercising violently cannot be removed nor prevented from showing. They are not harmful. They indicate more or less passion, and betray an earnest, sensitive nature.

"SCOTLAND is plagued with mice." She should get upon the table and screech.

LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

THIS IS THEIR DEPARTMENT OF THE PAPER.

Quaint Sayings and Doings of Little Ones Gathered and Printed Here for Other Little Folks to Read.

A Queer Boy.

He doesn't like study, it "weakens his eyes,"
But the "right sort" of book will insure a surprise.
Let it be about Indians, pirates, or bears,
And he's lost for the day to all mundane affairs;
By sunlight or gaslight his vision is clear.
Now, isn't that queer?

At thought of an errand he's "tired as a hound,"
Very weary of life and of "tramping around."
But if there's a band or a circus in sight,
He will follow it gladly from morning till night.
The showman will capture him some day, I fear,
For he is so queer.

And his back is so lame that he "can't dig a bit."
But mention base-ball and he's cured very soon;
And he'll dig for a woodchuck the whole afternoon.
Do you think he "plays 'possum?" He seems quite sincere;
But—isn't he queer?

A Child's Peculiar Fancy.

Flossie's grandmother was a nice old lady, but she was very difficult to get along with, and this was particularly true during her last illness, and the child came in for her share of it. One day, shortly after the old lady's death, Flossie's mother observed that she was very thoughtful.

"What are you thinking about, Flossie?"

A Prince of a Boy.

"He is just a prince of a boy," said Mrs. Hatton, of Willie, and I listened and watched, for a prince, you know, is the son of a king, and I wanted to see if Willie was like a king I read of.

When he dropped his hoop and ran in to amuse baby for mamma, and did it so pleasantly, I began to get my answer. When he came out of school, smiling, instead of pouting because he had been kept late, I felt pretty sure. But when he cut his apple in two and gave one-half to ragged Ned Brown, I was satisfied.

Yes, Willie is a "prince of a boy," because he tries to do just like that King who is kind to all, and like that Son of a King who came to minister and not to be ministered unto.—Golden Rule.

Bright Little People.

LITTLE LEO, aged three, was watching the sunset. It was very brilliant, and the clouds, all crimson and gold, had a mottled appearance. "O grandma, grandma," he cried, "do come quick and see—the moon is melting the sky!"

EDNA noticed that papa did not kiss the new baby, so she put her arm around his neck, and said, coaxingly, "Kiss it, papa. It won't bite."

How Did She Tell?

In little Daisy's dimpled hand two bright new pennies shone;
One was for Rob (at school just then), the other Daisy's own.
While waiting Rob's return she rolled both treasures round the floor,
When suddenly they disappeared, and one was seen no more.
"Poor Daisy. Is your penny lost?" was asked in accents kind,
"Why, no, mine's here!" she quickly said. "It's Rob's I cannot find."
—St. Nicholas

Had Not Learned It.

It pays to cultivate habits of politeness and show deference to those with whom we come in contact. The boy or girl with pleasing habits is pretty certain to be chosen in preference to the one who is rude in address and manners, if both are seeking the same situation; and the same is true throughout life.

A gentleman stood in a shop the other day, when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yaas."

"Good at figures?"

"Yaas."

"That will do—I do not want you," said the merchant.

"But," said the gentleman, when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why don't you give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say, 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir.' If he answers me as he did when applying for a situation, how will he answer customers after being here a month?"

And the gentleman was silent. The boy had been weighed in the balance, and, because of his lack of politeness, had been found wanting. It pays to be thoughtful and pleasant.

Boys!

Treat your mother as politely as if she were a strange lady.

Be as kind and helpful to your sisters as to other boys' sisters.

Don't grumble or refuse to do some errand which must be done, and which otherwise takes the time of some one who has more to do.

Have your mother and sisters for your best friends.

If you do anything wrong, take your mother into your confidence.

Never lie about anything you have done.

It Pays to Be in Earnest.

A boy was once walking along a dusty road. The sun was very warm and oppressive; but, as was his usual way, he stepped along quickly, thinking that the faster he walked the sooner he would reach the end of his journey. He soon heard a carriage coming, and when it had caught up with him the driver reined in his horse and kindly asked the lad to ride, which invitation he gladly accepted. When he was seated in the carriage the gentleman, a good Quaker, said: "I noticed thee walking along briskly, and so asked thee to ride: but if I had seen thee walking lazily, I would not have done so by any means."—Morning Star.

LITTLE WALTER had been put to bed, and his mamma had returned to the sitting-room, when a stray cow began lowing near the house. "Mamma, mamma!" called the small man, excitedly, "do you hear that cattle mewing?"—Youth's Companion.

A LITTLE boy, seeing his mother take some ducklings from a nest, exclaimed: "Oh, mamma! what kind of chickens are those with mashed mouths and paper 'tween their toes?"

Humoring the Old Man.

Mr. Poorchap—I have humored my rich uncle in everything, but I do not see how I can go on with his whims any further. He wants me to help him get a wife; but if he marries I won't inherit his fortune, and our wedding will be impossible.

False Reports.

The story having been circulated that Lydia E. Pinkham was a mythical personage whose name had been widely used for advertising purposes, a Boston newspaper man not long ago had an interview with Mr. Charles H. Pinkham of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., eldest son of the famous woman. Mr. Pinkham called attention to photographs of his mother and her children, and explained the rise and progress of her wonderful business. He told how, when his father was broken down in health, his mother, using her kitchen as a laboratory, began the steeping of herbs with the assistance of her family. The filling of a gross or so of bottles was the work of an evening, and then the sons went around Boston and surrounding towns distributing circulars setting forth the virtues of the compound. Success attended their combined efforts, newspaper notoriety followed, and soon the kitchen gave place to a well-appointed laboratory. Yet larger accommodations were required until they at length erected a building with facilities sufficient to meet the demands of a great and growing business. This is now pointed to as a proof of the results of advertising. Mrs. Charles H. Pinkham is actively engaged in the correspondence work of the company, and attends personally to the visits of female patients, so that instead of there being no Mrs. Pinkham, there have been in reality two ladies of that name, one of them still attending to the business founded in Lynn many years ago.

Who Ate the Donkey?

When the French were in their flight from Spain, after the battle of Vittoria, some stragglers entered a village and demanded rations. The villagers killed a donkey and served it to their hated foe. Next day they continued their flight, and were waylaid by the villagers, who assaulted them most murderously, jeering them as they did so with the shout, "Who ate the donkey?"

MANY modest women suffer rather than apply to a physician: Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has saved thousands of such from lives of misery and early graves.

Undeserved.

"Yes, sir," answered Clarence, with an air of resignation. "Everybody says that, but I don't think I deserve it."

"German Syrup"

Here is something from Mr. Frank A. Hale, proprietor of the De Witt House, Lewiston, and the Tontine Hotel, Brunswick, Me. Hotel men meet the world as it comes and goes, and are not slow in sizing people and things up for what they are worth. He says that he has lost a father and several brothers and sisters from Pulmonary Consumption, and is himself frequently troubled with colds, and he often coughs enough to make him sick at his stomach. Whenever he has taken a cold of this kind he uses Boschee's German Syrup, and it cures him every time. Here is a man who knows the full danger of lung troubles, and would therefore be most particular as to the medicine he used. What is his opinion? Listen! "I use nothing but Boschee's German Syrup, and have advised, I presume, more than a hundred different persons to take it. They agree with me that it is the best cough syrup in the market."

Hereditary

Consumption

"LIKE A FROST-BLIGHTED FLOWER,"

The fair young sufferer perishes, and often from causes unknown to the world, but superficial judgment, founded on appearances, takes this form of expression, "died of quick consumption," while in nine cases out of ten it should be, "died from carelessness." Mrs. C. H. Howard, of Chicago, Ill. speaks thus highly of Chamberlain's Restorative Pills as a cure for rheumatism: "Please send me some of your pills. I think them invaluable for rheumatism. They always stop it on me at once." Chamberlain's Restorative Pills can be had of all druggists. 6

On the Fourth Polly doesn't ask for a cracker more than once.

It is manufactured as a powder, which can be given in a glass of beer, a cup of coffee or tea, or in food, without the knowledge of the patient. It is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. It has been given in thousands of cases, and in every instance a perfect cure has followed. It never Fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific, it becomes an utter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. Cures guaranteed. 48 page book of particulars free. How it Tickled 'em.

Until now we have been too crowded to notice the Dispatch's little piece of tin, sent to it for political purposes, by N. & G. Taylor & Co., of Philadelphia. It was a silly thing to do, sending these bits of tin to editors, and no less silly for the editors receiving them to magnify their importance. As we recently said, it is no great thing to make tin. We have for many years been making the thin sheets of iron and steel used, and the block tin which is melted, and into which these sheets are dipped, has been free all the time. It requires only about $500 capital to start the business of making two tin plates, for the sheets of iron and steel can be bought anywhere. So it will be seen there has been no change in the conditions that affect this industry, except the one raising the rate of import duty on finished sheet tin from 1 cent to 2 and two-tenths cents a pound. These are facts the Dispatch will not deny. Now in view of this, we again submit that this excitement over a little tin plate is supremely ridiculous. The matter of starting an ordinary factory, as we have said, is not a fourth that of starting up a paper like the Dispatch—not a twentieth of what it takes to start one of Auburn's Windmill factories, or the Auburn Foundry, or the Church Furniture business. Neither does it require as much skill as any of these, nor will as many hands be employed, and of those employed, the chances are they will be mostly foreigners. And no matter who they are, what good will it do Auburn, or DeKalb county, or the state of Indiana or the people at large? No good, whatever, except to such rough laborers as are employed, who as we have said, are very few. So it appears that all this tin business is merely "political tin." If not then why should not one of Auburn's factories send out little bits of their work to editor's all over the country? As we said, there has been no change made by the McKinley bill in the conditions that surround the tin industry, except to raise the rate of tax, which can be only an obstruction. Hence, if it is possible to make tin now, it would have been easier before. Democratic papers do not deny the possibility of making tin in America. On the contrary, we don't believe it needs even the "protection" of 1 cent as under the old law, much less the 2.2 of the new. In view of all these things, can anyone blame us for repeating our remark, that republican editors are easily hoodwinked and that they think their readers are also. It don't take much, either, to tickle and flatter your average republican editor. And to think that N. & G. Taylor & Co., Philadelphia, commonwealth of Pennsylvania, U. S. A., should have selected the Auburn, Ind, Dispatch as the one vehicle in this section through whose columns their great secret was to be allowed to leak out on an awe-stricken country. Must have brought up an extra thrill of pleasure. Truly Pope has it, that some men are,

"Pleased with a rattle, Tickled with a straw."

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shephard, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely, Sold by Robbins & McCord 3

Height of Cruelty.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppresions, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvelous testimonials free. Sold and guarranteed by F. E. Davenport. 3

Our Leading Druggists.

F. E. Davenport is a wide awake business man securing that which he knows will give satisfaction to his customers. He has just received a fresh supply of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the favorite cough medicine, and they are selling more of this remedy than all others combined. This being the case there must certainly be great merit in this medicine as it is giving such universal satisfaction. You can buy it of F. E. Davenport.

Town Lots for Sale.

Very desirable residence lots for sale at reasonable terms. Thirteen lots in the S. W. Ralston Addition south of the High school grounds. Also a fractional lot on West Seventh street, All in a good locality. Inquire of Mrs. S. W. Ralston or A. J. Ralston.

Good Material.

We are aware that it is hardly time to talk about candidates for next year, especially for local candidates. But for governor of this great state of Indiana, the campaign seems to be fairly started, at least as far as making suggestions goes. Every section of the state is speaking out for its favorite. Here are a few of the names: Speaker Mason J. Niblack, Capt. W. R. Myers, J. H. Rice, Congressman Shively, Col. C. C. Matson, John G. Shanklin, W. D. Bynum and perhaps others. It will be seen we have no name so far, for northeastern Indiana. We have simply kept the best for the last of the feast. Judge Allen Zollars of Ft. Wayne, has been prominently mentioned by several, and though we have heard this for several weeks, we waited to see what authority there was for the suggestion. We have not seen the judge himself for some time, and therefore cannot say what he would think of it. But of all the men named, we know of none better fitted for this dignified and honorable place than Judge Zollars. Almost anyone would feel honored by having his name connected with the state's chief executive office but with Judge Zollars in our humble opinion, he would honor the office as much as it would him. It is a position requiring not only executive ability, but experience, character and well grounded dignity. None of the other names, have, as far as we know, so happy a combination of all these good qualities as must be conceded to him. And when the struggle comes, what good reason can there be to prevent our part of the state from putting in its claims for once? We, up this way, have been too modest. If Judge Zollars refuses, then why not try some one else in our section?

Persian Sherbet, Ginger Ale and Root Beer.

Directions to make—Disolve one package of any of the above extracts, and one pound of sugar in a gallon of water. This makes a delightful drink that is healthy, invigorating and refreshing. Wood & Co., of Madison, Ind., are the manufacturers' exclusive agents, and they will send a package of any one of the above extracts by mail, post paid for 35 cents or three for $1.00. The purity of these extracts and their extraordinary medicinal properties for general debility are acknowledged by the medical faculty; just the thing to sell at public gatherings and for confectioners.

Notice to Bridge Contractors.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb county, Ind., at the Auditor's office, in said county, until 2 o'clock, p. m., of

Tuesday, August 4th, 1891,

for the erection a bridge across the St. Joe river in Stafford township, called the Webster bridge. Span of bridge 150 feet, roadway 16 feet. Contractor has to furnish plans and specifications with bids.

Bidders for the erection of the new bridge to also make a proposal for the old one, and take it down themselves.

Also at the same time bids will be received for a stone abutment for above named bridge, according to plans and specifications on file in the Auditor's office of said county.

A certified check for five hundred dollars, or good and sufficient bond, to have two sureties residing in the County, to be approved by the board of commissioners must accompany each bid, as a guarantee that the bidder will enter into contract within five days if the contract is awarded him. On entering into contract, good and sufficient security according to law will be required.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids

JOHN HOFELDER,
President of Board.

The Old Iron Brigade.

This famous brigade will have its annual reunion at Detroit, August 4, and 5, as is seen by a letter from its secretary, Capt. Jones, to F. C. Waterman. Fred. was a member of the Second Wisconsin, one of the fine regiments that constituted this fighting brigade, and Mr. Jones was his captain. The 19th Indiana was one of the regiments, of which we remember C. K. Baxter, now in Kansas, and Marshall Ingraham, probably at Wolf Lake, Noble county, as members. If other names are remembered, some comrade will confer a favor by sendidg us the names and address, and we will forward a copy of the COURIER. Capt. Jones' letter reads:

Comrade F. C. Waterman: It has been determined that our next reunion will be held in Detroit, Mich., August 4, and 5, thus giving a central point for the five regiments comprising the brigade. The 24th Michigan will be out in full force. Now if the three Wisconsin regiments and the 19th Indiana regiment do their duty, we will have the most complete reunion ever held by our Association. Will you be with us? Headquarters will be at the Superior Court Room, Market Building. The G. A. R. Encampment is to be held during the same week, and the railroad fare will be low.

By order W. W. JONES,
Sec'y. Iron Brigade Ass'n.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO? It is a solid handsome cake of scouring soap which has no equal for all cleaning purposes except in the laundry. To use it is to value it...

What will SAPOLIO do? Why it will clean paint, make oil-cloths bright, and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. It will take the grease off the dishes and off the pots and pans. You can scour the knives and forks with it, and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a clever housekeeper and try it.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

From a report made by S. W. Sprott at the April term of collections from licenses, we find clock peddlers paid $10, tavern keepers $36, and merchants $60. Just why the clock peddlers and merchants should have required a license to ply their calling does not appear unless it was a "tariff for revenue only" but as each town had its bar the equity of license was as just then on the tavern keeper as it is on the saloon keeper, and, to-day, the object is repression and revenue. The expense of elections was $16, and assessor Baxter was allowed $142.50 for assessing the county and taking the enumeration.

The county at this date had an indebtedness of $385.64¾, and an examination of the treasury June 1st, 1850, found the following assets of the county: Road receipts $820.67; discharged state tax certificates $3 75; probate certificates $6.00; school tax orders $20.10; town orders $2 00; county orders $328.02; certificates of deposit $47.49; uncurrent paper funds $44.00; current paper funds $31; gold and silver $512.22.

We see that road receipts comprise about 40 per cent., available funds about 33 per cent. and depreciated or worthless bank notes 2½ per cent. of the sum total of $1,815.25.

It does not seem that the people of the present generation realize their great good fortune to live at a time when our currency, whatever its character, greenbacks, silver or gold certificates or national currency is exchangeable anywhere in these many and great Udited States, without discount, for gold or silver. They do not know as the old settlers learned to know by bitter experience that unsecured wildcat currency, received for their merchantable commodities was constantly fluctuating in value and no certainty of being of any value from one day till another and of no use, beyond a certain territory, thus causing exchanges and brokerage and constant loss to the fortunate yet unfortunate posessor.

The war was a great civil convulsion and accomplished much good. Not the least of the benefits it conferred was the supply through government of a well secured currency never at a discount now and rarely counterfeited. The, first National bank of Auburn, strong in its resources, its notes circulating from Maine to Oregon and exchangeable for gold anywhere, contrasts vividly with those days of irredeemable currency, and it is to be hoped that the day of the "shinplaster" has forever gone by.

The year 1850, a justice of the peace was assigned to Union township, to reside in Auburn. Election was held in September and Wyllys Griswold was chosen to fill that office and speedily entered upon his duties. Auburn has continued to have a resident justice since that time and later the number was doubled. Isaac Hague and Jacob Walborn, the latter successor to Samuel W. Ralston, are present incumbents of the position.

In the fall of 1850, Oliver D. Keep became commissioner for the 1st district and William Showers was elected in place of Mr. Goetchius.

Mr. Ralston who had been serving as sheriff having been elected county treasurer qualified as such in September, 1850, giving bond in the sum of $35,000, with the following named bondsmen: N. Payne, Thomas Ford, P. Finke, M. Waterman, William Clark, John Shull and Alfred Sheets.

Mr. Waterman appointed T. R. Dickinson, deputy auditor, and Mr. Ralston at the same time appointed him deputy treasurer and he was qualified before the board of county commissioners.

W. K. Straight was sheriff at the time. The commissioners obtained a seal whose device is a standing grain sheaf upon which rest plow and rake, and shutters were authorized for windows of the treasurer's office for further security of the office.

It does not appear that any safe had been procured, and the insecurity which the office in 1867 revealed when the treasury was robbed renders it doubtful whether shutters were not more of a protection than safes.

The large sums now raised by taxation are deposited subject to check in the various banks of the county and the security thus obtained for public funds can only be appreciated when some official, trusting to the safe and time lock, goes to his office some Monday morning and finds the doors open, the money gone, the treasury bankrupt and the people robbed. In 1850, shutters, presumably wooden, were deemed sufficient protection and in the absence of banking facilities was the best that could be done.

A Prominent Farmer.

Mr. Nicholas Wagoner, of Monroe, Ind., gives us the following statement in regard to Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. He says: I have used a great many different kinds of medicines for bronchitis, a disease I have had for the last ten years, and found nothing that would relieve me until I commenced to use Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. I took ten 50c. bottles of this medicine and was entirely cured, and can recommend it to any person that is suffering from this disease.

TENNESSEE MINERS' STRIKE.

A special from Nashville, Tenn., dated the 23d inst., says: Six hundred troops are now at Knoxville, but they will not be sent to Briceville, and the miners are masters of the situation. The authorities are anxious to send troops forward, but it has been decided that they have not the power. Attorney General Pickett's decision holds that the Governor has no power to send troops into Anderson County in the absence of a call for a posse by the Sheriff, which has not and will not be made. Gov. Buchanan and Attorney General Pickett left for Knoxville. It is understood that the purpose of the Governor's visit is to make another attempt to pacify the miners and secure a peaceable settlement. As there is no probability of having the Sheriff of Anderson County re-enter the field, this is the last resort. If it fails, the Governor will call an extra session of the Legislature immediately and leave the matter in the General Assembly's hands. This would be necessary if the miners fail to make peace, as the Governor cannot settle the question by force in the absence of the Sheriff.

Coal Creek (Tenn.) special: At a secret meeting held at Briceville by the miners, the following appeal to the public and the Governor was made:

"You can't do too much for the State. From the moment the Governor calls an extra session of the Legislature to abolish the convict lease system, all opposition to the law will cease in this county. This is absolutely the best we can assure and is in no sense a threat or attempt to intimidate and is given publicity that much probable trouble may be avoided, as many miners of families are destitute and the importation of convict labor means the abandonment of their homes and the loss of the hard earnings of years.

MAN HUNTING.

Kentucky Merchants, Mechanics and Professional Men Suspend Business to Lynch a Negro.

When Negro Sam Pullman's assault on Mrs. Thomas Glenn became generally known at Shelbyville, Ky., business of all kinds was suspended and the citizens took up the exciting pastime of man hunting. The hemp patch, in which Pullman was hiding, was quickly surrounded. Every man was armed with a shooting-iron and every tenth man was supplied with a long piece of rope. By crawling close to a rail fence the negro managed to elude the vigilence of the huntsmen, however. Then the party divded itself into groops of three and six and in the afternoon Pullman was captured near Lawrenceburg. He was placed in the jail at that place, and after night fall Sheriff Long, with twenty guards, started back to Shelbyville with him. A crowd of curious people followed. When the officers had gotten about two miles on the road from Lawrenceburg, "the best citizens of Shelbyville" overtook them, and without resistance quickly lynched the negro.

Indians Want the Cash.

Indian Agent Schuller, who is at the White Earth Chippewa Agency in Minnesota, telegraphs the Indian office that the Chippewa Indians to a man declined to accept oxen or wagons or anything else in lieu of cash for the $150,000 which the Government owes them. Commissioner Morgan declined to pay cash, as the money, he claims, would be squandered on Indian traders. It is likely, however, that the government authorities will have to yield, for this usually peaceable tribe threatens trouble to the Minnesota settlers if they are not paid in cash.

The entire force of yard switchmen, night and day men, on the Big Four road at Springfield, Ohio, thirty-eight in number, went out on a strike, and local trains are tied up. The strike was occasioned by the refusal of Superintendent Rose, of the Cincinnati division of the Big Four, to advance the wages of the men to the Cincinnati scale.

Stabbed His Rival.

Wm. Heislop was probably fatally stabbed at Fairview, Pa., a small village near the summit of Wilkesbarre mountain, by George Alliebough. Both had been paying attention to a woman and Alliebough stabbed Heislop in the presence of the girl because she accepted the latter. Alliebough is still at large.

An Overdue Steamer.

Great excitement is felt at Tacoma, Wash., regarding the overdue tea ship Guy C. Goss, which sailed from Japan loaded with a $500,000 cargo of tea on June 10. She is forty days out, while the trip is usually made in about thirty. Reported storms on the ocean tend to increase the anxiety.

Farmer Killed in the Field.

Frederick Geer, living near La Porte, Ind., while hauling wheat from a field, was thrown down in front of the heavily loaded wagon by a sudden start of his team. One of the wheels passed over his head, and he received injuries from which he died. He was one of the oldest and best-known farmers in the county.

A Lynching in Prospect.

A Springfield, Ohio, special says that a party of enraged men are scouring the country near Vienna, Clark County, O., searching for Albert Nutter, a mulatto, charged with outrageously assaulting the daughter of Henry Slentz.

The "Black Pearl" Wins.

In the finish fight at Minneapolis, between John Ellingsworth, of New York, middleweight ex-champion of America, and Harris Martin, better known as the "Black Pearl," of Minneapolis. Ellingsworth was knocked out by Pearl in the fifth round.

Have Captured Pope.

William F. Pope, the defaulting State Treasurer of Tennessee was arrested in the City of Mexico. He will be held for a requisition by the Tennessee authorities.

Fishermen Frustrated by La Grippe.

Quebec special: The Canadian gulf fisheries this season are a total failure, at least so far as the northern shore and the Magdalen Islands are concerned. Official information has been received by the Dominion Agency of Fisheries here from an agent on Grindstone Island, who writes that the spring school of cod passed the island while the entire population was down with la grippe, and that none could be caught. For the same reason lobsters, which were very abundant, could not be taken. The factories have all closed down, after sustaining serious losses. The agent writes that unless the autumn fishing is good, there will be dire distress on the island next winter. Since June 5 there have been seventy-five deaths on the island from la grippe.

AN INDIANA LYNCHING.

A special from Spencer, Ind., dated the 20th inst., says: Early this morning Sheriff Johnson was called by some unknown person outside the jail, and throwing up the window he asked what was wanted. Two men stood below, with a third between them, and one of the former replied that they had a prisoner whom they wished to place in jail. Descending in his nightshirt the sheriff opened the door, and immediately some forty or fifty men rushed in upon him, threw a blanket over his head and in a moment had him securely bound and gaged. They then demanded and secured the keys to the various cells and began a search, evidently looking for Frank Dice, who had been in jail for several days awaiting trial on a charge of murdering a man named Chaney. Not a word was spoken by any one of the men till Dice's cell was reached. The prisoner had been aroused by the heavy tread of the mob, and was crouched in one corner of the cell. As the door swung open he uttered a low groan as if conscious of what was coming, and a moment later he was brought into the corridor. Dice was then told that his hour had come, and he was asked if he had anything to say. While still trying to talk, a member of the mob threw a small cord around his neck and he was drawn up to one of the cross beams in front of his cell. The mob tarried a few moments until satisfied life was extinct, and then quietly left the jail and passed out of town.

DEFY LAW.

Tennessee Miners Are Up in Arms.

A special from Chattanooga, dated the 22nd inst., says: The mining region was the scene of renewed rioting; growing out of the employment of convict labor. An armed band of miners and farmers surrounded the Briceville mine, and forced a company of Chattanooga militia to withdraw with the convicts in their charge. After the departure of the troops the mob began every sort of violence.

After the release of the convicts at Briceville this morning and the troops and convicts had been placed on the train, the mob went to the mines of the Knoxville Iron Company and surrounded the stockade and captured the 125 convicts there with the guards, which they shipped away to Knoxville. All convicts are now there in an old building under guard. A call by some labor leaders has been issued for a mass meeting. It is reported that the miners at Oliver Springs have released the 130 convicts The excitement at Knoxville is intense. Streets are crowded and a diversity of opinion is heard. Many of the laboring men say the miners have done right.

Memphis special: The Governor has called out the State militia and companies are now being hurried to the mining district. The miners are armed and trouble is feared as the strikers declare their families are starving and hoot at the idea of interference from the "spider-legged, cigarette-smoking dudes," as they characterized the militia.

CRUELLY MURDERED.

As Miss Christie Warden, accompanied by her mother and her sister Fannie, and Louise Goodell, were returning on foot to their home, located one mile from the village of Hanover, N. H., Frank Almy, about 30 years of age, jumped into the road in front of them and, seizing Christie by the arm, said, "I want you." The mother and sister attempted to defend her. Almy fired at them but missed. They ran for assistance. Then Almy dragged his victim to the bushes from the road and shot her twice through the head, one shot tearing out her left eye. When help arrived the girl was dead and her body was stripped of nearly every article of clothing. Almy had fled. Miss Warden was a beautiful and most estimable young woman about 25 years old, a graduate of the State normal school, and a popular teacher. Almy was a former employe of her father, and his attention to Miss Christie had been repulsed. She was the daughter of Andrew A. Warden, a wealthy farmer and leading citizen. Sheriff Foster is sending out searching parties in all directions. Almy is about five feet ten inches tall, has a dark mustache, and is of pleasing address and well educated. The father of the murdered girl offers $500 for the capture of the murderer. The town will undoubtedly offer an additional reward.

IT'S A GO THIS TIME.

Miss Van Zandt, the Proxy Wife of August Spies, Married.

Miss Nina Van Zandt was married at the residence of her parents, 221 Shiller street, Chicago, to Signor Salvatore Stefano Malato, of Palermo, Italy. Only a few intimate friends and relatives of the couple were present at the ceremony. Before the marriage Miss Van Zandt, radiant and beautiful, sat in the parlor of the home she is about to leave, and for the first time told the true but romantic story of her love for August Spies and of her strange proxy marriage to the leader of the Chicago anarchists, who, with others, went to an ignominious death on the gallows. This story was called out by the published statement of Capt. Black, principal counsel for Spies, denying that he proposed the marriage scheme in order to create sympathy for his client. Miss Van Zandt declares that she was coerced by Capt. Black to enact the dramatic part she took in the anarchist tragedy. She deeply regrets the step she took, and says it was the folly of an impressionable and sentimental school girl, over-persuaded by a lawyer with a very glib tongue.

OKLAHOMA BOOMERS.

A Number of Destitute Intruders Starving in Texas.

Washington special: Gov. Hogg, of Texas, the other day received a telegram from Mr. Isaac Roberts, the Mayor of Burlington, Texas, saying that the Indian Territory authorities were landing in Texas hundreds of destitute intruders who were refused admittance into Oklahoma. The Mayor said they would be a great burden to the people, as many of them were entirely destitute. He asked the Governor if something could not be done to prevent any more persons coming. Gov. Hogg, on account of the Mayor's message, sent a telegram to Secretary Noble, asking him to investigate the matter and to take such action as may be necessary to protect the Texas citizens from such impositions if they exist. The matter is now under consideration by the officers of the Indian Bureau who will take steps to ascertain if the persons referred to originally came from Texas. They are probably some of those persons who have been ejected from the Chickasaw nation's lands because they were intruders.

Fierce Forest Fires.

Oshkosa (Wis.) special: People returning from upper Michigan say that terrible forest fires, the worst ever known in that region, are now raging there. So hot are the flames that when the trains are passing through them it is impossible for a person to put his head out of a window without being burned. Pilot engines are sent ahead of regular trains to see that bridges are all right. Deer and rabbits follow the trains for miles in the hope of escaping the fiery furnace.

THE WORLD'S HARVEST.

Russia and Italy Short on all Crops, While America and England Have an Abundance.

The London Times summarizes the harvest prospects of the world as follows: "In Russia there is a grave deficit, the peasantry are starving and there is small hope of relief. In India there is serious anxiety, as famine prevails over a considerable portion of the country. Madras, Rajputna and Punjaub are the worst sufferers. There is drought in Bengal, and the need of more rain is urgent. Bombay alone promises a good harvest. The American harvest will be good in quality and amount, but with the failure of the Indian and Russian supplies, it is more important that the English crop shall not be short. The prospect, on the whole, is good. In the chief wheat counties, Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk, the crop is above the average, and in other counties it is up to the average. The harvest will be late and prices will be high. There is, therefore, a good outlook for the English farmer to break the long series of disastrous years."

Leprosy in New York.

New York special: A Chinese leper named Chin Hop Sing, has been discovered in a laundry at No. 403 Fifth street, where he has been washing linen for East-siders for the past seven months. Dr. Dillingham, who has charge of the bureau of contagious diseases, after convincing himself that it was a genuine case of leprosy, reported the case to Dr. Bryan, the Medical Commissioner of the Board of Health, who told him that there was no room for lepers at North Bothers Island and the Board has no other place for them. The Board is committed to the theory that leprosy cannot arise from contact.

The Nickel Plate.

Chicago special: If current reports can be relied on Chicago will soon have practically a new passenger route to New York. The New York, Chicago & St. Louis road, popularly known as the Nickel Plate, is, it is said, to be thoroughly equipped as a first-class passenger road, and, in conjunction with the West Shore from Buffalo, will run several through trains daily between Chicago and New York. Several of these trains are to be fast solid vestibuled trains, made up in a style which will outshine those on the old routes, magnificent as some of them are.

Flown from the Cage.

Jim Anderson, the notorious burglar, who was arrested with his pal, George Duncan, on February 8, after a terrific battle with the police, escaped from the county jail at Cincinnati. A dummy was found in Anderson's cot and a rope and two or three wire lock picks were left in his cell. The prisoner evidently had the assistance of friends on the outside and the jail officials suspect he was aided in his flight by some one inside the walls. An investigation is in progress.

Will Give His Whole Attention to the Fair.

Pres. William T. Baker, of the World's Columbian Exposition and of the Chicago Board of Trade, has concluded to close up his business on the Board, this action he says, is taken in order that he may devote his entire time to his duties as President of the Exposition, which have for some months demanded the greater portion of his time. He will not, however, resign his office as President of the Board.

Fire in a Mine.

Marquette (Mich.) special: Fire started in No. 5 shaft in the Great Republic iron mine. The entire force of the mine was summoned, but not before the fire became unmanageable. The lumber in Nos. 5 and 6 shaft is now burning fiercely. The fire is spreading underground, and part of No. 5 shaft has already caved in. The night shift men escaped by another shaft. The Republic employs nearly a thousand men.

Fire at Sea.

Boston special: The tug "William Spurgeon," while twenty-five miles east of Scituate, discovered the British bark "Olive Mount," Capt. Foley in charge, for Scalteo, Ga., was on fire and abandoned. The tug put out the fire and towed the vessel here. The bark is damaged about $2,000.

The Navajos Are Quiet.

Telegrams received at the War Department from Flagstaff, Ari., state that no immediate trouble is apprehended from the Navajo Indians. Their chief, however, has only been released on bail and new complications may arise when he is brought to trial.

The Sons' Revenge.

At a little mining station in Ohio on the Ohio Southern road, a couple named Eisman, while dead drunk, set fire to their cabin and were burned. Their sons immediately killed the saloonist who sold them the liquor.

Drowned.

Henry Daniels, of LaPorte, Ind., fell out of a boat while pleasure riding on Stone Lake and drowned before his companions could render him any aid. The body was recovered.

President Diaz Very Ill.

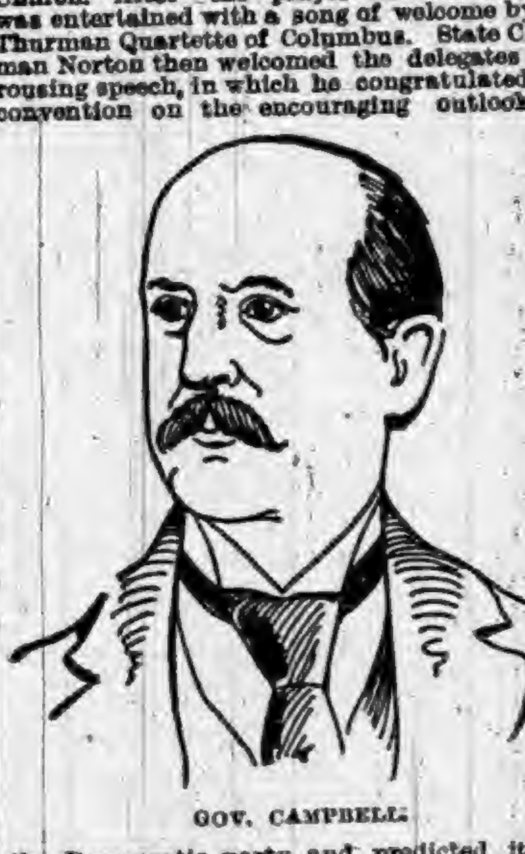
The beautiful music hall of Cleveland (the Forest City) looked like a veritable fairy grotto. Red, white and blue bunting in fantastic designs enveloped the pillars, and the railing of the balconies until not an inch of the corridors was visible; the platform was banked with tiers of majestic palms and noble chrysanthemums, over which the mouths of big brass cannon frowned ominously, and huge baskets of Mareschal Niel roses shed their fragrance from the tables allotted to the press. From the glass dome of the hall depended a magnificent floral design with the inscription in white violets: "Democrats of Ohio, Welcome to Cleveland." A monster American flag, and a profusion of choice exotics made an appropriate background to the stage, while from the roof and supports countless hundreds of star spangled banners fluttered in the breeze created by electric fans. Tubs of lemonade to a total of five hundred gallons were ranged about the hall at points most convenient to the respective delegations.

When the doors were thrown open it seemed but a few minutes before every one of the five thousand or more seats had its occupant. From the rear of the stage a large number of ladies viewed the proceedings with interest. As a prelude to the formal proceedings, the combined bands in the balcony rendered a medley of national airs, and afterward—prompt to the minute—State Chairman John S. Norton called the gathering to order. The blessing and protection of the Creator was invoked by Rev. Dr. T. W. Campbell, pastor of the Cleveland First Methodist Episcopal Church. After the prayer the convention was entertained with a song of welcome by the Thurman Quartette of Columbus. State Chairman Norton then welcomed the delegates in a rousing speech, in which he congratulated the convention on the encouraging outlook for the Democratic party, and predicted its triumph in the coming election. He then took up the McKinley bill, and devoted the greater part of his remarks to that measure, saying:



GOV. CAMPBELL.

"To-day you meet to demand that the wrongs that the people have suffered for more than a quarter of a century shall be righted and not perpetuated; that the clutch of the protectionist freebooter shall be loosened from the throat of the nation; that the foot of the oppressor shall be removed from the necks of the laboring millions, and that in a free country under a free flag the people shall be free from the despoliation of their homes and the impoverishment of their children by the law that is no more to be honored than the levy of the bandit and buccaneer. They (the Republicans) met, as they say, to 'emphasize and courageously defend the principle of protection,' that principle that for twenty-five years and more has been undermining the life foundations of our Government; a principle, as applied by men, that has almost nullified the blessings vouchsafed to the people by an all-wise and beneficent Creator; a principle that has made the rich and fertile acres of our husbandmen almost as worthless to them as the sand desert of Sahara; a principle that has closed the markets of the world to the most productive and busy country of the earth; a principle that has centralized the wealth of the nation until it rests in the vaults of the arrogant monopolists who to-day fix the price of all our necessities; a principle that is antagonistic to the interests of the millions, beneficial only to the few; a principle opposed to reason, justice, intelligence, education and Christian decency.

"They say that the author of this law that is the acme of this principle is a good man, kind, generous and gentle. I believe that it is so. More than that, he is my friend. I would to God that his law was so good and harmless and gentle and kind as he. But alas, it is not so. McKinley may be as the dove or even the bird of paradise, but his law is as the hawk, the vulture and the coyote. They say McKinley is an honest man; I grant that he is, and all honor to him for being so, but his measure is a burglar, without heart and without mercy, who robs alike the helpless child, the strong man and the defenseless woman. McKinley law, monument of wrong whose every stone is from the quarry of oppression, whose dwarfing shadows fall athwart every threshold in the land—how long, oh, how long must your blighting curse be endured? How long can you stand upon your false foundations against the fierce blasts of reason and the rocking storms of indignant justice? May this convention be potent in hurling you into the deep sea of the dead past and hide your hideousness in eternal oblivion."

As Chairman Norton concluded with his touching eulogy of Allen G. Thurman the delegates and spectators broke into enthusiastic applause, and when Allen W. Thurman was introduced as the temporary presiding officer and the tall majestic form of the son of Ohio's "Old Roman" appeared before the footlights, the enthusiasm was intensified tenfold. Not until they were exhausted did the thousands cease their plaudits, and then in clear, ringing tones, the temporary chairman began his address. As he proceeded every telling point was punctuated with cheers and shouts of approval. It was a most successful entree to that political stage to which his venerated parent bade farewell a few months since. Mr. Thurman said:

"In his speech nominating Major McKinley, Governor Foraker said that even the wiles of the devil seemed unable to kill the Democratic party, which undoubtedly meant that it will never be destroyed by the Republican party. Evidently the fact must have occurred to him that this grand old Democratic party has seen the birth, growth, and death of every political organization that has ever arisen in this country. Now, an organization that cannot be killed, even by the evil spirit, must be immortal; that is, it can never die, and in the end it will certainly put all of its enemies under its feet, including Major McKinley and the Republican party.

"In a few weeks the Democracy of Ohio will by its ballots most emphatically condemn an industrial policy that is a continual barrier to commercial prosperity; they will demonstrate that they no longer believe that the only way by which a country can be made rich is by buying from itself and selling to itself; they will also show that they do not believe a country can be made rich by excessively taxing itself; they will, in thunder tones, denounce the wanton extravagance and wastefulness of a party which, in two short years, by profligate expenditure completely wiped out the tremendous surplus of $140,000,000 which had accumulated under the honest, economical, Democratic administration of Grover Cleveland."

The speaker criticised the policy of the Republican party in raising the average rate of duties from 47 to 57 per cent.; in clothing the President of the United States with unconstitutional powers; in his pernicious class legislation, driving the American marine off the high seas; in assisting England in her attempt to establish monometalism; in adding in a short time 2,000 names to the list of officeholders; in blocking all legislation for months, in an endeavor to enact an infamous, villainous and partisan force bill. Speaking upon reciprocity, Mr. Thurman said:

"The time is near when the people will express their belief in complete and not restricted reciprocity; if reciprocity—which has always been a Democratic, not a Republican, doctrine—is a good thing with South America, why would it not be a better thing with Canada and Europe, countries with which our trade is a hundredfold greater than with South America? The time has also come when the people will say to the powers that be, the honest workingman shall no longer be compelled by law to contribute a part of his hard-earned savings to help maintain those who, under the forms of law, have robbed him for over a quarter of a century; when they will no longer sustain any party which levies and collects one dollar of taxes over and above that which is required to wisely and economically administer the affairs of the Government; when they will give due notice that infant industries that have been nursed for a hundred years have arrived at the age when they must take care of themselves; when they will brand a protective tariff as stealing, its advocates as beggars, and demand that we must have a tariff for revenue only.

"The greatest curse that can be inflicted upon a country is that of excessive taxation, and when collected indirectly by a tariff, levied only for the sake of protection, it steals and saps away the very life-blood of a country's prosperity. And it does this by such insidious ways that the true causes of commercial depression, when it comes, are lost sight of, and in seeking remedies the people are led off into false trails, made to scatter instead of concentrating their forces and thus their power is wasted; therefore, no matter how important they may appear, let all side issues alone until this one of taxation is settled upon an honest and just basis.

"I most earnestly beseech the farmers, whose interests are identically the same as my own to follow this course. The wild schemes of Government loaning money upon warehouse certificates, or upon lands, the taking possession of the railways and telegraphs by the Government, the internal improvements that are demanded and a dozen other minor issues that all lead, not only to greater taxation, but the rankest kind of socialism, I say to them, put to one side and stick to the tariff issue until you get what is due you.

"I say to the farmers, do not, like protectionists, be beggars, but rely upon your own strength, resources and manhood. Advocate nothing that has the least semblance of stealing by law, and 'by the eternal' make these tariff beggars quit stealing in this way from you.

"On this issue the right is absolutely on our side, and the challenge having been fairly given by the nomination of the high chief of protection—Maj. McKinley—let us meet it, and make every hilltop and every valley in the whole State ring with the battle cry, 'industrial freedom for the many.' Can you doubt the result? Do you believe the people of this State will say by their votes that they are still willing to pay tribute for imaginary and fraudulent blessings? That they can any longer be deceived by the old, worn-out cry of a home market? That the people of this State can be gulled by telling them what a good thing it is for the people of the United States to be permitted by their Government, when they pretend to be freemen, to sell a very small portion of their surplus products to one part of the globe and what a ruinous thing it would be for them to be allowed to sell all of them to another portion of it?

"From time immemorial commerce and trade, which are only the exchanging of commodities, have been sought after by all people and considered beneficial by all nations. In all exchanges in the long run there must be a profit; why then limit these exchanges? If the people of this country can make $100,000,000 each year by exchanging their products for those of some other country wouldn't they be fools to indorse a policy which permits them to exchange only enough to make $50,000,000? I say let the people themselves decide where and with whom it would be beneficial to trade and not let the Government decide this for them."

The speaker continued at length to discuss the tariff law in its relation to the farmer and the industrial classes and dwelt in stirring language upon the tin-plate iniquity, and concluded by saying that last fall the protected classes poured out money like water, intimidated workmen and strained every nerve to carry the McKinley district. In conclusion he said:

"Thanks to our Democratic Legislature, they cannot again duplicate this iniquity in Ohio, for that Legislature passed an election law under which fraud and intimidation can no longer be used to corrupt and destroy the freedom of the ballot. Democrats, see that this law is enforced in every voting precinct in the State. See, too, that it is preserved in the future, for upon its maintenance not only does the success of your party depend but the integrity of your institutions.

"Intrenched monopoly will not surrender without making a desperate struggle; therefore, I implore every man in this convention to work after he leaves here with his whole soul for our success. Let no personal differences or feelings of disappointment in any way deter you, but be diligent, be active, be alert; organize in every school district, and above all be courageous; let there be no dodging upon the issue; this is no time for the faint-hearted, but a time when honest, true and brave men should be willing to fight with their whole power for what they know to be right."

Mr. Thurman's closing remarks, in which he urged the party to be united and harmonious, were almost drowned in applause. From the Committee on Permanent Organization came a report submitting the name of ex-Congressman Frank Le Blond, of Mercer, as permanent presiding officer. It was adopted with a hurrah. Mr. Le Blond spoke briefly, but to the point. He told the delegates that they were the representatives of the intelligence of the State, and that Thomas Jefferson, had he lived to this day, would have been proud of them and of the Democratic party as it now exists. This and the usual thanks was all.

Under the new State election law it is necessary that each party shall select a device to be placed upon its printing, and Major W. W. Armstrong propo ed that the Democracy should adopt a barnyard rooster. Some of the delegates preferred the American flag, but it was explained that this was prohibited by the statute, and Armstrong's resolution was adopted with a chorus of "crows."

The delegates then settled back in their seats to listen to the report of the Committee on Resolutions, which was presented by Gen. G. B. Finley, who pathetically lamented the fact that although the majority had labored with the minority in and out of season, they had not been able to get a unanimity of sentiment on the silver question. The majority report read as follows:

"The Democracy of Ohio, in convention assembled, hereby resolve that we most heartily indorse the honesty and economy of the administration of Gov. James E. Campbell, and commend the Sixty-ninth General Assembly for its business qualifications, economy and reform, and especially for having provided for a secret ballot by which every voter can cast his ballot in secret as he desires and have his vote counted as cast; and we invite attention to the fact that the Republican party, though hypocritically professing to favor 'a free ballot and fair count,' yet opposed and voted against the bill for providing for a free and secret ballot, thus demonstrating its professions to be insincere and for political effect only; and we cordially indorse and approve the act of the Legislature regulating the compensation of county officers by providing for a fixed salary.

"We are opposed to all class legislation and believe in a tariff levied for the sole purpose of producing a revenue sufficient to defray the legitimate expenses of the Government, economically administered. We accept the issues tendered to us by the Republican party on the subject of the tariff, as represented by the so-called McKinley tariff act, confident that the verdict of the people of Ohio will be recorded against the iniquitous policy of so-called protection championed by the Republican party in the interest of favored classes against the masses.

"We favor a graded income tax. We denounce the demonetization of silver in 1873 by the party then in power as an iniquitous alteration of the money standard in favor of the creditors and against debtors, taxpayers, producers, and which, by shutting off one of the sources of supply of primary money, operates continually to increase the value of gold, depress prices, hamper industry, and disparage enterprise; and we demand the reinstatement of the constitutional standard of both gold and silver with the equal right of each to free and unlimited coinage.

"We denounce the Republican billion dollar Congress, which by its extravagant expenditures exhausted a surplus in the National Treasury left there by a Democratic administration and created a deficit; which substituted despotic rule for free discussion in the House of Representatives, and we congratulate the people on the defeat of the odious force bill demanded by a Republican President and championed by the Republican party for the purpose of perpetuating its rule by perverting the constitutional powers of the government, destroying free elections and placing the ballot box in the hands of unscrupulous partisans, in order, as declared by Speaker Reed, 'to register the voters, supervise the elections, count the ballots and declare the result.'

"We are opposed to the enactment of all laws which unnecessarily interfere with the habits and customs of our people which are not offensive to the moral sentiments of the civilized world, and we believe that the personal rights of the individual should be curtailed only when it is essential to the maintenance of the peace, good order, and welfare of the community.

"We favor the passage of such laws by the General Assembly as will give us a system for the government of our municipalities uniform throughout the State, as the Constitution requires, in which the executive and legislative power shall be separated, the former to be lodged in a mayor and the latter in a council, both to be elected by the people, thereby realizing the principle of home rule, safe from the dangers and evils of special legislation.

"We favor closer commercial relations with our Canadian neighbors and the removal of the embarrassing and annoying restrictions which only vex our people without yielding any substantial revenue to the Government.

"We favor liberal and just pensions to deserving and disabled soldiers and sailors who fought for the maintenance of the Government and like pensions to their widows and orphan children.

"The persecution of the Jewish people by the Russian Government justly deserves and receives our unqualified censure. We extend to them our sincere sympathy, and believe that this Government, in connection with the enlightened Governments of Europe disposed to unite with us, should take proper steps to alleviate the wrongs thus inflicted on this long-suffering and oppressed people."

All the planks were greeted with applause, especially that referring to the administration of Governor Campbell.

A minority report opposed the graduated income tax, and favored the coinage of gold and silver on a parity, but this report was rejected by a vote of 899 to 300.

The name of Lawrence T. Neal for Governor was then presented by ex-Congressman Follett; he was followed by S. D. Dodge, of Cleveland, who named Virgil P. Kline; but when General Ryan proposed the name of Gov. James E. Campbell for renomination the convention broke forth in wild cheers of approbation.

Campbell	508 7-16
Neal	124 9-16

Gov. Campbell was conducted to the platform amid a perfect storm of applause. When quiet had been restored he said:

"While gratefully accepting a second nomination from the Democratic party of Ohio, my thoughts naturally revert to the record and achievements of that party since the memorable Dayton convention. Victorious in the ensuing election, the Ohio Democracy has legislated for the State and administered its affairs for eighteen months. In that short period it has destroyed every vestige of the dangerous centralization which has made the office of Governor a menace to the liberties of the people. It has restored to seventeen cities the control of elections. It has provided new and better forms of government in conformity to popular desire for several of the larger cities. It has devoted time and care to the perfection of a law securing secrecy of the ballot, thereby assuring an unbiased and unbought verdict of the people at the polls. This essential reform was frustrated at the first session of the General Assembly by the unanimous vote of the Senators belonging to a political party which recently gathered in convention at Columbus and prated with hollow mockery of a free ballot and a fair count.

"The Democratic party has done more to advance the cause of higher education by its legislation for the Ohio State University and appropriations for the other universities than had been accomplished in all the long history of the State; and it has also been mindful of general education by enacting a salutary law for the cheapening of school books to the children of the poor. It had the courage to attack the excess fee system whereby public officials were excessively compensated, and has substituted a system of just and reasonable salaries. It has especially looked after the welfare of agriculture, which has been continuously imposed upon by Republican Congresses. Sixty thousand dollars was appropriated in one item to provide farmers with the results of agricultural experiments; and laws were passed in their interest with respect to oleomargarine and other products. The great laboring class, which hopelessly appealed to the Republican party, has not been forgotten either, as the institution of Labor Day, important laws for the protection of railroad employes and the establishment of free employment agencies will show.

"The Democratic party has done what lay in its power to rectify our inequitable tax laws and to provide for their improvement by an amendment to the Constitution. It has decreased taxation more than $600,000 a year by the repeal of the sinking fund levy. It found a deficiency in the Treasury of more than $600,000, which was subsequently slightly decreased by us. The timely receipt from the Federal Government of the direct tax fund was all that prevented the startling spectacle of an empty treasury—a direct legacy from former administrations.

"It has been charged that our appropriations have exceeded those of our predecessors. Without stopping for detailed explanation, merely stating that we have not exceeded our income, let us inquire which of the new appropriations our enemies would curtail. I have already named the expenditure in behalf of agriculture and education. Do they attack these? The largest new item of our appropriations was the sum of $200,000 for the Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home. Do they deny the propriety of this? When we came into power the helpless orphans of men who had given all for their country were dying at a rate which shocked and alarmed the public. The administration of that institution had been one of the most personal and partisan in the State. High-minded trustees had been stricken by the chief executive because they did not prefer his interests to those of their dead comrades' children. To restore the health and save the lives of those orphans we were glad to make unprecedented appropriations, and if there be one spot where a citizen of the State will feel a mingled joy and pride it is there in the midst of the 900 happy and healthy children for whom a Democratic administration has freely expended its money. We have built some new and roomy cottages at the Soldiers and Sailors' Home. Do our Republican brethren begrudge the old veterans this additional comfort? We have made large appropriations for completing the new reformatory in the hope of reclaiming young convicts before age and bad associations have hardened them beyond redemption. Does the Republican party criticise the expenditure of money for the prevention of crime? We have provided for an epileptic asylum, and have added to the capacity of the insane asylums and to other benevolent and penal institutions. We are proud of them all. Their management is economical, firm, and efficient. We invite from the taxpayer and the humanitarian searching investigation and thoughtful comparison.

"The electors of Ohio have other reasons for voting with us this year besides such as solely affect this State. The battle before us is essentially a national one. Not only is this true because the result must seriously affect next year's Federal elections, but also because the Republicans of Ohio have unreservedly identified themselves with every phase of the iniquitous legislation accomplished or attempted by the Fifty-first Congress. In their platform they have reaffirmed their adherence to the infamous force bill—the Republican lost cause—a measure so obviously designed to destroy free elections that Republican Senators, unwilling to violate their consciences and their oaths, refused to inflict it upon the country. The Republican party of Ohio appears as the defender of the arbitrary disregard of minority rights which disgraced the last House of Representatives. It upholds the fraudulent unseating of lawfully elected members, the steal of Montana by the Senate, and all the other high-handed outrages by which that party has sought to perpetuate its power against the wishes of the people. It represents the reckless extravagance and astounding profligacy which have dissipated the splendid Democratic surplus; forced the extension of national bonds and compelled an Ohio Secretary of the Treasury to resort to tricks of bookkeeping and subterfuges unworthy of his office in order to conceal a deficit and deceive the people.

"Pre-eminently also does the Republican leader in Ohio (whose high character and conspicuous career but emphasize his advocacy of bad legislation) stand for that pernicious tariff measure which was rejected at the polls last year by the people of the entire country; a measure identified by his name, saturated with his ideas and wrought by his hands, and a measure designated, as has been well said, in the interest of 'monopoly for monopoly,' a measure which is bringing about the worst of all centralizations—the centralization of wealth, with its debasing and destructive results; a measure which has already in many cases made less work and lower wages for productive labor; a measure which has forced the farmer of Ohio to sell his wool in some instances as low as 20 cents a pound, and that, too, in a market where he pays more dearly for hundreds of necessary articles which are but insufficiently sweetened with the humbug of bounty produced sugar; a measure which forces from the labor of the country $14,000,000 each year for the benefit of prospective tin mines owned by capitalists who live in England and prospective tin plate works to be operated by labor imported from Wales; a measure which, as it came from the hands of its author, did not, in the opinion of an eminent Republican, 'open a market for another pound of pork or another barrel of flour;' a measure which could not be forced down the throat of a reluctant Senate until sugar-coated with the old Democratic doctrine of reciprocity—a doctrine finally though feebly embodied in the bill in spite of opposition from the great Ohio protectionist.

"In his recent speech of acceptance this same champion of higher protection said: 'We follow the tariff teachings of Washington and Hamilton, of Clay and Webster, of Lincoln and and Garfield.' Let us see how wide of the mark this statement is. The tariff of to-day is at the rate of 57½ per cent.; the tariff of Washington was 7½ per cent.; the protection sought by Clay was for the benefit of 'infant' industries; the tariff to-day increases protection upon industries which have been coddled for more than ninety years; the protection of Garfield was, to quote his own words, 'that kind of protection which leads to ultimate free trade.'

"Let the Republicans of Ohio who have not gone mad on protection come over this year and start with us on the backward march toward the tariff of Washington, or, better yet, enroll themselves under a banner inscribed with those burning words of Garfield. Let the well-meaning men who train under the names of the Farmers' Alliance or People's party, and who seek to remedy real grievances brought about by Republican legislation, remember that no third party can succeed; but with us and as a part of us they can help to swell the joyous hosanna that will peal to heaven from the tax-burdened people of the entire country when the glad tidings go forth next November that we are yet in possession of the old Republican citadel, now the Democratic Buckeye State."

Ex-Congressman Yoder, of Lima, then renominated W. V. Marquis for Lieutenant Governor and he was renominated by acclamation.

The balance of the ticket, as above, was chosen in a very few minutes, and the convention adjourned to enjoy the hospitality of Cleveland's citizens.

How the Grip Travels.

Dr. Parsons of London, has presented to parliament the government report on the recent influenza scourge. The report contains a mass of interesting evidence, but does not solve the problem as to the origin of influenza, nor does it provide any sure prevention of the disease. On the other hand, the report dispels the common idea that influenza is spread by atmospheric conditions, and proves that it is propagated by personal contact. This is shown by the fact that isolated persons, such as those confined in prison, light-house keepers, and others, enjoy immunity from the disease, while the greatest mortality from its effects has been found in large communities. In this connection it is a curious fact that the general postoffice heads the list of "large communities" where the disease has been most prevalent. The "communities" represented by railroad stations, etc., come next to the general postoffice in showing themselves spots where influenza has played sad havoc. The period of incubation is short, sixteen hours to three days being held to be sufficient to account for the simultaneous incidence of a whole community where only one or two people originally suffered from the infection. It is expected that in accordance with precedent the disease will disappear after two successive years of epidemic.

THE timber on our railroads amounted to 516,000,000 ties, or an average of 2,694 per mile of railroad, in use in this country in 1890; 301 ties per mile, or a total of 60,000,000, were annually required for renewals, and 15,000,000 for new construction.

COMES THIS BATCH OF INDIANA NEWS.

A Catalogue of the Week's Important Occurrences Throughout the State—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Suicides, Etc.

—Harry Lewellen, a Muncie boy, was buried in a gravel-pit by a cave-in, but was rescued alive.

—That vinegar and pickle factory Lafayette wants would add 2,500 people to her population.

—Columbus run its electric light plant last year, sixty-eight lights, on a "moon schedule" at a cost of $2,462.37.

—Charley Long, a Monon fireman, got his arm caught between the bumpers of the cars, at Ladoga, and had the flesh torn from the bones.

—The wheat crop yield in Luce Township, Spencer County, this year is estimated at 125,000 bushels, and the best crop ever raised all over the county.

—Near Fern the 3-year-old daughter of John Cox was playing close to a hay-fork which was in operation, when her hands were caught in the pulleys and terribly lacerated.

—Attorney General Smith has rendered and opinion to the effect that all franchises, whether granted by the State or not, to corporations doing business in this State, must be assessed as personal property and taxed accordingly.

—Pearl Birchfield, an 8-year-old girl, of Crawfordsville, fell through a bridge over the Monon Railroad, to the track below, a distance of thirty feet, and received injuries that may result in death. The city will be sued for damages.

—The Town Board of Leavenworth and the citizens are arrayed one against the other, the latter claiming that the Board was illegally elected and withholding payment of taxes until the question of its legality can be passed upon. The trouble springs from improvements ordered by the Board.

—The head of the boiler in the Reasor flouring-mill, at West Fork, blew out, the explosion tearing away the end of the building and the water and steam badly scalding Thomas Gregg, the fireman, who was the only one standing near. Mr. Gregg is scalded from head to foot, but there is hope of his recovery.

—Charles Smith, a druggist of Eminence, Morgan County, was indulging in target practice with a self-acting revolver. He let his arm fall at his side, when the revolver was discharged and the ball penetrated the calf of his leg, ranging downward. The wound is a very painful one, but not necessarily dangerous.

—A party of Crawfordsville people who were out camping near Bluff mills, discovered a small dwelling on fire, and rushed to the rescue. Will Humphreys got on the roof, and while throwing water on the flames the roof gave in and he fell through into the burning house. He was badly injured and slightly burned when his friends rescued him.

—The list of names of revolutionary soldiers who now sleep beneath Spencer County soil has been increased to seven by a late report, which furnishes the names of Thomas Turnham and Henry Wagner. Mr. Turnham was in the battle of Brandywine, died at the age of 86, and was buried at Pigeon Church, about two miles east of Gentryville. Mr. Wagner was buried somewhere in Luce Township about fifty years ago.

—At Muncie, the other night Officer Floyd found the young wife of John Redup, at her home in the outskirts of the city, in a pitiful condition from hunger. Over a week before the woman's husband abandoned his home and little 3-year-old daughter. Mrs. Redup was so much prostrated she preferred death by starvation to begging. The child was ill and would have died if the officer had not discovered the condition of affairs.

—The Indiana Horticultural Society will hold its semi-annual meeting and exhibition in Bloomington on Thursday and Friday, Aug. 13 and 14. Visitors will be guests of the Monroe County Society, and will be shown everything of interest in and near the city, including the stone-quarries. The exhibition of fruit will probably be held in one of the buildings of the State University. Addresses will be delivered by Prof. John W. Coulter, Rev. W. R. Halstead, Mrs. Louise Bolsen, John W. Ragen, and others. For the best collection of fruits, open to every grower in the State, the prizes are: First, $15; second, $10; third, $6; fourth, $4. There are also numerous prizes for the best plates of individual articles.

—In Lagro Township, Wabash County, Charles Lynn, a young farmer, while packing hay in a mow was caught by the rigging and lifted nearly to the roof and then dropped to the floor, sustaining injuries which may prove fatal.

—Jacob Goodrich a well-to-do farmer living southwest of Princeton, was bitten, the latter part of last April, by a young pup belonging to him and taken quite sick, Dr. Long pronouncing it a case hydrophobia. He died the other morning, his death being a horrible one to witness.

—A startling discovery was made at the Northern Indiana Hospital for the Insane at Logansport, when friends called to remove the body of Ira Ewing, of Wabash, who had died. The body had been placed in what was known as the dead-room, and during the night rats had burrowed through the clay floor and mutilated the body in a horrible manner. Both eyes and lips were gone, and other mutilations made the scene sickening. Dr. Rogers, the superintendent, states that this is the first instance of the kind on record, and that every care had been taken to prevent such an occurrence.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

REMEMBER KLINCK IS THE NAME OF THAT Wonderful Remedy

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER VII.

ON THE ROADSIDE.

"Hello! What are you doing here? Who are you?"

Dick sprang to his feet in alarm. He stared curiously at the face peering down at him.

"Haven't you a mouth? I see you have. Can't you speak? What are you doing here?"

"I'd rather not tell."

Dick looked as though he was on the point of running, but a heavy hand was laid on his shoulder.

"See! He wants to make friends with you."

Dick shyly stroked the dog. A magnificent dog he was. Dick never would have believed there was such a big dog in the world. He often recalled Neptune in after years, but he never beheld—probably never will behold—another dog as large as the noble animal that rubbed his shaggy hide against the boy on that morning.

"Well, can't you tell me what you are doing here?"

"You'll tell on me."

"Me! Humph!" said the man. "That ain't in my line."

The man turned and called to someone behind him.

"Only a boy!" said a sweet voice, as a woman approached. "Poor child! What in the world is he doing here?"

"Been sleeping out," said the man sententiously.

"Poor boy. He must be almost frozen."

"Oh, I had plenty of leaves and straw over me and under me!" said Dick, meeting the woman's eyes fearlessly.

"What is it—runaway?"

Dick nodded.

"Where from?"

"The poorhouse. It's true—every word, sir. The man tried to kill me. He beat me so I could not stand it any longer."

"Yes, I believe it," said the man.

"You can see it in the poor boy's face," said the woman. "How pinched he looks!"

"I wish I was dead," said Dick, suddenly.

"Don't say that, poor boy!" said the woman. Then to her companion: "I say, Ben."

They whispered apart. Ben shook his head, but the woman whispered again, and Ben turned back to Dick, produced a flask from a breast pocket, and held it to him.

Dick did as he was ordered to do. The fiery liquor almost strangled him. The man laughed, then said, "Never mind. It will warm you; do you good. Take the dew out of your mouth and—hair. Any friends near here?"

"A good piece off, eh?

"I haven't any friends."

"I mean relatives. Brothers—uncles—aunts—cousins!"

Dick shook his head again.

"You don't mean to say you have no relatives!"

"Not one, that I know of."

"Poor boy!" said the woman.

"I can't understand that," said Ben.

"Didn't the poor lad just tell you he ran away from the poorhouse?"

"Yes—I forgot that. Still—a boy with not a soul that belongs to him. It's rare."

Ben began to ponder, and as he pondered he tapped his nose gently with the stick he held in his hand and handled like a whip.

"What are you going to do?"

"I don't know," said Ben, disconsolately, looking down with a shamed face.

"Where's this poorhouse you speak of."

"Barnesville Poorhouse."

"Barnesville! When did you leave there?"

"Yesterday evening—about—well, I guess it was after five when I ran away for good."

"Five! How long have you been sleeping here?"

"I don't know. It was dark when I crawled into this pen."

"Why, Kate, that's the poorhouse they were talking of the other day; it's more than twenty-five miles from here. And this boy he says he walked——"

"I ran a good deal," interposed Dick.

The woman smiled kindly.

"Well," said Ben, "what do you intend to do now?"

"I don't know—keep on just."

"Well—don't talk about the infernal poorhouse any more, and may be I can help you."

"I'd do any sort of work, sir," said Dick.

"I believe you. I like your face.

"We'll help you all we can," added the woman, who had a bright, kindly face.

The man turned to the woman once more and another whispered consultation was held. Then Ben said to Dick: "You come along with me—follow close behind us if anybody passes."

Dick brushed the loose straw off his cap, and walked on behind them close on their heels. Ben maintained a conversation most of the time.

"Kate here and me was just taking a little walk, and talking over things—holding a council of war, when I seen you lying under that old sheepshed, or pen. We've not had our breakfast yet, and when we get back to the tent, may be a bite won't hurt you a mite, my boy. All I'm particular about is, that I'll not be called a kidnaper because I give you something to keep you from starving."

"A kidnaper," said Dick; "what's that, sir?"

"You haven't the least idea, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Well, a kidnaper is a bad—bad man who steals innocent children and makes circus riders of them. My name's Ben, Ben Brown. What's yours?"

"Dick—Dick Dick!"

"What's that?"

"I mean Richard Dick."

Ben Brown turned around and halted.

"Oh, I see. Funny ain't it, Kate. See here. I'm not going to call you Richard, or Dick, either. I'll call you Double Dick."

"Don't, Ben, it will stick to him if you do."

"What's wrong with Double Dick? It's a distinguishing name. It may do him a world of good. If he's a good man, he'll be easily known, and if he's a bad un, they'll find him all the easier and jug him."

"Is Dick your real name—are you quite sure?" asked the woman.

The three walked along the road a little distance until they came to a stream, near which Dick observed some tents, and a great lot of wagons. One of these was so gorgeous that its bright colors and gilding caught and held Dick's eyes. He could not look at anything else for a time.

"Here we are," said Ben, gayly.

Dick observed a number of roughly dressed men working with horses. He had never seen so many horses in his life. They were all colors and sizes. The men were laughing and talking loudly. One or two women were in the stream, laughing merrily as they threw water on each other.

It was an animated picture. The sun's rays glinted down through the trees on the tents, on the gayly painted wagons and tents.

"What is it?" Dick asked in wonder.

"It ain't possible you don't know?"

Ben stopped short and looked at Dick in a strange way that made him feel uncomfortable.

"No, sir."

Ben turned to his companion.

"You hear? He don't know, and this is the nineteenth century."

"No, sir," Dick repeated.

"He don't know. Think of a boy as old as that who never saw one till now—think of it."

Ben shook his head. The lady also looked at Dick compassionately.

"He ain't lying—he's telling the truth, Kate. Why, Double Dick, that's the greatest—but stop. Let me give it to you just as it is on the bills: 'Buckett's Mammoth Aggregation; a Menagerie, Museum of Wonders and Circus Combined, in which the most celebrated artists of Europe and Africa—'(here Ben made a frightful grimace)—'and the New World are united.'"

"Why can't you tell the poor boy it's a circus?" said the woman.

"Ain't I, as fast as I can? Yes, young man, it's a circus. C-i-r-c-u-s, circus, and you may spell it with a good many cusses if you like."

"Now you are frightening him."

"He don't look scared."

Dick looked rather pleased. Here now was the thing he had heard of hundreds of times. These were the very people who could climb on top of each other's heads and up to poles reaching heavenwards, and stand on their heads. These were the wonderful riders. Where was the clown? O, he would have given a year of his life just to look at the clown.

Dick quaked with terror. Ben laughed loudly at the lad's fear.

"What was it made that noise, sir?"

"That was our Nubian lion."

Ben looked in the direction Dick indicated, and was seized with a fit of laughter that rendered him speechless for a time.

"That ain't a lion—that's an elephant." And then Ben Brown cast a look of pity on poor Dick, akin to that expressed in the woman's eyes.

"Kate, I guess it's a good thing he fell into our hands. Such ignorance in a Christian land is inexcusable."

"Come," said the woman. "Breakfast is ready, I see."

Then they moved on.

CHAPTER VIII.

DICK'S TRANSFORMATION—HE ENCOUNTERS ZEKE CAPER.

"Follow me," said Ben as they turned off the road. When the trio met a group outside of one of the immense tents, who were moving in a body to a long table on which Dick observed a great number of tin plates and tin cups, and great quantities of meat and bread and butter, Ben paused.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Ben, very deliberately, "this is Mr. Dick, a young gentleman who will be my guest for a little while. He was compelled by circumstances to sleep out last night, which will account for his apparent neglect of his toilet. After breakfast he will have more time and inclination to personal adornment."

They all looked at him, but nobody laughed.

Ben seated himself on one side of Dick, and his wife on the other, for by this time Dick had discovered their relationship. A man served them with enormous tin cups full of excellent coffee. The butter was excellent; there was no stint of it, nor of the syrup. There were more griddle cakes than Dick could eat, and he had never ate such such cakes. The meat was tender and juicy. Ben replenished his plate three times, and he and his wife ate heartily. They had enormous appetites. Dick thought there were nearly if not quite as many there as were in Barnesville Poorhouse, but there was enough spread before them to suffice for a whole day at the poorhouse. A whole day! Why, Mr. Caper did not give his people as much in two—to say nothing of the quality of the victuals.

A gentleman with a heavy ring on one hand and red face passed by them. He looked sharply at Dick. Ben Brown immediately spoke up.

"A guest of mine, Mr. Buckett."

"Oh, that's all right."

"No, it isn't. I want to talk to you about a business matter after breakfast."

Mr. Buckett passed on, and Ben resumed his breakfast.

By the time breakfast was ended Dick began to feel at home. The strange surroundings and strange people occupied his mind, but he had his wits about him, and he was not tongue-tied now.

"You'll feel better when you wash yourself," said Ben, the moment they left the table. "I'll give you soap and a towel, and you can go down to the creek."

Dick's visit to the creek made a great change in him.

"Why, I would not know he was the same boy," said Mrs. Brown. "And now, my dear, whatever rough words you hear, don't you mind them—and don't imitate them."

"No!" said Ben stoutly. "Don't you learn to swear. I never do, and I'm doing much hard work in Mr. Buckett's circus. And mind—nobody will say a word, or look black at you if they know you're my guest Double Dick."

"Yes," said Mrs. Brown. "All you've got to do is to say Ben Brown is your friend."

"I'll be sure to mind," Dick replied. Then he ventured, as Ben had left them alone, to ask, "What does Mr. Brown do?"

"Why, he is one of the company and so am I."

"Oh!" exclaimed Dick, "And are these gentlemen and ladies members, too?"

"No. Only some of them. I'll point them out to you in a day or two, if you stay with us."

"Can I—may I stay?"

"Well—that depends. Can you ride a horse?"

"A little—I used to ride the colts when no one else could."

"Then you are not afraid of horses, That's good."

"Bless you, no, child. That was the kitchen. This is one of the living tents. the big tent has gone ahead. All the things are on the road for the tent. These are just for the keepers, these tents and the riders. It will be moved just as soon as the order is given. You see, we have had a hard time of it for a month, and as we haven't far to go today, we are taking it easy this morning. Sometimes we are up at four in the morning."

"Is it? What a place to live. But if I were you, I'd never mention the poorhouse again. Nobody need know about it."

"I'll mind," said Dick, who thought Mrs. Brown very kind indeed.

"How strange that you never saw a circus, child."

"I've heard of them."

"Well—you'll see one before two o'clock."

There was a hurrying to and fro now; the orders had been given to strike the tents, and mount. Dick was amazed to see how quickly the tents toppled in, and were packed in the wagons. Then the riders were addressed by a man with a keen pair of black eyes, who shouted:

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, look lively. Ten minutes to dress."

"See here, what will we do with this kid?" said Ben suddenly, as he came upon them.

Dick was plunged into amazement too great for words. Were they going to make a rider of him?

Ben returned immediately, spoke to his wife aside, and she laughed. He could overhear them.

"He looks as much like a girl as a boy. He's too small for a man's dress, anyhow."

"All right, Ben."

Mrs. Brown scurried away, and returning with a bundle, handed it to her husband.

Dick followed Ben wonderingly to a tent where he found a dozen men, some half dressed, others just preparing to dress. Their citizens' clothes were lying on the tops of trunks, boxes and trunk trays. There were some painting their faces, and these were bending over the open lids of trunks in which mirrors were arranged, or leaning and twisting to see themselves in small mirrors placed against camp-stools or boxes.

"Here, we've no time to lose," said Ben, as he told Dick to disrobe. Then, to the boy's amazement and the great amusement of the other men, Ben proceeded to arrange a woman's dress on the boy. The long riding habit was speedily adjusted—pinned in to suit him. A neat jacket, with silver and gold stars intermingled and an abundance of lace, and a jaunty sailor's collar were next fitted on him.

He clapped a jaunty Gainesborough hat with two violet colored feathers on Dick's head, and then smiled.

"You don't need to mind your feet. Nobody will see them. I'll whisk you into the dining-room just as soon as the parade is over."

"Am I going to parade, Mr. Brown?"

"To be sure—what do you suppose I'm doing this for?"

When Mrs. Brown beheld Dick she laughed, but she spoke cheerfully.

"Why, what a pretty girl you make."

Elie Berthet.

The late Elie Berthet was a French novelist of the old school, a writer of tales of adventure, a Republican, and a man of excellent qualities. An amusing incident in which he figures, related by the Marquis de Belloy, occurred when he was at the height of his popularity. At this time he visited Brest. The marine officials greeted him cordially, and some of them gave a banquet in his honor.

At the close of the banquet Elie and his entertainers sat chatting pleasantly, when the report of a cannon imposed a moment's silence. Elie blushed a little, and looking very appreciative, said, "Ah, gentlemen, this is too much! I thank you, sirs, but it is too much honor."

It was, in fact, an honor not intended for him. The supposed salute was the discharge of the cannon which announced the return of the convicts.

Berthet's Republican sentiments enabled him when he was quite young to assist in, and enjoy, the joke of an old soldier named Fisson, who lived in the same town with him. Fisson was not able to express his Republican sentiments openly, but he derived a great deal of satisfaction from calling this young Republican by name when he met him on the street.

If a police officer was in sight, Fisson shouted, when he met his young friend, "Eh, liberte! Eh, liberte!"

The officer would hasten to Fisson and demand, "What did you say?"

"I said nothing," Fisson would reply.

"You cried 'Liberte!'"

"I cried 'Liberte?'"

"Yes, you cried 'Liberte!' and to cry 'Liberte' in the open street is a misdemeanor."

"Nonsense!" was Fisson's triumphant reply. "I was calling that young man there, 'Elie Berthet.'"

"Elie Berthet?"

"Yes, certainly, Elie Berthet. Come, my boy, I have something to say to you."

Brother Jonathan.

The origin of this name, as applied to our common country, has been traced by some to one Jonathan Trumbull, Governor of Connecticut, upon whose judgment and prudence Washington placed great reliance. That the appellation is, however (as might probably be supposed), of much earlier date, appears from the following passage, taken from a pamphlet satirizing the Puritan innovations in the arrangement and furniture of churches, printed in the year 1643:

"Queene Elizabeth's monument was put up at my charge when the regal government had fairer credit among us than now, and her epitaph was one of my Brother Jonathan's best poems before he abjured the university or had a thought of New England."

This pamphlet was entitled "The Reformado Precisely Charactered by a Transformed Church Warden at a Vestry, London."—Ex.

THE Keely, of "motor" notoriety, explains in a magazine his "theory of inter-molecular force." The stockholders in his visions have a very pronounced and somewhat profane theory in regard to Keely himself, the only effect of whose mechanical pretensions has been a paresis and an atrophy of the wallets of his dupes and stockholders. Keely has a sublime supply of gall and an ability to catch gudgeons which certainly challenges admiration.

CHICAGO to-day has 1,463 hotels, with accommodations for 135,000 guests, and the transient hotel population is placed at 65,000, leaving a surplus of comfortable quarters for 70,000 guests. There are 18,000 boarding houses, which can easily accommodate 60,000 more guests. By the use of cots and some crowding three times these numbers could be lodged and very easily fed.

SWITZERLAND has so many "passes" in her mountains, no wonder she is a free country.

THE BOOM IN TRADE

REACHES ALL SECTIONS BUT THE SOUTH.

Pig Iron in Active Demand, but the Structural Product Weak—Dry Goods, Wheat, Beef, Wool, and Hides Show a Great Success—Corn Scarce and Higher.

In speaking of the revival of business now so noticeable, R. G. Dun & Co.'s review of trade says:

The general confidence is strengthened by the financial news from Europe, which indicates that disturbance of the money markets from that quarter need not now be feared, and by the change in the foreign trade of this country, which points to a material reduction of balances payable abroad in specie.

There is a remarkable increase in the production of pig iron, almost to the unprecedented figures of last year. The sudden increase in production is not in all respects a favorable symptom. No corresponding improvement in the demand for manufactured products is yet seen, and the stocks unsold at only a part of the furnaces are now recorded as amounting to about 480,000 tons, showing a very large increase, particularly in coke iron. Unless the demand rapidly improves the market must soon weaken so far as to test severely the ability of some of the concerns to continue production. Already there is perceptible weakening in the market at Philadelphia and some concessions in price are noted for pig iron and for plates, while the market for structural iron is extremely dull.

As usual of late the demand for rails is scanty, the demand for railroad bonds being still dull and disappointing.

Reports from other cities are generally hopeful. Some improvement in the demand for goods is seen at Boston. Prospects are considered brighter at Philadelphia. In spite of the usual dullness of the season an improving tendency is seen at Buffalo, and lake shipping revives at Cleveland, with a larger demand than a year ago. Orders for clothing are good at Cincinnati, and the retail trade in dry goods is brisk. At Detroit manufactures move very fairly, and at Milwaukee trade is helped by improving crop prospects.

Receipts of wheat, dressed beef, wool and hides at Chicago show a great increase, and new wheat comes in liberally, 85 per cent. of it grading No. 2. The clothing and shoe trades show a large increase over last week, though in dry goods the trade shrinks a little.

At St. Paul trade is backward but prospects are good, and for Minnesota are especially bright. Bank clearings at St. Louis exceed last year's by 7 per cent., and money is going out to crops along with freedom, while general trade in all lines is of fair volume.

At other Northwestern points, without exception, excellent crop prospects are noted as promising improvement. At Nashville trade is fair, but dull at Memphis, unsatisfactory at Little Rock, falling off at Savannah, and sluggish at New Orleans, though a better demand is seen for cotton. At Jacksonville trade is better, with crops in good condition.

The collapse in wheat speculation has come with a fall of 8 cents during the past week, but corn is scarce, and 3½ cents higher, while oats have declined about 1 cent. Pork and hog products are higher, coffee has risen a quarter, and oil the same, but cotton is unchanged, and the general course of prices has been downward, as is natural at this season, the fall during the past week having averaged nearly ¾ of 1 per cent.

PAUPERS IN UNITED STATES.

The Census Office has issued a bulletin on the subject of paupers in almshouses in 1890, which shows a total of 73,045, as against 66,203 in 1880. These are divided according to sex and color as follows: Number of males (white), 37,387; number of males (colored), 3,354; number of females (white), 26,191; number of females (colored), 3,113. The ratio of almshouse paupers to the total population was 1 to 758. The present rate is 1 to 857. This is a very marked relative decrease. The decline is due to the very much smaller number of paupers cared for in the North Atlantic division. In respect to nativity, not including the colored paupers, of the 66,578 white paupers, 36,656 are native-born, 27,648 foreign-born, and the place of birth of 2,274 unknown. The numerical order of the States according to the number of paupers in almshouses reported in each of them is as follows:

Pennsylvania	8,653	Vermont	543
Ohio	7,430	Mississippi	494
Illinois	6,995	Rhode Island	490
Massachusetts	4,725	Texas	464
Indiana	2,927	Minnesota	365
New Jersey	2,718	Delaware	299
Wisconsin	2,641	Nebraska	291
California	2,600	Arkansas	223
Missouri	2,878	Dis. of Columbia	221
Virginia	2,193	Montana	132
Michigan	2,016	Louisiana	122
Iowa	1,671	Oregon	99
Maryland	[illegible]	Colorado	87
Kentucky	1,578	Washington	71
Tennessee	1,545	Utah	62
North Carolina	1,493	South Dakota	58
Connecticut	1,438	Nevada	43
Maine	1,161	North Dakota	35
New Hampshire	1,143	Florida	24
Georgia	902	Arizona	23
West Virginia	782	Idaho	20
Alabama	603	New Mexico	1
Kansas	593

The number of people who are permanently supported at public expense at their own homes or with private families is stated to be approximately 24,220. In thirteen States the proportion of paupers is greater than in Illinois.

The greatest improvement in Corsets during the past twenty years is the use of Coraline in the place of horn or whalebone. It is used in all of Dr. Warner's Corsets and in no others.

The advantages of Coraline over horn or whalebone are that it does not become set like whalebone, and it is more flexible and more durable.

Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets are made in twenty-four different styles, fitting every variety of figures—thin, medium, stout, long waists and short waists.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

THURSDAY..............JULY 23, 1891.

YOUNG grasshoppers reported in Colorado last week. An inch deep on the ground in some places.

LABOR organizations like the Alliance and P. I., expect to have a big consultation meeting at Indianapolis July 30.

GOGGLES or spectacles are used on cattle in some parts of Austria and Russia, especially in season of snow and sunshine, as it saves their eyes. It is said to be a queer sight.

NIKA VAN ZANDT was married last week to a well-to-do Italian. It will be remembered that she was married by "proxy" to August Spies, the anarchist, while the latter was in jail, and a few days before he was executed.

THE Patrons of Industry are trying to unite with the Alliance, in DeKalb county, as we see by a notice in the Hoosier Tidings, the Alliance paper published at Kendallville. It would save the expense of keeping up the two organizations.

THE first Indiana gas well was that at Eaton on the Muncie railroad south of Ft. Wayne. It was bored in 1886, and has recently been tested, showing a pressure of 300 pounds, exactly the same as at first. No giving out about it.

THE Butler Record very properly corrects us for saying Dr. Fitch, of Logansport, is the only living ex-senator of Indiana, since McDonald's death. We had called up Harrison as another, before writing the article, but Benny was such an inconsequential little figure head while in the senate, that we very naturally forgot about him.

WHEN Grant was president he and his advisers arranged a reciprocity treaty with Mexico, but his party refused to allow it. Not many years ago, our long standing reciprocity with Canada expired and the republican party refused to renew it. Now the same men are in favor of reciprocity, so they claim. But it was as desirable then as now. How easy it is for the old "party" to change its views when votes are to be secured.

WE see the Waterloo Press got that little piece of tin, same as the Dispatch. The Press says "The McKinley bill enabled them for the first time to make tin in this country." Hardly. As these little bits were received here the first week in July, coming from a long distance, they must have been manufactured in June. And the McKinley bill as to tin did not go into effect till July 1, or several days at least after this tin was made. How then, did the McKinley bill help them to make it? There are other questions, which we have hinted at in our comments on the Dispatch's article, but any view that can be taken of the matter, only makes the condition of these two editors appear more ridiculous.

JULY maple sugar eats are the rage at North Adams, Mass. They preserved the snow for this use, under piles of spruce branches.

VORIES, the new state superintendent who has been sick nearly ever since he took the office last spring, is some better with good hopes for his recovery. This is good news.

SALISBURY, the English prime minister now favors female suffrage. Thinks it will make his party popular at the coming election of members of parliament.

IT WAS a nice little advertising scheme to send bits of their make of tin all over the land, to republican editors who would bite at so thin a bait. N. & G. Taylor, and the others will get thousands of dollars worth of free advertising by it. Why did not some of Auburn's factories think of this scheme?

THE Sioux City Corn Palace opens October 1 and closes October 17. It is said to be a grand sight with its artistic and colored adornments, made of leaves, husks, kernels, stalks and ears of corn. The famous Mexican Band, from the City of Mexico, will be there all the time.

SEVERAL importers have lately sued the United States government to get back excessive tariff dues they had been compelled to pay. If, as the Record insists, that the foreigner pays the tariff, why do these importers kick? Why don't they let the blamed foreigners lose it? If they get it back from our government, will they send it over to the dear foreigner? How is this?

CAMPBELL, present governor of Ohio was last week re-nominated by the democrats. He got about four to one on the first ballot over all competitors. High tax McKinley is his opponent and the race promises to be a warm one. As the state has about 20,000 republican majority, and as the Cincinnati Enquirer and its friends are always opposed to such straight democrats as Campbell, it looks as if the latter could not win.

THE San Francisco Chronicle, high tax, in noting the productions of their new tin mines recently shipped to St. Louis, vauntingly asks:

"Will they, (the democrats,) claim now that the McKinley bill is a mere empty form of words, or that it will not foster and encourage at least one domestic industry?"

From this it appears the Chronicle, like some of the similar republican papers, actually believes that the creation of tin in the bowels of the earth, is the result of legislation, and that Nature and Providence have nothing to do with it. How then was the tin of the ancients produced; and the modern tin mines from which we have always obtained our supply—even before the McKinley bill was thought of? And if the McKinley bill creates tin mines, we want one here in Northern Indiana, yes right here by Auburn. But then, the McKinley bill says nothing about the block tin. It was on the free list before, and McKinley did not disturb it. How then, could his bill affect the metal tin? Here is an idea for the Butler Record.

SAINT PAUL and Minneapolis now report each about two hundred thousand people.

SLAVES in Brazil refuse to work since their emancipation and industries are suffering.

VENEZUELA refuses to make a treaty of reciprocity, as it will reduce her revenue without any benefit.

WHEAT reports from Russia, say 25 per cent short, rye 60 per cent short. They can get wheat in Indiana.

SUNDAY morning two bodies were found floating in the whirlpool below Niagara Falls. Don't know who they were.

THE Swiss people of Chicago, on Sunday, celebrated the sixth centennial of the Union of the Swiss Cantons. That little country has been a republic since July 19, 1291.

THE Canadian Copper company is making a heavy shipment of "matte" an ore rich in copper and nickel, to New York, where it will be refined, and the nickel used to make the new nickel-steel armor for United States cruisers.

THE Dispatch has degenerated into a confirmed snarler. It always was a grambler. It complains of the town, the county and the state, but from some unexplained cause it has never complained of the republican congress that blew in a thousand millions of the people's money in two years.

OLD SETTLERS of Chicago held their annual picnic in the Ogden grove Monday. Many were present. One had served on a U. S. Man-of-war, under Commodore Stewart, at a time when his daughter was born, who is now Mrs. Parnell, mother of the famous Irish leader.

HARRISON has sent Ex-Senatar Bruce colored, to talk to the Indiana colored voters, who have been declaring against the administration. But he can't fix them. They say too, that representing Mississippi in the U. S. senate swelled Bruce's head so he can't get down to talk to common darkies.

TOM. BROWNE, so many years congressman from the Richmond district this state died at Martinsville last Friday. His home was at Winchester. He had refused to run again for congress, and last year Henry U. Johnson of Richmond took the place. Browne made the race against Hendricks for governor in 1872 and was defeated.

LAST Saturday at Rocky Springs, Wyoming, two drunken Finlanders fired a shot at a Union Pacific powder house. The magazine contained 1,200 kegs of powder and 700 pounds of dynamite. When the shot struck the building a terrific explosion followed. The two Finlanders were blown to atoms. Six houses in the immediate vicinity were wrecked. A number of others were slightly injured. Loss $20,000.

THE democrats of Kansas, have through the decision of their editors concluded not to unite with the Alliance. They believe that the Alliance can get every reform they can ever get, by uniting with the democrats on a democratic platform, and so there is no need of a new party. Indeed this seems reasonable, for the democrats advocate a lower tariff tax, a silver coinage, an income tax, and originated and enacted all the laws that have favored the people, as against trusts and monopolies. If the Alliance and the democrats could unite on these measures, they would be about certain to get them. But if a new party, believing in these principles, comes up and leaves the democratic party, it thereby weakens its chances to get anything, for it is well known that the Alliance alone cannot elect a president or a congress, though they may weaken the democrats enough to permit the election of a republican. And republicans are the originators and present champions of all these unjust laws.

THE Record still insists there was a "high tariff democrat" in Laporte, engaged in making flannels, and who had been telling how the McKinley bill had enabled him to reduce the price from 60 to 47 cents. We still insist the article the Record copied was a "lie in total," in parts also. Laporte was our old home town, and we know what we are talking about. The "letter from a friend of ours" was from H. E. Wadsworth, editor of Argus, and as well informed a man as the state holds. It is not a question as to whether Louis Fox lives in Laporte, and makes flannels. It is a question as to whether he reduced the price from 60 to 47 cents, by reason of the McKinley bill. The facts as to price, are as we stated. The highest he ever sold at was away back when wool cost him $1 a pound. Then he sold for 57 cents, never for 60. But in all recent years, he has sold his product at about 30 cents. These are facts, that the Record can prove by going down to Laporte, which we invite him to do. A man who believes that a law adding to the expense of getting a supply of wool, has the effect of making woolen cloth cheaper, would be quite a curiosity down there.

Court.

Work began again on Monday, and cases went off like hot-cakes. It was a red letter day for disgruntled married people, and the Judge ought to mark up on the docket for that day, "Marriage is a failure." Six of these cases were brought up; one, that of Rosetta vs F. P. Maynard, was dismissed at her cost Caroline was divorced from Ira Barager; Lizzie, from James Forrest, and given the custody of the child; Anna, from Terry Lane, she getting $100 alimony with custody of three children, George, Albert and Ferne, he to have Lulu and Leon; Nancy, from John Shaffer, she having custody of child; Margaret, from Wm. Hathaway. Attorney Rose says here is a chance for ten weddings. But we hope they will all wait till able to pay up the divorce fees. Louisa Prosser was authorized to convey the property owned by her and James, he being absent. There was much other business done, quieting titles, foreclosures, etc., and the Aldrich case was set for next Monday. Court then adjourned to that date.

County Board of Education.

There was a called meeting of the township trustees, and school trustees of the incorporated towns Tuesday, as County Superintendent Merica found there was needed work waiting their action. There was a full talk about school matters for the coming year, and an agreement as to the school levies. It was wisely determined to so arrange these levies, that under the new assessment, they would only get as much money as heretofore, which would be all they will need for a seven months term of school for the year. The requisitions for text books were also made, and a unanimous vote had, that the new text books recently adopted by the state board must be put in at the first of the school year. The law is imperative in this regard, and the trustees are determined to obey it. The expense of the new books will be small, as the branches affected are studied by only a part of the pupils, and the price fixed on the new books is very low. So it would be well for parents who will need any of the new books to be ready when the schools open about the middle of September. The meeting was an important and valuable one, and all the members but two were present. The levies will be made at the September meeting, as at that date all the new assessment lists will be corrected.

Ft. Wayne's Solid Men

The Ft. Wayne Journal publishes a list of those whose assessment exceeds $25,000. We give a few of those best known here:

T. B. Shoaff	47,555
A. C. Trentman	216,540
J. B. White	175,000

The Journal thinks, that in some instances the factories are not high enough, but adds that several persons, including the Hamiltons, Bass and McCullough, have large landed interests outside of the city, which cannot be included in the above list. Then there is the Centlivre plant, and several wealthy men who are outside of the corporation. The list shows about two millions higher than last year.

State Encampment.

The state malitia are now in camp at Ft. Wayne, four regiments in all, besides several batteries of artillery. The Waterloo boys are put down as Company I, Third Regiment; Captain, S. A. Bowman; 1st Lieut., L. A. Beidler; 2nd Lieut., I. D, Farrington. Of the regimental officers of the Third, we see Dr. E. L. Siver, of Ft. Wayne, is surgeon; Richard Locke, of Waterloo, is adjutant; and Rev. W. D. Parr, of Elkhart is chaplain. Gov. Hovey is to be present as Commander-in-chief. On his staff we notice Chas. D. Tillo, manager of the Newspaper Union, and Speaker Mason J. Niblack, who is also first lieutenant in company A, of the First Regiment. The boys are provided with tents and plenty of rations.

Obituary.

Jacob F. Brown was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Sept. 16, 1814. In his youth accepted Christ and joined the Reform church. He was married Jan. 23, 1844. This union was blessed with three children. He emigrated from his native country in 1855 and on the journey his wife died and he buried her in the watery grave of the sea. In 1856 he landed in New York and buried two of his children, and from thence with his only remaining son Jacob, he came to Waterloo where he settled. In 1857 he was married to Elizabeth Gfeller which union was blest with 7 children. After many years of toil and suffering on July 17, he died at the age of 76 years, and 11 months, leaving a wife, 8 children, 11 grandchildren and many friends to mourn his death. "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." A large number of friends and relatives gathered at his residence at 2 o'clock where the services were held and from thence the body was taken to the cemetery for interment. The services were conducted by Rev. W. S. Tracy assisted by the Waterloo Quartet which rendered in a most pleasing way some very appropriate music.

I, W. H. McIntyre, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

W. H. McINTYRE, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of July, 1891.

EZRA D. HARTMAN, Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest:
C. A. O. McCLELLAN,
WM. McINTYRE,
D. A. GARWOOD, Directors.

They do us Harm.

The sneers and flings of the Press, the Dispatch and the Garrett Clipper against everything in Auburn and DeKalb county are bearing their legitimate fruit, and to the injury of the good name of our county. Scarcely a week passes, but we find some of these sneering articles copied into our exchanges and quoted with evident enjoyment, as an evidence that things in Auburn and DeKalb are in a bad way. As Auburn and DeKalb county have taken strides in improvements away ahead of neighboring towns and counties, the jealous localities are evidently pleased to be able to quote our own papers against us. We would suggest, that if these home papers don't like DeKalb county, they might emigrate to some point where things are more to their liking—China or Central Africa, for instance.

Taxes Will Not be Higher.

We don't believe taxes will be higher, except on those who are able to pay. We had a talk this week with Auditor Coffinberry, who is on the board on equalizing the assessments. He says so much property not heretofore given in for assessment, has been put on the list this year, that he feels certain farmers will not have to pay more than four-fifths as much as before. This is right, and at the same time people of moderate means in town will not have to pay more, or at least not enough to be a burden. Corporations will pay more, and much property not heretofore listed will pay for the first time. So it is hoped all will bear an equal share of the burdens. Mr. Coffinberry, in speaking of railroads, says there was an erroneous idea out in regard to the B. & O. road. It has been said that it was assessed last year at only $10,000. This is a mistake. The road paid $10,000 in taxes, and its assessment was over $287,000 in all. Mr. Coffinberry having been a leading railroad officer for so many years, and having extensive acquaintances as to the roads of the north part of the state has been requested to attend the meeting of the state board of equalization at Indianapolis, to give them some practical assistance He expects to go.

Please Call and Settle.

Frank Hoff respectfully asks all who owe him on account, to call and settle as soon as they can, as the fire compelled him to buy new goods, and to put up an expensive new building, and he will need every cent coming to him.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of an execution to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Isaac Ochs is plaintiff, and Daniel Firestone is defendant, requiring me to make the sum of Eleven Hundred Forty-three dollars and Forty-three cents, with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

The undivided one-tenth (1-10) part of the east half of the northeast quarter of section twenty-two (22), the south half of the north west quarter of section (23) and the west thirty-two and one-half (32½) acres of the north half of the northwest quarter of said section twenty-three 23) all in township thirty-five (35) north of range fourteen [14] east, situate in DeKalb County in the state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

PHIL PLUM,
Sheriff of DeKalb County.

Auburn, June 30th, 1891.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

The Press says "figures never lie, but we can't say as much for the man who manipulates them." That is so, for the way the Press went on to "manipulate them" is proof positive. We had accused him of directly falsifying a plain statement in the Courier, which showed the debt had increased only $3,378 27, instead of $6,000 as the Press editor insisted with the figures plain before him. Now with an even greater error, he takes the $3,378.27, and to that adds last year's interest on the supposition that this year's interest will be the same as last. It may be the same, or more, or less, but the last year's interest is added into the debt already, in the proper way, in last year's report, and being so added, shows the increase to be as we stated. And now the Press wants to add it again so as to bring the increase of debt up to $7,000. If it is right to add two year's interest into one year's report, why not add in three years or more of interest? It would be a very silly school boy that would thus expose his ignorance.

Lockwood & Penland, the threshing machine men of Jackson township have been in and had notes printed of a form especially needed by men in that business. They are of the form we made for Mr. Loutzenheiser of Richland, two or three years ago. They look forward to a big season of threshing.

W. H. McIntosh has added beauty to his residence property on South Main street, by putting down a substantial and well finished cement sidewalk along its broad front. It will cost about $100 and will be the most extensive and costly piece of cement walk so far, put down by any private citizen. That's business enterprise that counts.

Here is a little lesson in political economy that is worthy of more than a passing notice. It is from the pen of Rabbi Solomon Schindler, a writer of more than ordinary ability: "It is said that when the foundation of the renowned Cathedral in Cologne was laid so many hundred years ago, the workmen received one kreutzer wages a day, which coin would be equivalent in metal value today one cent of our money, but that kreutzer had such a purchasing power that they could live by it. When the cathedral was about to be finished a few years ago, laborers received for their wages between four to seven marks a day, about two hundred times as much as did the workmen who laid the cornerstone, and yet they complained that their pay was insufficient to support them."—Ex.

There was a large attendance at the M. E. social at Dr. Ford's last Friday evening. The lovely grove of young maples, is of itself an attraction, while the supper served by the ladies, would tempt anyone. We did not learn the amount of cash taken, but it must have been above the average. Dr. Ford himself was present, and made all that came, heartily welcome, as he always does. There was a rumor the next day, that some had been made sick, by eating some of the pressed beef served on the occasion. Others thought the fault might be with the ice cream. All that is certainly known is, that a number were taken violently ill that night about 1 o'clock, and several had to call a doctor. the worse case we heard of was that of Mrs. Sam. Buss who was sick a day or two. It is possible, however, that there was nothing wrong with the food. The pressed beef had never been canned, but was made fresh by Mr. Rainier, who as all know is scrupulously neat in preparing anything. The ice cream was made on the grounds, and appeared all right. We presume that many who took ill, were bilious, and it only needed the extra over-indulgence natural to the occasion, to bring them to their beds. At all events nothing serious came of it. The sickness came on all of them about one o'clock in the night, but we know of at least one who took sick at that hour just like the others, but had not been at the social.

Now, that the time of year is fast approaching, when fruits, berries jellies, jams, etc., are to be canned up and set away for winter use, people may begin to wonder where and at what price they are going to get the necessary jars. If, while in town, you go to Beuret's, you will find fruit jars in abundance, with prices to suit the times.

J. J. VanAuken seems to understand farming as well as he did surveying, for he is the first in the market with a crop of new wheat, the very first brought to Auburn this season. It was brought in last Wednesday, July 15, and delivered to L. J. Miller at the Lake Shore freight house. It was of good quality, and Mr. VanAuken says his crop will average 30 bushels to the acre.

The new railroad "Chicago and Toledo Bee Line," it is believed will not only be constructed, but that work will soon be commenced. It goes through Pioneer, Olna, Angola, Lagrange, Goshen and Laporte. It is believed the Wabash, the Canada Pacific and several other lines are interested If this is true the new Wabash line from Montpelier will hardly be built.

Great Alliance harvest picnic at Sol. Olinger's Grove, two miles north and one mile east of Garrett, on Saturday July 25. Everybody will be there. Good speakers, among them being the state lecturer, Mr. Ham; good singing, and a good brass band, the Odd Fellows band of Garrett. There will be warm meals on the ground, or lunch for those who need. Everybody come and enjoy a day of rest and pleasure.

Uncle Henry Shull is as truthful as the day is long in summer. If this were not so, we would hardly credit him as to the size of that big lamb. Last Thursday, one of his ewes, a common bred sheep, dropped a lamb that weighed 17¼ pounds, and measured 33 inches from its nose to the tip of its tail. It stood 17 inches high, and is every way healthy and vigorous. The ewe had been dropping twins every year till now, and had evidently concluded that one big one would suit Uncle Henry just as well. The lamb is of the Shropshire stock. Its girth was 20 inches.

Get ready for the Auburn fair. Fat the big pumpkin; work the extra flesh off the thin trotter; slick up the stock; let nimble fingers prepare lovely things for the floral hall; encourage the big potato; cheer on the mammoth squash; assist kind nature to smile on the beautiful flowers; let the peanut artist hurry up his blonde "goobers" from the sunny south; let the "implement agent" put on his best bib, oil up his machines and get ready to beat his rival; let the expectant young lady get her new bonnet ready for on that Thursday "he" will be at the gate with a nice horse and buggy, bright and early; and finally, my brethren send for a premium list to Cal. A South Bend man claims to have seen a seal swimming in the lake at Rome City. The question now is, is this a new way to boom the waning attractions of Rome City, or is it the result of the peculiar brand of "bait" with which the South Bender had filled his pockets on leaving home?

The slaughter house of Clifton & Shilling, about three miles east of town, burned down Sunday evening. Supposed to have been set on fire. The building cost about $250 and there was a pile of hides belonging to them, a lot of tallow owned by Witoski, and other articles, making the loss quite serious.

The Butter and Cheese Factory.

The Committee selected last week, to go and examine the workings of the creameries of the Davis & Rankin plan, make a very favorable report. They visited several factories in the Elgin, Ill., district and examed their workings carefully. This is what they say:

"From our observations and the knowledge we have of our people and the possibilities of DeKalb county and the farmers in this vicinity we feel confident that this enterprise will be of great benefit to all and sincerely hope and recommend that the business men of Auburn and the farmers in the vicinity will co-operate to secure to the community one of these factories.

Your Committee,
C. C. Shaffer,
C. C. Buss,
Cal Husselman.

Dr. J. B. Casebeer, also makes a statement. He had been called down into Jasper county, on a professional visit we presume, and took occasion to examine the creameries in that section. He was well pleased with what he saw and learned. He closes his report by saying;

"I hope therefore if our people start a creamery they will start a combined plant for both butter and cheese as they can do so with so much less expense than hereafter. After a careful investigation of this plant I am of the opinion that the business can be manipulated at Auburn with as much satisfaction and profit to this community and to the stockholders as anywhere else.

J. B. Casebeer."

Nearly all the stock needed is now subscribed, and we presume that this week, will see it all taken.

At Rest.

John Swinehart, at his home in DeKalb county, Indiana, July 9th, 1891, from the shores of time, aged 62 yrs., 5 mos. and 19 days. Was born on the banks of the Ohio river, in Columbiana county, Ohio, December 20th, 1828. Was married to Mary E. German, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, Sept. 21, 1854; moved to DeKalb county, Indiana, the same year. Death severed the happy union April 28, 1860. To them were born three sons, two of whom survive. April 28, 1861, he was married to Phœbe Jane Haughey. To this union were born two sons and one daughter. He leaves a wife, four sons, five grandchildren and many near relatives and friends to mourn his loss. Their loss is his great gain.

He was a very prosperous farmer and followed threshing for forty years.

A CORRESPONDENT of an Eastern journal at Washington complains bitterly of the "small salaries paid clerks by the Government." Why don't they strike and quit and come West and plow corn? There is a whole army of young men ready to jump at "the small salaries" paid by Uncle Sam.

A GREAT many more young men and women are sent upon the road to ruin by money than by poverty. As a rule the devil wants no better chance at a boy and girl than to have their pockets filled with cash and then set down for idleness at some fashionable resort. Rest is all right; revelry is all wrong.

ONE of Chicago's dog catcher's laments and makes moan, and all because he feels that his business is not so highly regarded by the people as it might be. MEN are very fond of looking at their own pictures. An Atchison banker says it is an ordinary thing to receive checks from bankers with their pictures lithographed on the checks. Some have them printed on their blotters, and at the top of their billheads. If women did that, what a howl would be raised about vanity. The men don't call it vanity in their own case. They call it an advertisement.

A DISTINGUISHED scientist is quoted as saying that the chemist will dominate coming inventions and that all our fuel will presently be furnished in the form of gas. "In a quarter of a century more," says he, "we will wonder why men were ever such fools as to carry coal into the house and burn it." Some of us have already begun to see the folly of doing this. We let our dear, sweet wives carry it in and burn it.

ONE cannot help feeling profoundly sorry that a New York firm of religious publishers was robbed of a few thousand dollars by an old and trusted clerk whose salary was $14 a week. Indeed, in view of the fact that the old and trusted clerk whose salary was $14 a week was the head and support of a family, one can hardly forgive him for robbing that firm of religious publishers of a few thousand dollars.

FOR the last seven years an old Kentucky negro has been turning white in spots and is now about half white. Recently he was on exhibition in a New York medical college as a special object of study, but was dismissed from there, and on his way to the West again he turned up at the police station in Buffalo the other morning at 2 o'clock in a fuddled condition and with his money all gone. He acts much like a proud Caucasian. He might as well be all white.

STRANGE as it may seem, there is, near Duchess Junction, New York, a colony of 200 Syrians under the control of one man, who lets them out to work on contract, and who controls them in every way. The colony does not hold itself amenable to the laws of the country, it being, in fact, a band of Syrians in this country ready to resist officers if their leader so directs. Such labor may be cheap to those who hire, but such a colony is not American.

ANARCHIST JOHN MOST has been sentenced to one year in prison. The action of the New York courts ought to prove very pleasing to Herr Most. In Sing Sing he will find a community organized after his own heart, in which the masses are treated with exact impartiality, eating the same food, dressing exactly alike, and each receiving the same returns for his labor, the whole being governed by a coterie of rulers placed in charge of the community to see that its rules are rigidly enforced.

IT is stated that the death of a well-known lawyer in Maine who was the administrator of ninety-five estates, revealed the fact that "his affairs were in great confusion." In nearly a third of the cases in which he had charge of the estates, no attempt had apparently been made in his life time to compel a settlement. The carelessness of the heirs whose property he controlled was thus in no small measure responsible for the mixed state of affairs. Guardians of trust funds should be held to a strict accountability, or heirs of vast estates will continue to mourn the loss of executors in more ways than one.

EVERY age has its own demands. That of the present seems to be activity. No one is successful in any undertaking of the nineteenth century who has not alertness as a leading characteristic. Every field of labor, every mart of trade or commerce, is so crowded that only the most persistent worker can win his way to success and eminence. One talent pushed by energy is of more value than ten dormant talents. It is not genius, but activity, ceaseless and untiring, that counts. It is not courage, but eternal wakefulness. It is not prudence or foresight, but cleverness and readiness. Of all fleeting things needful opportunities are the most transitory; he who is prepared to seize them is the hero and the victor of the day.

THE Occident says the latest news from Russia is to the effect that the Czar is relenting somewhat from his merciless treatment of the Jews. He has issued a ukase to the effect that they must not be peremptorily driven out, but that the expulsion must be performed in such a way as to give them time to dispose of their effects. Possibly this change of front is dictated by the discovery that the financial outlook in Russia is a decidedly blue one. The bankers have refused to honor checks, drafts, bills of exchange, and other securities on which Jewish names appear, and as the number of these is legion there has been a pretty general deadlock in business even among those not suspected of being Israelites.

THERE is an old hymn which congratulates the singers that they were born in a Christian land and every day brings new reason why the American should congratulate himself that he was born in an enlightened one. The restrictions placed upon the professional and industrial activity of women in this country, by our fathers, in the older and less liberal day, are almost totally removed, for it has been found that there are few things a woman cannot do as well as can a man of equal intelligence, unless these involve the exertion of brute strength, and there are many she can do better. Among the things she can do better is to attend our wives, sisters, and daughters in illness, yet Austria has now practically decided, in the face of demonstration, not to admit women to its medical colleges and has recalled a woman physician who offended the traditions of the provinces along the Turkish frontier.

DR. L. W. WHITNEY, of Chicago, appears to have adopted a rather unusual and irregular method of dealing with office patients who happen to be short of ready cash with which to requite his professional services. William White, who had been hit with a brick and had a large hole on the top of his head, called on him for the surgical attention required in such cases. The doctor got out his needle and thread, and with a few stitches sewed the cut together. His bill was $4—rather large, it would seem, for his five minutes' work. But, unfortunately for White, he had no $4 to give. Infuriated by this painful discovery, the doctor threw him back into the operating chair, tore out the threads and ripped the hole in his head wide open. The medical fraternity are great sticklers for the ethics of the profession, and they should inquire into Whitney's case. If the "ethics" which require them to "fire" the doctor who advertises his business do not provide some punishment for this they would better revise their code.

Origin of Salutations.

A large, if not the largest, class of salutations can be traced to intercession. The deeply religious character of the Orientals shows itself specially in their salutations. The Hebrew word Barak, "to bless," had all the meanings of saluting, welcoming, and bidding adieu, the person spoken to being in such case commended to God. "Blessed be thou of the Lord," "The Lord be with thee," "And Jacob blessed Pharaoh and went out from before him," are instances which illustrate the usage of the word. They are parallelled by the Arabian; "God grant thee His favors," "May God strengthen your morning," "May your morning be good;" by the Persian; "I make prayers for thy greatness," "My prayers are for thee," "Forget me not in thy prayers." and we cannot be surprised that this kind of salutation is found to exist in some shape or other among all national greeting. Our religion has come from the East, and some of our religious salutations still survive—as, for example, in the Esthonian "God guide you," the "Adieu" of the French, the "Go with God, Senor" of Spain, our "God be with ye," corrupted into "Good-bye."

Why Congressmen Carry Revolvers.

"Why do I carry a gun?" said a member of Congress to a Washington Star reporter's question. "Because I may need a weapon any time. If you were permitted to search the entire national legislature you would find revolvers in two out of three hip pockets. A Senator or Representative, merely by reason of his conspicuousness, is always in greater personal danger than the citizen in private life. For one thing he is an object of pursuit by cranks, a percentage of whom are murderously inclined. If you could get together a list of deadly affrays in which Congressmen have been engaged through no fault of theirs you would perceive that such a precaution is worth taking."

A GIFT ENTERPRISE.

UNCLE SAM AND HIS SUGAR BOUNTY.

A Short Road to Wealth for the Sugar-Growers—Five Hundred and Sixty-eight Men Want $11,000,000—Applications for the Bounty—An Unblushing Robbery of the Many for the Few.

How happy we should all be if we could get two prices for everything we sell! We should hear no more about agricultural depression, and farm mortgages would become as scarce as gold spoons in a poorhouse. If only the heavens would open their coffers and drop down a dollar every time we sell a bushel of wheat!

Alas, the heavens are not built that way! It takes Uncle Sam, with his Billion-Dollar Congress, to start a gift enterprise and make two prices where only one existed before. Last year the McKinleyites voted a bounty of 2 cents a pound on raw sugar, and this year the Louisiana planters are to have two prices for every pound of sugar. The New York price of the best raw sugar is now 3⅜ cents a pound, and Uncle Sam has undertaken to chip in 2 cents more on every pound, giving the planters a price of about 5⅜ cents. That will be a rather expensive business, but then the people of this country are used to tariff taxes, and a great many of them even like to be gulled for the glory of the g. o. p.

But this bounty business is going to be more expensive music than the McKinleyites calculated upon. McKinley spoke in his tariff report of the bounty as "but a little more than $7,000,000 per annum." The Louisiana planters, however, have put in claims for the coming crop, and if they raise as much sugar as they estimate Uncle Samuel will have a neat little bill of $11,206,100 to pay.

The bounty applications filed in the internal revenue office at New Orleans amount to 650, but these represent only 568 individuals, as some planters own more than one plantation and a separate application must be made for each. Seventeen of these planters estimate their crop of sugar each at 5,000,000 pounds or more, and ask for a bounty of $2,356,720, an average of $138,600 apiece. In the second class are 162 persons, applying each for a bounty of $35,670. The third class planters number 268, and they each want $10,380. There is a fourth class of 121 planters, asking for $857 apiece; and besides these there are 350 small planters who will sell their cane to the big mills which can make sugar up to the bounty standard.

This sugar bounty is to last fifteen years, unless the people undo it. In that time it bids fair to cost the taxpayers at least $200,000,000. What say the growers of wheat and corn? Are they willing to pay tariff taxes for fifteen years to 568 sugar planters?

The only redeeming feature about this bounty is that it will prove such an eye-opener to tariff-blinded farmers. They must see that the protection humbug is itself only a bounty, since protection and bounty both alike take money out of one man's pocket and put it into another man's. When Uncle Sam undertakes to make some of his children rich, he can only do so by robbing the others, for the old gentleman himself has no independent income, and must look to the taxgatherer alone.

A Protectionist for Revenue.

The Hon. B. F. Jones, of Pittsburg, who was at one time Chairman of the Republican National Committee, writes to the American Economist giving his reasons for being a protectionist. One of his reasons is, "because revenues can more easily, more surely and with less objection be raised by judicious protective tariff laws than otherwise."

Jones ought to know something about raising revenues easily and surely, being a member of the steel beam combine, which has a protective duty of $20.16 a ton, and which maintains prices in the home market at such a high point that foreign importations still come in occasionally.

The combination of which Jones is a member does not shrink from publicity. One member of it was before the McKinley committee and gave the names of the twelve companies composing it. He assured the committee that if any change were made in the tariff "we would die of starvation." But a change was made, the committee assuming, it seems, that the witness was fibbing and nobody would starve.

The old duty on steel and iron beams for building was 1¼ cents a pound, equal to 114 per cent. ad valorem; the present duty is nine-tenths of a cent, equal to 83 per cent. This reduction went into effect last October, and nobody has yet heard of any beam manufacturer starving. On the contrary, the combination is maintaining the price of beams at precisely the figure that prevailed when the new law went into effect.

The protectionists say that it pays the country to make everything at home that can be produced here, although the price to the consumer may be higher. Does any sane man believe that the country gains anything by taxing itself 83 per cent. on steel beams for the sake of twelve men who combine and keep up prices to the point where imports can come in? The beam manufacturers are evidently adding the full duty to their prices; and the stale protectionist doctrine that the tariff reduces prices in the home market to as low a point as in other countries does not prove true in practice.

Retaliating Upon Our Farmers.

The news has recently been published that Germany, Austria, Italy, and Switzerland have agreed upon a great customs league. The terms of the agreement have not yet been made public, but it is stated that the movement is due to our high tariff McKinleyism, which shuts out many of the products of those countries. It is proposed by these nations to retaliate upon us by combining against our grain, cattle, and meat.

A hostile tariff of the kind here indicated would undoubtedly narrow the foreign market of our farmers very seriously. Even those among our farmers who believe that in some way McKinleyism is good for them at home must admit that it is a bad thing for them abroad, when it arouses such retaliatory measures.

The farmers will also observe that when our high protection, which is mainly for the benefit of the manufacturers, causes retaliation abroad, the first thing that is touched is agricultural produce. Those nations do not think of retaliating upon us by putting McKinley duties on our manufactures, since our exports of these are too insignificant.

It is the farmer's corn, wheat, flour, beef, and pork which are exposed to retaliatory tariffs in Europe.

Thus under our policy of McKinleyism the manufacturers get the advantages at home of a high tariff, while the retaliation thereby aroused falls upon our farmers.

A REPORT from Huddersfield, England, where a large part of our fine worsted cloth is made, says: "The tariffs levied under the McKinley bill do not very greatly affect the finer qualities of worsted cloths sent out to the United States, and as the manufacturers in the United States have not yet found out the secret of producing these goods with the same degree of finish and quality as Huddersfield manufacturers, they are unable to compete in this line." In other words, the American consumer of fine worsteds is going right on buying from Huddersfield and paying the increased McKinley duty. The rich man continues to buy what he wants; but the poor man is left to the tender mercies of the home market.

Wool Prices Again.

The low price of wool is disturbing the souls of the protectionists, and they are putting forward explanations which do not explain.

A correspondent of the American Economist writes from Michigan to the cheap and ignorant mouthpiece of the American Protective Tariff League to ask, "What is the matter with our Michigan wool?"

The Economist answers this question in the following way: "Wool has become so cheap in the world's market that it can be imported over our tariff and compete with the domestic product, thus tending to neutralize and obscure the benefits which our wool growers had a right to expect."

But a protectionist journal of far heavier caliber, the Boston Commercial Bulletin, effectually squelched this pretense before it was written. The Bulletin is a commercial paper of the very highest standing, and exists for other purposes besides the propagation of protection notions. In an article of recent date this journal pointed out that Australian wool is actually higher in our markets than a year ago. The Bulletin says that "the price of Australian wool has steadily declined abroad, and the English manufacturers are paying less for it than a year ago."

But how is it with American buyers? "Our buyers are paying the same that they paid a year ago, and the additional duty of a cent a pound on grease wool makes the scoured cost of Australian combing about two cents a pound more than a year since [80's, quality merino, were 78 cents then and are 80 cents now], while Ohio XX fleece costs in the grease three cents and scoured six cents a pound less than at that time."

The American Economist's answer, therefore, is worth nothing, for how can Australian wool at 80 cents a pound affect Ohio and Michigan wool prices more disastrously this year than it did last year at 78 cents.

McKinley Makes a Muss of It.

While in New York several days ago Major McKinley was seen by a reporter of the Tribune, and was asked if the contract-labor law would hurt the new industry of tinplate-making by keeping European skilled labor out of this country.

To this question he replied: "No, I don't think it will. The Secretary of the Treasury has the discretion to issue licenses to those who are interested in new industries, authorizing them to go abroad and make contracts with skilled laborers. Of course, these licenses will be revoked as soon as the industries are established. A license respecting the importation of machinery can also be granted. This discretion, I think, has been exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury in this matter."

What a change has come over the young Napoleon of protection! Last year in his speech in the House of Representatives he applauded his high duty on the ground that "it will defend our capital and labor in the production of tin-plate," and he invited British manufacturers to "bring $25,000,000 over here and sit down among us and employ our labor."

But now only a brief year has elapsed, and the young Napoleon finds that we have no tin-plate laborers, and he takes comfort in the fact that the manufacturer can "go abroad and make contracts with skilled laborers."

Then your tin-plate tax was not to help "our labor" after all!

McKinley also shows the advantage which our tin-plate infant has in the fact that it can get a license to import its machinery. Alas, this is too bad! Think of McKinley betraying the protection dogma, "the foreigner pays the tax," by showing how our tin-plate manufacturers may get around paying it! If the foreigner pays it, how can a license benefit our manufacturers?

The Tariff Joker.

Ex-Congressman Horr, of Michigan, is writing a series of articles in the New York Weekly Tribune for the especial purpose of teaching the farmers the beauties of protection. When Horr was in Congress, he made considerable of a reputation as a humorist, and his Tribune articles show that his humor only ripens with age.

In a recent article on a new plate-glass factory at Irwin, Pa., he says: "This new factory is the direct result of the provisions of the McKinley bill. That wise measure advanced the rate of duty on this kind of glass so as to provide for the enormous difference in wages here in the United States and the wages paid for the same kind of work in the old world."

What a delicious joke the humorist perpetrates here! The McKinley law did not raise the duty on plate glass at all, except that on the very smallest size, not above ten by fifteen inches, the duty was raised from 3 cents to 5 cents per square foot. Of this size only $22,000 worth of glass was imported last year, while of the larger sizes, where the duty was not changed, the imports amounted to $895,000!

Yet the Tribune says of Horr's articles: "Nothing so genial, unanswerable, and free from partisan politics, and yet so overwhelming in their proof that the party which enacted the McKinley bill can be trusted with the Government, has been put into print during the last twenty years."

CANADA has just abolished the duty on raw sugar, but has left a duty of about 1 cent on refined. The object in leaving a duty on the latter is thus explained by a prominent Canadian commercial journal: "This was necessary to prevent the Spreckels refinery [of California], which was ready to sell its surplus sugar at 3⅝ cents for export in order to reduce stock, from flooding the Pacific coast at cut values." Where are those Republican organs which were denying so strenuously last year that American manufacturers sell their goods at lower prices abroad then at home? Here is clearly a case for more denying and denunciation.

THE effect of the removal of the raw sugar duty in Canada was exactly the same as in the United States. Prices at once fell about equal to the amount of the duty removed; the refiners took orders for granulated sugar at 4½ cents a pound, which is very near our own price. It is said that the Canadian refiners will have to manufacture refined sugar at about 2 cents a pound less money; and for this reason the papers of Canada are prophesying an enormous increase in consumption. In Canada, too, the tariff is a tax, and its removal saves money to the consumer.

FRANCE has been imitating our McKinleyism pretty closely in the new tariff which it is now making; but at one important point the law-makers of that country called a halt. When the attempt was made to put a protective duty on wool the extreme protectionists girded up their loins for their supreme effort, but the Chamber voted by a crushing majority that wool remain on the free list. On the wool-tax folly France refuses to copy our McKinleyism.

HON. ALLEN W. THURMAN shows himself a worthy son of the "Old Roman" when he says of the wool tariff: "The principal objection that I have to the tariff on wool is the same that I have against all tariffs, viz., that I do not see what right I have to compel others by law to assist me in my business." Mr. Thurman is himself an extensive wool-grower.

A WINDOW-GLASS YARN

THE TARIFF JESTER AND HIS LITTLE FIB.

R. G. Horr on Window-Glass Prices—Says Protection Has Reduced Them More than Half—Figures Are Against Him—Foreign and Home Prices.

The high-sounding boasts of the protectionists become such a habit with them that they neglect to compare market reports of prices; and hence in claiming everything they expose themselves to the suspicion of willfully misstating facts. R. G. Horr, the exuberant tariff jester, boasts that as the effect of protection window-glass costs less than one-half what it did "in former years."

This is grossly untrue. The duty on window-glass was raised to a highly protective point in 1861. The duty was only 20 per cent. in the tariff of 1846, and this was reduced to 15 per cent. in 1857. The high protection on glass has had practically no effect in reducing the price of domestic glass since it was first imposed thirty years ago.

The prices of domestic glass in 1860, as given by the protected manufacturers themselves before the Senate Finance Committee several years ago, were only about 8 per cent. above present prices. Here are the figures for 1860 as published by the President of the American Window-Glass Manufacturers' Association; and the prices for 1890 are given with them for comparison:

8x10 inches	3d	$1.95	$1.90
8x10 inches	4th	1.80	1.805
10x14 inches	2d	2.40	2.04
10x14 inches	3d	2.10	1.90
12x18 inches	1st	3.00	2.75
12x18 inches	3d	2.40	2.28
18x24 inches	2d	3.60	3.13
22x28 inches	3d	3.60	3.32
Total 8 boxes		$20.85	$19.125

While nearly everything else has fallen greatly in price in thirty years, home-made window glass has been kept at very near the prices at which it started out under high protective duties.

If Mr. Horr had changed his boast from domestic to foreign glass he would have stated the truth. The average price of glass imported in 1867 was 4.12½ cents a pound, while in 1890 the price was only 2 cents. Thus we see that while people in other countries are getting their glass at less than half the price "in former years," we put up a high-tariff wall to prevent ourselves from getting the benefit of lower prices. The Treasury reports show that the glass imported last year paid an average of 109 per cent. Every $1 worth of window glass that went into the custom houses came out as $2.09 worth, and was passed on to the consumer with profits added to correspond.

As about one-third of the glass we use is imported, notwithstanding this enormous duty, it is seen that the domestic manufacturers are "living up to the tariff" by adding the full amount of the duty to their product. The recent advance in prices at a meeting of the trust in Chicago, for all points west of Pittsburg, shows that the manufacturers are determined to get all the advantage they can out of the extra protection granted them by McKinley in the shape of duties on boxes, packing, etc.

Life a Shadow.

In the endless and ceaseless round of change in the combinations of the elements of matter, the physical form of man is as nothing. Byron defines life as "a confused noise between two silences—birth and death." We are shadows pursuing shadows, our spiritual natures being the only unchanging and continuous entities. As Emerson puts it: "You are you and I am I," and we are conscious of being nothing else. If we accept the theory that the heavenly bodies grow by accretions of cosmic dust which is floating everywhere in ethereal space, a portion of the dust of Solomon or imperial Cæsar may now be on the surface of Jupiter or in the sun and other portions on still remoter orbs, earth in its rapid flight of sixty-eight thousand miles an hour having parted with some of these royal ashes. Thoughts and ideas are the only realities, the only permanent and unchanging phenomena. Men and nations with all their buzzing and humming activity are as fleeting as the ripples on a summer sea. The littleness and powerlessness of man are ever present thoughts to the philosopher. The brightest is only a ray of sunshine soon to disappear in the coming gloom of night. You are only a phantom of nothingness and your trivial life is quickly ended in dreamless and forgotten sleep. Earthly life is now and evermore will be the same brief but unequal struggle with oblivion.

Steep Railway Grades.

In the mountain gorges of the West grades of 400 and 500 feet to the mile are met. The greatest inclination on any European railroad worked by ordinary locomotives is on the two miles between Enghien and Montmorency, near Paris, being 45 feet in 1,000, or an angle of 2 degrees 5 minutes. Grades of 35 feet to the 1,000, or 2 degrees, are found on several roads. The grade of the Simplon road, the highway road over the Alps with the least slope, in only 3 degrees to the 1,000, the maximum slope that can be traveled on a highway being 132, or 7½ degrees. The grades on cable or cog-wheel railways are, of course, considerably greater; that of the road up the Swiss Rigi from Vitzman is in the steepest part 250 to 1,000, while the maximum on the Mount Washington Railroad is estimated at 330 and 375, this latter being the steepest railway with a central toothed rail, and the steepest of any kind in the world, except the cable road up the cone of Mount Vesuvius, which has the extraordinary inclination of 630 to 1,000. In time the tops of nearly all mountains within the beaten routes of travel will have railway tracks to their tops, as in several cases in the Alps and in Pike's Peak.

In Three Great States.

In 1890 Illinois mined 12,104,272 tons of coal against 5,988,895 in the year 1880. Ohio, in 1890, produced 9,976,787 tons, and Indiana 2,848,057 tons. The area in which coal can be mined here is very large, being 37,000 square miles in Illinois, 10,000 square miles in Ohio, and 7,000 miles in Indiana. The coal mined in the States above named in 1890 was 25,000,000 tons, and it was worth a little less than a dollar a ton at the mines.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.
Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.
After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause.

The Author of "Darling Nellie Gray."

The name of the composer of the popular ballad, "Darling Nellie Grey," is Benjamin J. Hanby, not Harnby, as has been stated. He was the oldest son of Rev. William Hanby, who was a bishop of the United Brethren Church, and at the time the song was written the family lived at Westerville, a small town twelve miles north of Columbus, Ohio. His youngest brother, Samuel M. Hanby, now lives at Birmingham, Ala., and his oldest sister, Mrs. Amanda Bilheimer, with her husband, lived as a missionary in Africa for many years. "Ben" Hanby, as he was familiarly known, was a natural genius, but the force of circumstances prevented the fruition of all his desires. He died while in the bloom of early manhood and is buried in the graveyard at Westerville.

WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS

MINUTE DESCRIPTION OF THE TOPOGRAPHY.

The Different Buildings Will Be Marvels of Beautiful Architecture—Description of Some of the Principal Ones—Peerless in the World's History.

Many thousands, no doubt, have begun to be curious as to how the buildings and grounds of the Columbian Exposition will appear—what sort of a spectacle they will present. A bird's-eye view of the site and buildings and a series of cuts of drawings showing the elevations of the several structures and their ground plans will soon be issued. Without waiting for these, however, a general idea can be given.

In the northern portion of the grounds we will see a picturesque group of buildings, perhaps forty or fifty of them, constituting a veritable village of palaces. Here, on a hundred acres or more, beautifully laid out, will stand the buildings of foreign nations and of a number of the States of the Union, surrounded by lawns, walks, and beds of flowers and shrubbery. They will be ranged on wide, curving avenues, will include some of the most ornate, costly and palatial structures, and constitute perhaps the most interesting portion of the entire exposition. In the western part of the group will stand the Illinois building, 400 by 100 and fifty feet in height, and costing $350,000. It will be severely classic in style, with a dome in the center, and a great porch facing southward. In this portion of the park, too, will stand the fine arts building, which is to be a magnificent palace costing half a million. Just south of the foreign and State buildings may be observed a considerable expanse of the lagoon, with inlet to the lake, and encompassing three islands. On the largest one will stand the United States fisheries building, 700 feet in length, and flanked at each end by a curved arcade connecting it with two round pavilions in which will be aquaria and the tackle exhibit. This building, designed by Henry Ives Cobb, of Chicago, will be in the Spanish style, and conspicuous because of a liberal use of color.

A little further south, across an area of the lagoon, will be the United States Government Building, measuring three hundred and fifty by four hundred and twenty feet, and having a dome one hundred and twenty feet in diameter and one hundred and fifty feet high. It will be constructed of stone, iron, and glass, classic in style, cover four acres, and cost $400,000. On the lake shore, east of its building and in part in the intervening space, the Government will have a gun-battery, life-saving stations complete with apparatus, war balloons, and a full-size model of a $3,000,000 battle-ship of the first class. The visitor arriving by steamboat will probably see, also, anchored near by, a Columbus fleet—a reproduction, as near as may be, of the one with which the great discoverer sailed from Palos—and also a Government revenue cutter and one or two torpedo boats.

The largest building of the Exposition—that of manufactures and liberal arts—will measure 1,700 by 800 feet, with two interior courts, and at its center a great dome 350 feet in diameter. This building, of French renaissance, is designed by George S. Post, of New York.

After passing this immense structure, the steamboat will drop alongside the pier. This, as designed by Augustus Saint Gaudens, of Paris, will be a thing of beauty and a source of much enjoyment to visitors. Two parallel piers will extend from the shore about 400 feet, where, taking out curves, they will partly enclose a circular harbor, from the center of which will rise, on a great pedestal, a commanding statue of Columbus or of the Republic. On the embracing portions of the piers will stand forty-four exquisite, isolated columns, representing the forty-four States, each one bearing the coat of arms of the State it symbolizes. The north or main pier will extend a total distance of 1,500 feet, taking there a deflection several hundred feet to the southward, and having at its extremity a Greek pavilion 200 feet in diameter, gayly colored and adorned.

From the pier, extending westward, will be a long avenue or court several hundred feet wide, affording, Chief Burnham says, "a spectacle unparalleled in the world—a marvel of architectural grace and sublimity, an exposition of itself." To the right, at the entrance of this grand avenue, will be the great manufactures building, and farther back the other attractions already referred to. To the left will be the agricultural building, measuring eight hundred by five hundred feet, designed by Architect McKim, of New York. This, Chief Burnham says, will be a "dream." Its cost will be half a million. Between this and the huge manufactures building juts a branch of the lagoon. All down this grand avenue, encompassing a beautiful sheet of water, will stand imposing buildings, along the majestic facades of which will sweep the gaze of the visitor until it rests upon the administration building of the exposition, which terminates the vista nearly a mile distant. Upon traversing this, the visitor will find it a veritable Bois de Boulogne or Versailles, in point of beauty of effects produced by landscape achitecture and gardening.

Passing the agricultural building the visitor will come to the great machinery hall, which lies to the westward of it, and which is connected with it by a horseshoe arcade doubling a branch of the lagoon. It will be nearly identical with it in size and cost, but will differ considerably in appearance, being "serious, impressive, and rich in architectural line and detail," Chief Burnham says, "and the best work of its designers, Peabody & Stearns, of Boston."

Opposite machinery hall and north of it, in the center of the "long walk," will stand the exposition administration building. This will be one of the most imposing, and, in proportion to its size, the most expensive of the large structures. Richard M. Hunt, President of the American Institute of Architects, is its designer, and he has made it stately and simple yet exceedingly striking in appearance, and an excellent representative of Italian renaissance. It will cost $650,000, be adorned with scores of statuary figures, and be surmounted by a gilded dome rising 250 feet.

To the northward of the administration building, on either side and facing the grand avenue, will be two more immense buildings, one for the electrical and the other for the mining exhibit. These will be about equal in size, covering each a little more than five acres and a half. Both will be French renaissance. The former, designed by Van Brunt & Howe, of Kansas City, will be the more expensive, however, costing $650,000; while the latter, designed by S. S. Beman, of Chicago, will cost $350,000. The board of architects have declared that both will be exceptionally imposing structures.

North of these buildings in the main lagoon will be an island of twenty or thirty acres in area. It is the intention to have this kept as wild and primitive as possible. There the visitor may wander through a miniature "forest primeval," pathless and untransformed by art, and may hunt the fragrant wild flower or the saucy chipmunk, and generally commune with nature in its native haunts.

Proceeding from the administration building still further westward, or, more accurately, southwestward, the observer will arrive at the railway facilities for the arrival and departure of visitors. Six parallel tracks will sweep into the grounds in a huge circle at the extreme southwest portion, entering and leaving at nearly the same point. Around this loop the trains, in arriving and departing, will sweep at intervals of a few minutes, and the depot accommodations will be so extensive and well arranged that it is believed there will be almost no confusion or crowding.

Within this loop made by the railway tracks will be the machinery annex—a huge building covering several acres and containing the overflow exhibits from machinery hall, with which it will be connected by subways. Within the loop also will be the main power-house, from which power will be furnished to such buildings on the grounds as require it.

To the southward of the line of buildings which are ranged along the south side of the grand avenue is a vast open expanse which will be devoted to the live stock exhibit. Here immense stock buildings, show ring, and whatever else will contribute to the success of the live stock feature of the exposition will be constructed.

Jackson Park resembles a right-angled triangle in shape. The visitor has thus far, on his tour of inspection, traversed the lake shore or hypothenuse of the triangle and across the southern end, or the base. It remains only to turn toward the north and note structures ranged along the perpendicular. The first one arrived at is the transportation building. This will be Romanesque in style and one of the largest of all, measuring one thousand and twenty by two hundred and sixty feet, exclusive of a great annex in the rear. The transportation building, together with the depots, will cost $1,000,000. North of this will be the horticultural building, another immense structure, one thousand by one hundred and fifty feet, with three domes, one at each end and a larger one in the center. This will be constructed chiefly of glass and iron, and will cost $250,000

Still farther north, and directly opposite the park entrance of "midway plaisance," will stand the woman's building, which is to be four hundred by two hundred feet in dimensions, two stories high, and will cost $200,000. Here the Lady Managers will have their headquarters, and here will be collected a doubtless wonderful exhibit illustrating the progress and attainments of women in the various branches of industry.

Passing the woman's building the visitor can turn toward the northeast and inspect the foreign and State buildings in the northern portion of the park, of which he is supposed to have caught a general view from the steamboat deck, or he can turn sharply to the west into "midway plaisance" and ascend the Proctor Tower. This will be constructed of steel and be one thousand and fifty feet high, or about one hundred feet higher than the Eiffel. From its top the view attainable of the exposition grounds and buildings and of the great city lying to the northward will be magnificent beyond all description.

West of the tower, along the plaisance and overflowing into Washington Park, will be a large and curious aggregation of structures, including probably some of the foreign and State buildings, and many of semi-private construction, and of a nature which cannot yet be described. Almost innumerable structures and exhibits, such as reproductions of famous buildings, etc., most of them novel and striking in character, have been proposed, and it is not yet possible to tell how many or which of them will be erected. That there will be an astonishing array of them there can be no doubt, and unquestionably some of them will be important and exceedingly interesting features of the great exposition.

All the important buildings will stand on terraces four feet above the general park level, thus greatly improving the general landscape effect and rendering their own appearance more imposing. From scores of domes and towers and minarets, flags and streamers will be floating, and both the exterior and interior of the buildings will be "warm," with a liberal display of color. The beautiful park, with its magnificent array of architecture, will surely present one of the finest spectacles the eyes of man ever beheld.

A New-Yorker who has spent some years at Tangier, the quaint old seaport of Morocco, and who returned to find the newspapers more than ordinarily full of the misdoings of bank and trust company officials, thinks it is fortunate for the offenders that they did not operate in that African town. "They don't mince matters over there," he says, "for a man who loses sight of the distinction between his own property and some one else's. When a thief is caught in the most trivial offense he is told to hold up his hands. Then they ask him which hand he would like to keep. When he has made his choice they cut off the other. This naturally creates a prejudice against kleptomania in its various forms. I don't quite know what they would do with a bank officer who got his clutch on a million, but I guess they would save the hand with its contents and throw the rest of him to the sharks.—New York Times.

THE Czar is not musical. At all events, he does not care to hear Jews harping about their wrongs.

Printing Shops at Sea.

Very few persons outside the shipping business are aware that there are now more than a dozen ocean-going steamships with a printing department on board. They are fully equipped, and can turn out anything in the printing line, with the possible exception of a highly colored lithograph or a gilt-edge playing card. The City of Paris and the City of New York of the Inman line, the Teutonic and the Majestic of the White Star line, and a number of craft in the North German Lloyd fleet have a large space set aside for the use of the printers.

On every trip of the City of Paris a newspaper is printed at sea. It is newsy and breezy, and smells of Old Neptune as much as a South Sea whaler does. It is a four-page sheet of the color of old parchment, and everything of any note that occurs during the passage from port to port is faithfully recorded. The passengers and officers supply the "copy." Everything is contributed free. There are poems by women passengers, fairy tales of the sea, written by landsmen, and records of this or that concert held on board or incidents of the dinner table.

Turning out this newspaper is not the only thing that keeps the printing office of the Paris busy. An abstract of the ship's log has to be made, giving the dates, directions of wind, distances, and courses traveled, position of vessel by latitude and longitude at noon the end of each day, and the general remarks as to the condition of sky, air, and sea. Several thousand of these have to be prepared and delivered to the mail steamboat on the arrival of the steamship at each port. As the mail boat always reaches the company's pier in advance of the printing department, the abstract of log is generally at the company's office down town for newspaper reporters before the steamship reaches her dock. All this printing is free of charge to the passengers, the steamship company meeting the expense.

So popular has this printing shop become aboard ship that "plants" have been placed aboard other than regular liners. There is an A1 shop aboard the United States man-of-war Chicago, the flagship of the Squadron of Evolution. On a recent cruise of the White Squadron this "plant" was used in printing a sheet called the Chicago Bulletin, besides doing other official service for the officers of the fleet. Nine numbers were printed during the cruise, the last at Norfolk, Va., on May 23. In the publication were printed articles on "Hayti as a Nation," "Our Naval Cadets," "Is Jack a Grumbler?" "Our National Flag," and "Squadron Target Practice." The late Rear Admiral Geo. F. Preble, Rear Admiral Thomas H. Stevens and the late Commander W. F. Spicer also contributed three clever poems to the sheet. The officers and crew of the fleet say they could not get along without the Bulletin now.

A Queer Hen.

"Hens are funny critters," says an old farmer, "and I have one on my lot. A few months ago she took a liking for an old brindle cow of mine. At first all she did was to go out to the pasture with the cow, but after a while she began to jump on the cow's back. For a long time the cow resented this and shook the hen off. But it did not do any good; the hen hopped right on again, until at last, in sheer despair, the cow accepted the situation. She was probably the more inclined to do so when she discovered, as she soon did, that Biddy, as much as possible, kept insects from annoying her. In fact, she even went further than that; for when she discovered that the cow would like to have her back scratched, she scratched it in a way to make the cow very happy. As a result of this the cow soon began to enjoy the companionship of the hen; and now, when the hen gets off for awhile to eat, old brindle is evidently uneasy until she comes back again."—Evening Wisconsin.

BABIES are so slow in learning to talk because they have to devote so much of their time and energy to trying to understand what in the world it is their mothers say.

IT is now alleged that hot water is a cure for consumption. This will explain how cases of domestic infelicity never develop into consumption.

A Prize Baby.

On an Atlantic steamer bound for New York, a year or so ago, the usual entertainment for the benefit of a Liverpool charity was projected. There happened to be on board a good many "professionals," actors and singers, who all promised to take part, except one, who kept aloof, and stubbornly declined to assist. As he was the star most desired, every effort was made to change his mind, and the committee of arrangements at last applied to Mr. P. T. Barnum (who was, as usual, an inconspicuous passenger), and begged him to labor with the reluctant singer. Mr. Barnum undertook the mission, and after stating the case and making his appeal, somewhat to his surprise the man at once consented.

"I refused all these people," he said, "and I dislike exceedingly to take part in this sort of an entertainment, but if you ask me, Mr. Barnum, I cannot decline. I am glad to do anything that will please you."

Mr. Barnum felt much complimented, but protested a little, when the man continued:

"You did me a great favor once, Mr. Barnum, and I never have forgotten it. You may not recall it, but I am under great obligations to you."

"Why," hesitated the great showman, "I must confess I don't recall—I don't remember any circumstance, and yet your face is familiar. I haven't forgot that. Where was it we met?"

"Oh! it was thirty years ago, Mr. Barnum. I took the first prize in your first baby show. I've always felt grateful to you."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

Can't You Catch On

To a known means of overcoming that obstinate disorder, constipation? Of course you can. Then why don't you? Ask those who have tried it, and they will tell that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a matchless laxative, effectual without violence—thoroughly alterative, but perfectly reliable. It invigorates, too, no less than it regulates the system, and it is chiefly to this first quality that it owes the permanency of its regulating effects, since, if vigor is lacking in the region of the bowels, the stomach or the liver, healthful activity in those organs is suspended. Deobstruents and cathartics in general are simply that and nothing more; they relax the bowels merely without invigorating them, and as their laxative action is usually abrupt and violent, they really tend to weaken the organs. Use the Bitters, also, for malaria, rheumatism, indigestion, debility and kidney trouble.

A Quarrel Among the Flowers.

"What has become of the Sweet Pea?"

"Mignonette it."

"If she told you so, you shouldn't Violet her confidence."

"You needn't scold about it. I'll tell Poppy."

"I'm not worried Aster that."

"You Lilac everything when you say it?"

The Rose blushed; the Gentian looked blue, but said nothing.

Only 2,500 Socialistic votes were polled in Chicago the other day, but that was only the weaker portion. Only about one out of seven Socialists can vote in this country, and counting in the women, Chicago can reckon at least 18,000, or enough to keep the whole country stirred up.

A Little Bird Told Me So.

This common popular expression is not a literal quotation, but is borrowed from the 20th verse of the 10th chapter of Ecclesiastes:

"Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber, for a bird of the air shall carry thy voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

"August Flower"

The Hon. J. W. Fennimore is the Sheriff of Kent Co., Del., and lives at Dover, the County Seat and Capital of the State. The sheriff is a gentleman fifty-nine years of age, and this is what he says: "I have "used your August Flower for several years in my family and for my "own use, and found it does me "more good than any other remedy. "I have been troubled with what I "call Sick Headache. A pain comes "in the back part of my head first, "and then soon a general headache "until I become sick and vomit. "At times, too, I have a fullness "after eating, a pressure after eating "at the pit of the stomach, and "sourness, when food seemed to rise "up in my throat and mouth. When "I feel this coming on if I take a "little August Flower it relieves "me, and is the best remedy I have "ever taken for it. For this reason "I take it and recommend it to "others as a great remedy for Dyspepsia, &c."

A Mystery Explained.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and fine book, containing many marvelous cures, free at F. E. J. J. Fitzgerald was in Chicago last week.

George Kennedy goes to Ohio this week to visit.

The funeral of David Oberlin was largely attended.

Mrs. Bigler went to Angola Saturday returning Monday.

Miss Nellie Beidler, of Elkhart, is in town visiting friends.

The U. B. Sunday School has decided to picnic at Hamilton, July 30.

Miss Ora Yeagy, who has been visiting in Bluffton has returned home.

Soldier boys are off to the encampment at Ft. Wayne, "all so bold and gay."

Our town has taken the lead in this county, this season, in the matter of small fruits.

Miss Dora Stevens, of Elkhart, has been the guest of Isaac Speer's family, the past week.

C. M. Phillips has his plum tree loaded down with fruit again this season. He has the knack.

Jacob Brown, an old resident of Uniontown, was buried last Sunday. He had been in feeble health for a long time.

The death of Jacob Brown, removes from our midst one of the most familiar figures. He was a man generally respected.

Nellie Carpenter of Pleasant Lake, and Jennie and Laura Huestis, of Fort Wayne, are visitsng friends in Waterloo this week.

Rev. Loudy will preach on the street next Saturday evening. Sunday evening he will preach in the schoolhouse at Uniontown.

W. H. Leas, J. F. Shuman, Gen. Blair and C. M. Phillips, our local attorneys, have been over at court this week, giving attention to cases.

Mrs. F. W. Willis and Mrs. Isaac Speer, jointly entertained a number of young misses, Saturday. All seemed to enjoy the occasion.

Mr. Loveland who publishes the DeKalb County Democrat, has moved here and occupies the rooms owned by R. J. Fisk over Zerkle's grocery.

Rev. J. M. DeWeese and family go to Rome City the first of next week to attend the assembly meetings, which convene the 29th of July.

Miss Hattie Smith entertained a small company of young ladies at tea, Saturday afternoon, in honor of Miss Walker, who goes to Chautauqua this week.

John Shuman will be acting secretary for the fair at present, while Secretary Kiplinger is busy. Mr. Shuman will attend to all the business, answer inquiries, send out premium lists, make contracts, etc.

Rev. Mr. Tracy preached to a large audience, on the street corner at Speer & Co.'s store, Saturday evening. The best of order was maintained. There will be preaching at the same place next Saturday evening.

Scott Lotzenheiser has made arrangements with his father, to hold his hydraulic cement for painting roofs, and any one wishing work done, can have it attended to, or information given by Reuben Loutzenheiser.

A decision by the circuit court court at Dayton, Ohio, in the U. B. Publishing House case, which was appealed to it by the radicals, was handed down Monday. It is said to be the strongest decision sustaining the General Conference yet rendered.

Last week Friday afternoon Mrs. L. J. Blair entertained very delightfully to tea, a company of sixteen ladies. Every thing of course was in the best of taste; and to judge from the rapidity with which the tongues flew, and the danties disappeared, all enjoyed themselves.

Children's day was observed Sunday evening in the M. E. church. The program was a good one and well carried out. Rev. DeWeese made appropriate remarks in a happy manner and before the excercises closed, the youngest son of Ezra Patterson gave a piece of music on the violin accompanied by his mother on the piano. The church was beautifully decorated.

J. F. Shuman, acting secretary, informs us that several rights for the fair have been already sold, and at prices much above those of last year. This shows that they made some money at our fair last year. We believe the crowd will be at least as large this year. There was good wheat inside the track this season, and $50 was received for grass. This gives us a cash starter of perhaps $150. A good omen.

The temperance meeting, held last Friday evening at the Evangelical church, was not as well attended as usual; probably owing to a misunderstanding as to arrangements and program for the evening. Much interest seems to be felt by many, and a desire to take action that may put down intemperance. Wednesday evening, of this week an appointment is made for a temperance meeting to be held at the M. E. church. Sunday evening, July 26th, Rev. J, M. DeWeese, will give a temperance address at the same place.

SUMMIT.

Just received a supply of fruit jars at Lawson's.

Mr. Hoffer and wife of Hudson, were in town Wednesday.

Wm. Sprankle and wife of Auburn, visited here Monday.

Henry Lawson and wife were guests of A. A. Forney's Sunday.

Mrs. Lem. Colten visited Mrs. Henry Snowberger Monday afternoon.

Warren Boyer and wife from near Hamilton made our town a short visit last Wednesday.

Mrs. Geo. Erwin's father, Mr. Shock, two daughters. and brother-in-law Mr. Gettes of Roanoke, Ind., are visiting her.

A. A. Forney says the party that stole his hitching strap, halter and hold back straps are known and if they don't bring them back their names will be published in the papers.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Alexander Hoffman was buried last week.

The walls of the Haskins Block are going up rapidly.

Mrs. Sarah Imhoff's condition remains nearly unchanged.

Emlin Campbell has returned from the Angola normal for a brief vacation

J. M. Lengenfelter is about to take his summer outing at Island Park. He expects to stay about a month.

The old Lake Shore coal dock has nearly disappeared. It has been spread out on our streets and makes very good roads.

The health of our community was never better than at present. But very few cases of sickness are reported in any part of town.

Our wheat is all harvested and many are threshing. The yield is from 15 to about 30 bushels to the acre. Oats bids fair to be an immense crop, as do also potatoes and corn.

Mrs. Walter Maxwell and Mrs. Emma Beidler, who each underwent a difficult surgical operation at Detroit, are reported as rapidly improving and will soon be restored to their friends in physical health.

The Wabash people have at last abandoned the reservoir ½ mile west of town as the water contains so much clay as to be destructive to the engines. They are using the same kind of water the Lake Shore has long been using, pumping it from the depth below.

Our people have been talking electric lights lately but just now the topic is turning in the channel of waterworks. The latter seems to be gaining ground and there is a probability that a move will soon be made to bond the town for that purpose. We have a never failing supply of the finest water to be found anywhere at a depth of about 100 feet, that could be utilized at a moderate expense.

SPENCERVILLE.

Jack Beams is the proud father of a son.

Born, to Mrs. Della Rummell, Friday, July 10, a daughter.

Miss Lizzie Rummell has been visiting her parents a few days during the past week.

Quite an excitement was created Saturday evening by word reaching town that the nurse had by misatke administered carbolic acid to George Kimes, but antidotes being administered promptly, nothing serious resulted.

While attempting to lead a fractious colt attached to a mowing machine last Friday, George Kimes was thrown into the cutter bar and had his left leg cut off above the ankle. Dr. Shook was called, and assisted by Dr. Emanuel, dressed the wound.

DEKALB.

Corn is coming forth very rapidly.

J. F. Housel is selling goods at Ft. Wayne prices.

Harvesting of the wheat is over and the song of the thresher is heard in the land.

J. F. Housel is the owner of a fine pair of twin calves. He talks of going west and starting a cattle ranch,

H. J. Hyatt sells groceries and dry goods at McKinley's old stand. Also, keeps a butter and egg wagon on the road.

People generally are well, only a little worried over hard work. Recreation is the best prescription to use in such cases.

El. Lane and wife have dissolved partnership. She takes two of the children and he the other two. She also gets the place near Huntertown.

A wedding at DeKalb Thursday evening and a belling Saturday evening. Mr. John P. Grim and Miss Lillian Housel are responsible for both.

Farmers Alliance picnic at Jake Fansler's grove near Cedar Chapel July 25, Good speakers are expected also Mr. Snyder from Mount Summit, Ind. Everybody invited to come and bring their well filled baskets.

CONCORD.

Cora and Ida Krise are reported better.

Mrs. Gifford was at Spencerville, last Thursday.

Quarterly meeting will be held here August 8 and 9.

G. W. and F. B. Draggoo were breaking colts Saturday.

Alice Draggoo and Master Lloyd Clear were at Auburn Wednesday.

Mrs. Charlie Gill, of St. Joe, is visiting her parents, B. Brown and wife.

Mr. Timmerman and wife, of Cedarville, visited their daughter Mrs. Irvin Sunday.

E. Wyatt and family, of Allen county, were the guests of his brother Daniel, Sunday.

Molly and Edith Brown, of Union Chapel, visited their cousin Celia Morr, Saturday and Sunday.

Tommy Husselman and Harry Draggoo, of Auburn, were guests of G. W. Draggoo, last Sunday.

Henry Sebert has taken his daughter Pearl to Dr. Dills, of Fort Wayne, for treatment of her eyes.

I. N. Wyatt, of Hicksvile, visited his invalid mother, Sunday.

H. R. Culbertson and D. W. Welch were driving on our streets, Sunday.

Don Blair and sister Bell, of Newville, made a brief but pleasant call on their cousin, Alice Draggoo, Sunday.

The Concordites will hold a picnic Aug. 1, in I. Wyatt's grove one-fourth mile south. Refreshments can be had on the ground.

Geo. Kimes met with rather a serious accident last Friday. He and his son hitched a colt to a mower, and in starting the machine the colt became frightened and started to run. By some means the driver lost his balance on the seat and became entangled in the knives, which severed one of his feet. The team was stopped, when his brother Harvey took a hitching strap and bound the limb so as to stop the flow of blood until the arrival of a physician. This is a very unfortunate accident and will no doubt be the source of a great deal of suffering for Mr. K., but it is to be hoped that his unexpected experience will prove a valuable lesson to those who are careless in the management of young horses.

AUBURN, IND.

Forty-three mineral producing counties in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, in a convention of more than 100 delegates, held at Chattanooga, Tenn., have decided to make a tri state exhibit of the World's Fair.

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, cold, or any trouble with throat, chest or lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Large size 50c and $1.00. 3

Chamberlain s Restorative Pills.

These pills are peculiarly adapted to all bilious affections, and as a safe pleasant and reliable purgative and alterative have no superior. For bilious fevers and all other fevers incident to this climate they are unsurpassed. Ask your druggist for them. Sold by all druggists 1

Dr. James A. Henshall, of the Ohio fish commission, will have charge of that part of the World's Fair fish and fisheries exhibit which relates to fishing tackle. Dr. Henshall is a famous fisherman and promises that visitors will see the finest display of angling appliances ever collected.

A Boon to Wives.

Having used "Mother's Friend" I would not be without it. It is a boon to wives who know they must pass through the painful ordeal of childbirth. Mrs. C. Melbourne, Iowa. Write The Bradfield Regulator Co, Atlanta, Ga., for further particulars. Sold by F. E. Davenport and all druggists.

They are singing a topical song in Chicago beginning thus:

We may get a world's fair a dozen years hence;

Just now we have nothing but a high board fence.

She Suffered for Fifteen Years.

My wife has suffered for fifteen years from congestion and painful menstruation. After using three bottles of Bradfield's Female Regulator she is now able to do her house work and go where she pleases. J. W. DAVIS, Moravian Falls, N. C.

Write Bradfield Reg. Co., Atlanta, Ga., for particulars. Sold by F. E. Davenport and all druggists.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Forty years ago, Auburn had no county buildings of value, and held the field without competition from rival towns. In the fall of the year, Miles Waterman, county auditor, published a notice in the Albion Observer inviting proposals for furnishing the materials and building a jail for DeKalb county, the work to be finished by Sept. 1st, 1852. The advertisement records a progressive step and this same year, the Presbyterian Society of Auburn, emulating the example of their Methodist friends, erected for their use the little frame church, afterward owned by the Lutherans and at present by the society of the Church of God.

That part of a lot on which it still stands, apparently a little the worse for the wear of time, was deeded to the Society by S. W. Ralston on the usual condition of ownership as long as used for church purposes and when the building was completed, Auburn could boast of two meeting-houses and the societies had places to worship.

Prior to this time, active temperance people had organized what was known as "Sons of Temperance, Auburn Division No. 251," and had been allowed for their assemblies, the use of the southeast room of the Court House. So that in the strength of union, the three great influences which elevate society, morally, religiously and educationally, were represented in Auburn by order, church and school, the latter being in the transition state just preceding the legislative enactment that established the common school system, which in a crude and unsatisfactory manner began its work.

Forty years' experience have been productive of great changes and could a citizen have fallen asleep like Rip Van Winkle to awake in 1891, his surroundings in Auburn would be productive of as much that was strange and perplexing.

Aside from fine building, beautiful streets and electric lights. and the big teams with the fire engine galloping to the scene of a blaze, he could find manners, methods and fashions changed.

Once it was the rule in church to make long prayers and to preach long and most wearisome doctrinal sermons, relieving the tedium by congregational singing; now he could hear brief prayers, choir singing blending with organ music and would scarcely have settled himself to hear the sermon when it would be concluded.

He would hear more of heaven than of hell and listen to much of human duty and little of former sectarian disquisitions.

He would find intemperance still tolerated and prohibition materialized in politics under the leadership of our friends John W. Baxter, Chas. Eckhart, Alex Kinmont and others, ever undaunted by defeat and hopeful of a temperance tidal wave to come.

The schools would please and puzzle him, the helpless reliance upon and strict adherance to the teaching of text books however inapplicable, to the brief, practical rules governing business would seem familiar but the system prevailing he perforce must admire.

Were he an old-time pedagogue he would find the practice of physical punishment obsolete. The ferule no more blisters the backward-bent palm, the rod no longer stimulates the indolent nor restrains the truant.

It would be interesting reading to all especially so to any that might have been school-boys and school-girls of 1851, and following years, would our friends Mr. Steves and Mr. Case contribute an article on "The Schoolmaster of Forty Years Ago?" Would these lines on the Village Schoolmaster apply to Auburn?

"There, in his noisy mansion skilled to rule,
The village master taught his little school.
Yet, he was kind, or, if if severe in aught,
The love he bore to learning was his fault;
But past is all his fame. The very spot
Where many a time he triumphed is forgot."

Who remembers now the attempted reform in dress named after Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, the temperance, dress reform and women's rights advocate? Did the Bloomer costume have supporters in Auburn? Could they have lived till now they would see such changes as would have proved those early and sharply criticised customers had suggested a needed change and there are few young people who recollect the crinoline craze of the fifties.

It was said by an Auburn minister some time since that the people of to-day could not return to the methods of their fathers. The farmers certainly would not if they could. It is more pleasant in the retrospection than the experience to recall former days in 1851.

The carriage manufactories of Kiblinger and of Eckhart would have had little patronage, the time of the buggy had not come and the stout-built wagons like those made by Englebert Ashley were calculated to withstand the wrenches in deep ruts and rough wheeling over long stretches of corduroy which then made part of the rude roads.

Tillage was mostly by hand. A light corn plow came later. In the field the farmer, his sons and his help, hoe in hand moved ar right angles to the light furrows, planting corn taken from a bag tied about the waist and dropping pumpkin seed at intervals. Later, the same force was seen doing the work now greatly done by the cultivator.

Harvest was a busy time and help came from the towns along the roads and the swing of the cradles with their straight handles or grape vine impliment was followed by the alert, steady move of the men who could "rake and bind" and keep up. The twine-binder has changed all this and soon the farmer boy will not know how binding was done.

Each town and village of DeKalb now contribute a market for the farmers' products and the telegraph keeps the buyers in touch with the pulsation of the city prices governed by the crop reports, grain in sight, rumors of European shortage, or war-like complications, but in 1851, the market for the farmers of this section of country was at Ft. Wayne, where prices Nov. 13, were quoted as follows: Wheat, 45 cts.; with no prospects of improvement. Corn and oats, 20 to 25 cts.; rye, 35; butter, 10; eggs, 10; pork, $4.; beef, $3.; flax seed, 75; timothy seed, $1 25; clover, $3 25 to $4.; and cranberries, $1 75 to $2.

A Cool Cloth Without Ice.

One of the most useful hints for sick-room attendance is very seldom known outside of a hospital ward, and not even there in many cases; the hint is how to obtain a cold cloth without ice. Every one knows that in fevers, or weakness, a cold cloth on the forehead or face, or base of brain, is one of the most comforting things in the world. In the tropical hospitals, and where the ice is scarce, all that is necessary is to wet a linen cloth, wave it to and fro in the air, fold it, and place on the patient. Have another cloth ready, waving it to and fro, just before applying it; these cloths have a more grateful. and lasting coldness than those made so by burning cold produced by ice.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

Girls who use SAPOLIO are QUICKLY MARRIED.

SAPOLIO is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. If your store-keeper does not keep it you should insist upon his doing so, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

THE CELEBRATED OHIO MURDER TRIAL AT AN END.

Elliott Guilty of Murder in Second Degree—Bad Wreck on the Pittsburgh—Insurance Companies Barred Out of Ohio.

IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

A special from Columbus, Ohio, dated the 28th, inst., says: The long, anxiously-waited-for Elliott jury case is at an end. At 10:20 this morning the jury filed into the court room and announced that Wm. J. Elliott had been found guilty of murder in the second degree for the killing of Albert C. Osborn on the 23d of February last. The verdict is no surprise, as the long wait of the twelve men in their room had given out the impression that there was some doubt as to the grade of the crime and that if there was not some disagreement the verdict would be as rendered, this morning.

The suspense of the great crowd was intense while Clerk Mitchell read the preliminary lines of the verdict. When that point was reached where the verdict read: "We, the jury, etc., find the defendant, W. J. Elliott," Miss Nellie Maroney screamed out and fell back in her brother's arms in a faint, she evidently expected the next words would be "guilty of murder in the first degree."

Clerk Mitchell paused for a few seconds and then went on to read: "Not guilty of murder in the first degree, but do find him guilty of murder in the second degree."

When these words were spoken Elliott pulled his Grand Army button from the button-hole in the lappel of his coat and threw it viciously at the jury. Instead of weakening, W. J. Elliott grew more revengeful and his face took on a look of wildest anger.

WHO'S GOT IT?

A special from Indianapolis says: "The Governor refuses to give out for publication the report of John W. Coons, who investigated the alleged frauds perpetrated against the State at Washington. It is said Coons made sensational discoveries and learned that $300,000 is due the State. While in Washington it is said he discovered the most glaring frauds in connection with the settlements of Indiana war claims, many of the vouchers being duplicated. One voucher in favor of a well-known physician for $53.70 was, it is charged, raised to $5,370 and paid. The Governor was asked if Coons had discovered that the State had been defrauded out of $300,000. He replied: "Well, I can't say that is the amount exactly, but it is enormous. If the claims of the State for war tax, interest and national road affairs were paid the amount in total would not be less than $1,000,000."

Barred from Ohio.

State Insurance Commissioner Kinder, of Ohio, has refused to license a number of insurance companies because of their refusal to comply with the laws of the State, and they are debarred from doing business in Ohio. Among them are the Preferred Mutual Accident Association, of New York, and the New York Accident Insurance Company, of New York. The following companies were refused certificates of admission to the State: National Benevolent Association, of Minneapols; Bankers' and Traders' Accident Association, of New York, and Connecticut Indemnity Association, of Waterbury, Conn.

His Last Take.

Samuel Sands, one of the oldest citizens of Baltimore, died recently in his 92d year. For a long period he had probably been the oldest living printer, being in uninterrupted service as printer, editor or publisher since his apprenticeship began in 1811. Nearly half a century ago he was publisher of the American Farmer, the first agricutural paper started in this country. During the war he was an unconditional Union man and has since been a Republican.

A Bad Wreck.

Two freight trains on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway, collided with a terrible crash near Salem, Ohio. Two engines and eleven freight cars were demolished. Several members of the crews were severly injured, but none fatally. A tramp, who was stealing a ride on No. 73 is missing. It is believed that he is buried under the debris. The destruction of property is very great.

Canadian Independence.

Quebec special: Premier Mercier will call the Provincial Legislature together in September and introduce a resolution in support of Canadian independence, as opposed to imperial federation.

Disastrous Floods.

Berlin special: Floods are doing immense damage to property in Posen. Many corpses of persons drowned in the floods have been seen floating in the River Neisse.

Killed by Falling Coal.

In the Berwynd mines at Portage, Pa., John Church and William Myers were instantly killed by a fall of coal. A third man, a Hungarian, was probably fatally hurt.

The Big Four Strike Ends.

The Big Four strike among the switchmen at Springfield, Ohio, was settled by the men going to work at the old wages. The blockade of freight was raised.

Knocked Out in the Fifth.

In the prize fight at San Francisco, Cal., between Abe Willis, of Australia, and George Dixon, of Boston, Dixon showed the best from the first and in the fourth round downed Willis. In the fifth he downed him twice, knocking him clear out.

Forest Fires Raging.

The town of Columbia, Cal., was saved from forest flames by back-firing. The fire is rushing along Stansilaus River with no hope of saving the American camp.

A Frightful Wreck.

Through a misunderstanding of orders two passenger trains on the Denver and Rio Grande road collided at Carlisle, Col. Both trains were crowded and were running at full speed, and came together with terrible effect. The engineer and fireman of one of the trains jumped and were but slightly injured. Those killed were: Conductor Perry, Express Messenger Cole, Engineer Ardell, and an unknown tramp who was stealing a ride. The seriously injured were Express Messenger Stuart, Benjamin Mullaneaux, A. Robbins, H. L. Gibson, A. S. Hall, and M. Adams. A wrecking train was immediately sent from Pueblo with a corps of physicians. The wounded are receiving all possible care. Both engines, the baggage-car, and two coaches were badly damaged.

FIVE SAILORS KILLED.

The New York World publishes a letter dated Calloa, Peru, June 24, giving the details of a sad accident at Arica, Chili, in which five sailors of the United States steamship Pensacola lost their lives. The steam launch of the man-of-war was blown up in the harbor of Arica by the Chilian torpedo boat Condell, and every man on board killed.

The list of the dead includes: C. O. Smith, New York; William Hayes, Brooklyn; Frank Peckham, Newark, N. J.; Teddy O'Rourke, Huntington, L. I.; Arthur E. Dykeman, Pearsall, L. I.

The accident occurred on the evening of June 1. The Condell, one of Balmaceda's cruisers, stole into the harbor of Arica about 7 p. m. There was a heavy fog and objects at a distance of 100 yards could not be discerned with any definiteness.

The steam launch had left the Pensacola for a trip to the shore and was making her way slowly, when suddenly those on the man-of-war saw the little boat lifted completely out of the water. There was the dull echo of a half smothered explosion, and then wreckage was scattered in every direction. Not a sound of a human voice was heard.

The quiet that followed told plainly that the men aboard the launch had either been killed or so maimed as to be unable to make their condition known. The search light of the Pensacola was brought into play, and at the same instance orders were given to lower the boats. By the flash of the search light the Condell was discovered only a short distance away.

SWALLOWED BY A WHALE.

Tacoma (Wash.) special: The bark Guy C. Goss, with a cargo of $500,000 worth of tea, dropped anchor here forty-four days from Yokohama, long overdue. When fifteen days out, "Tom" Hiskiaski, a Japanese sailor, mounted to a top-sail to reef it during a gale. A lurch of the vessel threw him headlong into the sea, and he was seen suddenly to disappear. The life-boat was put out, but no trace of the missing sailor was found. When returning to the vessel, a whale rose to the surface. The crew then suspected what had become of Hiskiaski. The whale seemed to be in great distress. Suddenly, after a violent convulsion, Hiskiaski was thrown from the whale's mouth onto the crest of a wave and upon the deck of the Goss. He was unconscious and badly injured. Careful nursing brought him around, and he is now in his normal health. Capt. Mallette vouches for the truth of this story, and the sailor was pointed out.

A Father's Revenge.

Montreal special: At Sherbrooke, Quebec, the 15-year-old daughter of a prominent resident of the town went berrying with a companion. About half a mile from home the girls met a well-dressed stranger, who, after a brief conversation caught one of them and dragged her into a field. The other girl fled to the house of the father of the victim and told the story. The crazed father armed himself, and accompanied by the girl, started for the scene. On the road they met a man whom the girl said was the person they sought, and the father instantly shot him dead. A little further on his daughter was found in a terrible condition. It is rumored that the man killed was not the offender. The montreal detectives have been summoned to Sherbrooke and have started for that place. The police here refuse to give the names of the parties or any further details.

Frightful Explosion.

A disastrous explosion occurred on the farm of James Durbin, in Edmondson County, Ky. The boiler of a steam thresher exploded when surrounded by men and quickly transformed a pleasant harvest scene into one of terror and death. Three men were instantly killed by the flying debris and escaping steam and five others were perhaps fatally injured. The killed are John Durbin, Will Basham and John Massey. Those dangerously injured are Peter Pierce, Kit Yates, Job Blanton, Oliver Phelps and Thomas Lindsay. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by the water becoming too low in the boiler.

Fight on a Train.

There was a fight on the platform at the rear end of the second coach of the first section of an excursion train, one mile from Rockwood, Pa. James Kelly, a policeman, of Johnstown, drew a revolver to quell a row, and the crowd sprang upon him and forced him between the cars. Conductor Hard signaled the engineer to stop the train. The coupling broke and Kelly dropped under the wheels and was killed. Lucas Myers, of Latrobe, was thrown from the platform and was killed. Milton Pyle, of Somerset, was hurled through the air, and struck on the rocks on the side of the track. His skull was crushed and his leg broken but he is still alive.

Almond-Eyed John.

George W. Poore, a well known Deputy Sheriff and Ex-Customs Inspector, was shot and killed near Seattle, Wash., by Customs Inspector J. C. Baird and James Buchanan. J. E. Terry, an expolice officer of Seattle, was also wounded. It is said that the shooting was caused over a band of Chinese who were being smuggled into the United States from British Columbia. Both parties were on the track of the Chinese and when Poore and Terry captured the Mongolians it was stated that Baird and Buchanan opened fire on them.

Homeless and Destitute.

A very sad case occurred near Leavenworth, Ind., in which Michael Mulcarnes and wife are left totally homeless and destitute by fire. The fire occurred just before day. Its origin is unknown and it was so far advanced when the family were awakened by the roof falling in upon the upper floor, that they had barely time to escape with their lives. The sad part of it is that Mr. and Mrs. Mulcarnes are both quite old and she is insane. Force was applied to the old lady or her life could not have been saved. She was dragged from the burning building.

Three Persons Fatally Burned.

Ann Arbor (Mich.) special: As the result of the careless use of a gasoline stove, Mrs. Charles W. Vogel and her hired girl, Mary Bauer, were fatally, and Charles W. Vogel seriously, burned. The hired girl started to light the stove and the gasoline ran over and caught fire. In an instant the clothes of both women were in flames. Vogel ran to their assistance and was badly burned. The women are burned from head to foot and strips of flesh came off with their clothes.

Distress in India.

London special: Although the latest reports from the northwest of India tell of beneficial rains having fallen there, still there is terrible distress in that region, which compels the Government to vote large sums of money for the relief of the people. The object is to provide public works, etc., to give the men employment and provisions. The failure of the crops of cereals in India, France and Russia seem to be conspiring to throw a large demand for food stuffs upon America for the next twelve months.

Powder Explosion.

The cylinder mill of Laflin-Rand Powder Company, Platteville, Wis., in which 300 kegs of powder were in process of making, was blown up, completely demolishing the building and causing the loss of one life, John Lorry, who had charge of the mill, was at his post at the time, and, though diligent search has been made, a small portion of his skull is all that has been found of his remains. It is supposed that his whole body was blown to atoms. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

Houses Toppling Over.

The earth has caved in in many cases in Edwardsville, Pa., causing houses to topple over and rendering the land in the vicinity in which it occurred useless for further building. The people who lived in the houses received warning and escaped with their lives. It will cost many thousands of dollars to put the interior of the mine over which the town is situated, in condition. The settling has not yet ceased, and the people are still vacating their homes.

Under Military Law.

Adrianople special: There is excitement here over the tragic events growing out of the accusation that the Jewish butchers killed a Greek child as a religious sacrifice. The Governor of Roumania has proclaimed the district under military law, fearing that otherwise the inhabitants would rise against the Jews. The alleged murder occurred at a village of Mustapha Pasha, about twenty miles from this city.

Struck by Lightning.

Lightning struck the shoe factory in Carlisle, Pa. Three hundred hands are employed in the building, most of them women. The panic stricken crowd rushed for the doors. Several were slightly shocked, and three fell to the floor unconscious. It is thought Misses Spangler and Johnson are fatally injured, as they have not recovered consciousness. Six other young ladies were seriously injured.

Coffee Harvest Double That of Last Year.

The Bureau of American Republics has received information from Guatemala that the coffee harvest for 1890 will reach 700,000 quintals, representing $16,000,000. In ten years the production has more than doubled and the price realized has more than quadrupled. The European markets, however, will be largely supplied from the Brazilian harvest which is 9,000,000 bags this year. The harvest was 4,200,000 bags a year ago.

A Fight for Sullivan and Slavin.

Charley Johnson, of Brooklyn, on behalf of John L. Sullivan, called at the New York Herald office and deposited $1,000 to bind a match with Frank P. Slavin to fight for the championship of the world. The money is to be held until September 1, for Slavin or his backers to cover. Johnson insists that the fight take place in America. The news that Sullivan had posted money was cabled at once to England.

They Didn't Know It Was Loaded.

The President and Secretary of the Minnesota Athletic Club have issued a statement that their club will have nothing more to do with the Hall-Fitzsimmons fight, and no pugilistic entertainments will hereafter be given by the club, and that no arrangements for one would have been made had it been known that the law prohibited such exhibitions.

Steamers Collide.

The steamer George Law, which runs from Philadelphia and Gloucester, came in collision with the Lincoln Park steamer Georgiana near the mouth of the Schuylkill. Hugh Driscol was fatally injured and several others badly hurt. The Law's bow cut the other vessel almost to the water edge. The accident was due to the dense fog.

Conductors Fired.

There is a great deal of excitement among the Cincinnati Southern railroad conductors over the fact that five of their number have been asked to resign. It is said that the road has had detectives for some time, who found a good deal of crookedness.

Indiana Counterfeiters Captured.

W. A. Teale and Maud Jacoby were arrested at Indianapolis for manufacturing and passing counterfeit silver dollars. Molds and materials and many finished coins were captured with the counterfeiters.

The Fiery Element.

A fire at South Haven, Mich., consumed twenty-three buildings before its progress could be stayed. It originated in a small building in the rear of Zeedick's grocery store. The total loss is $45,000; insurance about $10,000.

Unknown Man Killed.

An unknown man was cut to pieces by a freight train on the W., St. L. & P. Railway, at a crossing ten miles east of North Manchester, Ind.

Big Fire in Cincinnati.

Tramp Burned to Death.

George O'Meyer, an aged tramp, was burned to death in a fire that consumed the Kanawha Coal Works at Cincinnati.

OUR HOOSIER SOLDIERS.

THE ANNUAL ENCAMPMENT OF STATE MILITIA.

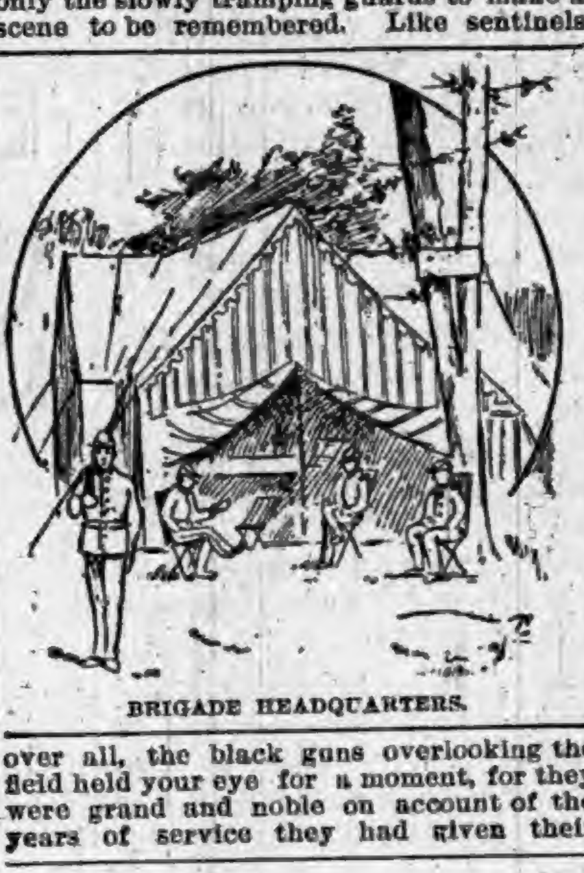
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

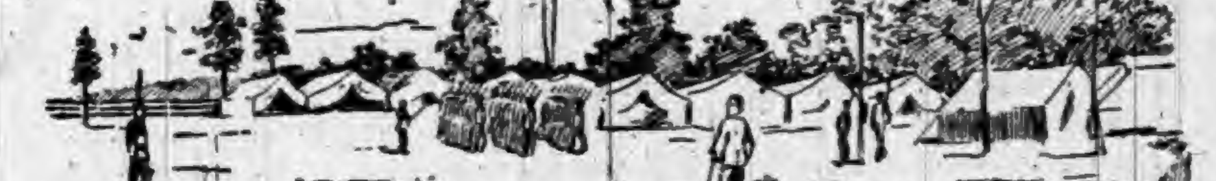
Ft. Wayne.—The Indiana soldier boys pitched their tents within half a mile of this city in a field of green oats that had been condemned for their use and entered upon their annual encampment.

The Morning Gun.—Bang! Clear and sharp was the morning greeting of the 10-pound Parrott, as it spoke the first word of the day. A few minutes later the sweet strains of the reveille music from the regimental bands was heard, and as the boys rolled out of their blankets they forgave the grim-visaged brigade cannoneer for so rudely interrupting their morning dreams.

Sunrise, viewing the camp from the guard-house, was a study in gray and white. The atmosphere of the beautiful picture was a misty gray, yet with singular kindness it made the field of tents a snowy white that could not have been made clearer by a dark contrast. The fleecy gray of the sky, harmonized by a misty softness and the white tents, needed only the slowly tramping guards to make a scene to be remembered. Like sentinels over all, the black guns overlooking the field held your eye for a moment, for they were grand and noble on account of the years of service they had given their country and the many loud shouts for patriotism they had howled from their iron throats.

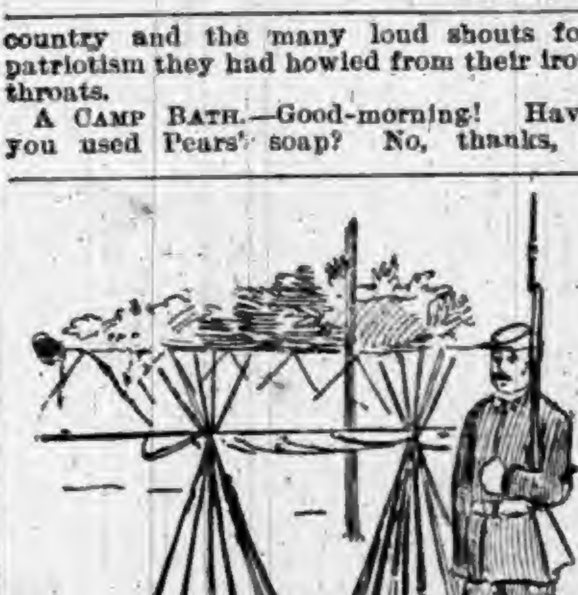


BRIGADE HEADQUARTERS.



SECTION OF THE CAMP.

A Camp Bath.—Good-morning! Have you used Pears' soap? No, thanks, I bathed in the brook and scrubbed off with a handful of sand. Sometimes, you see, the water-works does not start as early as the morning brigade buzz, and water is pretty scarce!



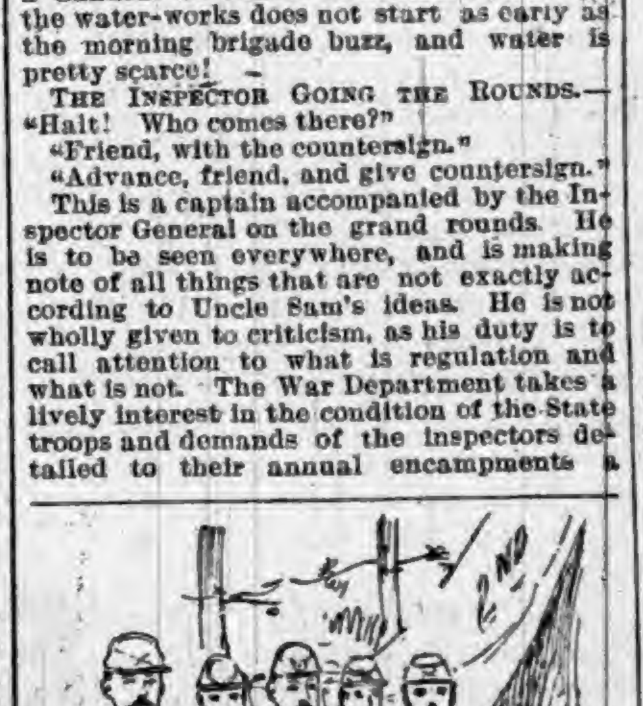
THE COLOR LINE.

The Inspector Going the Rounds.—"Halt! Who comes there?"

"Friend, with the countersign."

"Advance, friend, and give countersign."

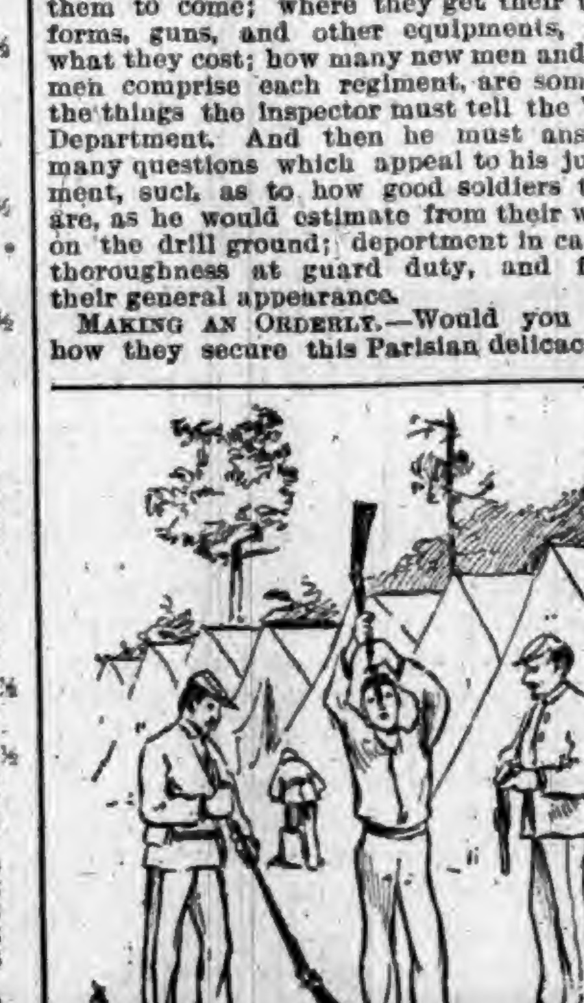
This is a captain accompanied by the Inspector General on the grand rounds. He is to be seen everywhere, and is making note of all things that are not exactly according to Uncle Sam's ideas. He is not wholly given to criticism, as his duty is to call attention to what is regulation and what is not. The War Department takes a lively interest in the condition of the State troops and demands of the inspectors detailed to their annual encampments a lengthy statement as to the conditions of the troops.



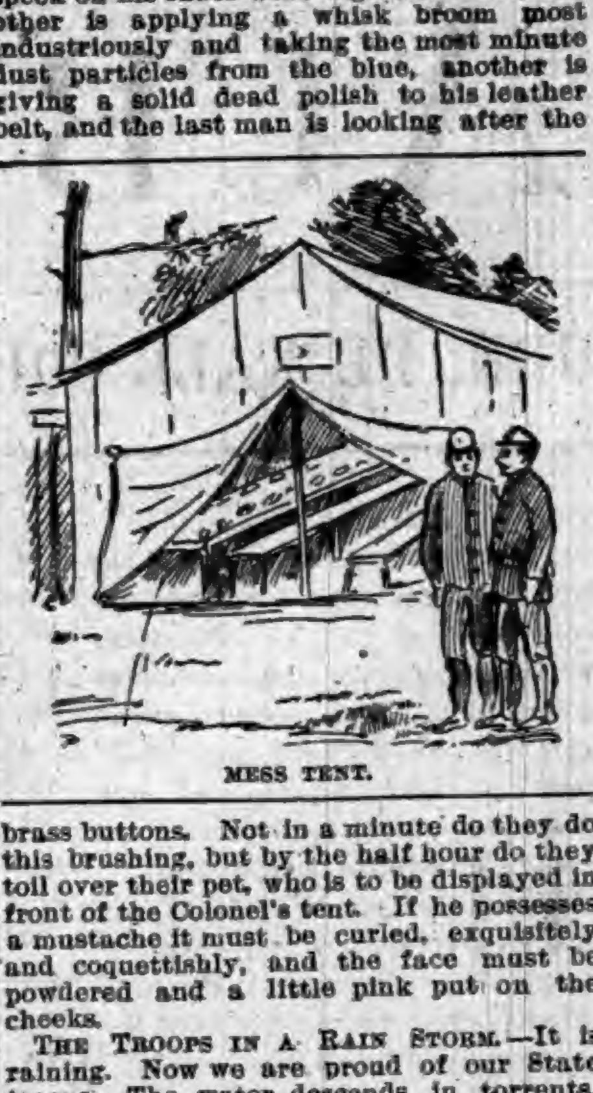
THE HOSPITAL CORPS.

He must know how many soldiers are enlisted, and something of their physical condition and character. He wants to know how well the officers understand their business; how much the boys are paid while in camp. What inducements are held out to them to come; where they get their uniforms, guns, and other equipments, and what they cost; how many new men and old men comprise each regiment, are some of the things the inspector must tell the War Department. And then he must answer many questions which appeal to his judgment, such as to how good soldiers they are, as he would estimate from their work on the drill ground; department in camp; thoroughness at guard duty, and from their general appearance.

Making an Orderly.—Would you ask how they secure this Parisian delicacy of finish for the young man that does duty for the Colonel? Then let a little bird whisper it to you. Whisper, little bird, to the pretty wife or fond sweetheart of this handsome young orderly and their friends! Whisper how he is polished and groomed and brushed before being officially born at guard mount. Usually six men are around him. Two are at his feet chasing away each speck on his shoes with vigorous rubs, another is applying a whisk broom most industriously and taking the most minute dust particles from the blue, another is giving a solid dead polish to his leather belt, and the last man is looking after the brass buttons. Not in a minute do they do this brushing, but by the half hour do they toil over their pet, who is to be displayed in front of the Colonel's tent. If he possesses a mustache it must be curled, exquisitely and coquettishly, and the face must be powdered and a little pink put on the cheeks.



PREPARING FOR INSPECTION.

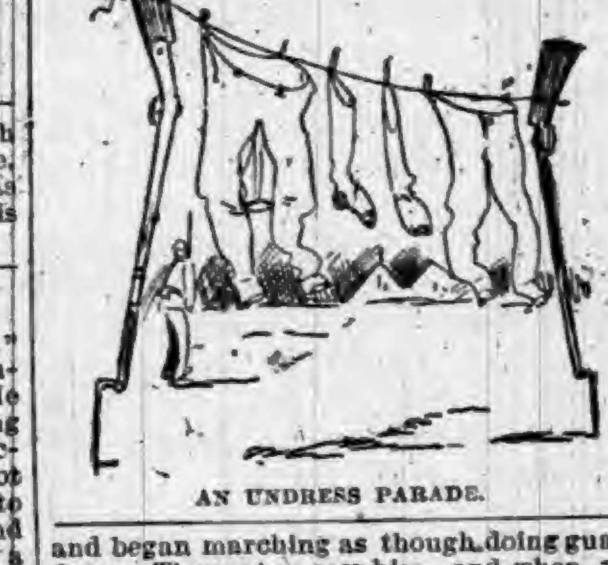


MESS TENT.

The Troops in a Rain Storm.—It is raining. Now we are proud of our State troops. The water descends in torrents, but those slowly moving sentinels neither quicken nor slacken their soldiery tread. It surely cannot be fun to be heedless of that drenching rain. No great hardship, of course, but so unpleasant that only a sense of duty can keep him there. How like a real army is that glorious blue overcoat! The cape is thrown over his head and the skirts fall to the knees. "Armed for native land" comes thrilling over you as the words of the silent gun that stands obliquely skyward from his shoulder. With military precision he paces back as he came, and grand and noble is this slowly marching man, simply because he is a soldier doing his duty. He does it perhaps because there will be fun in camp, good times at the armory at home and at picnics, but now he is doing for duty sake, just the same as he would do if he were facing the black guns and warlike front of a real instead of an imaginary enemy.

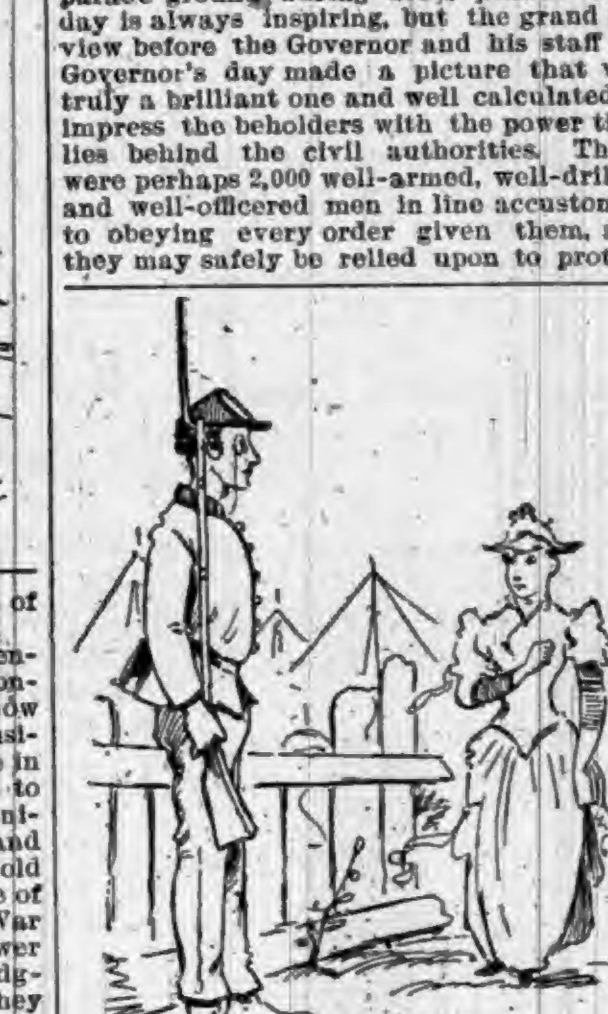
Patching Military Trousers.—Patching pants is one of the domestic details of playing soldier, as well as real war. It does not make a heroic picture. At least the interior of one of the tents of the National Guards did not impress me as being heroic, when I saw the rear portion of a private's trousers being patched by a corporal. The private was too lazy to take off the trousers, and was in a position over a trunk, much as a young man would take at a boarding-school, just as he was about to be spanked. Sometimes he would yell as though an abortive attempt was being made to electrocute him. The sewer didn't seem to mind, as he remarked coolly: "Oh, never mind, Charlie, that slipped." An admiring crowd was watching the operations, and finally Charlie's pants were patched to perfection.

Running the Guard.—It is part of the amusement of the camp to bother the sentries late at night. I saw a very ingenious scheme for running the guard. A half a dozen boys advanced unseen, and when the sentry got to the farther end of his beat one of them ran up with a four-foot club in his hand. He took position on the line, brought the club to his shoulder as he would a gun, and began marching as though doing guard duty. The sentry saw him, and when the other fellows ran up to the confederate and were challenged he thought it all regular. They advanced to the man with the club, whispered something, and skipped to the tents as though they had given the countersign. The sentry did not discover that he had been "bamboozled" by some mischievous fellows until they let out a howl of derision.



AN UNDRESS PARADE.

The Grand Review.—The scene on the parade ground during dress parade each day is always inspiring, but the grand review before the Governor and his staff on Governor's day made a picture that was truly a brilliant one and well calculated to impress the beholders with the power that lies behind the civil authorities. There were perhaps 2,000 well-armed, well-drilled and well-officered men in line accustomed to obeying every order given them, and they may safely be relied upon to protect the persons and the property of citizens in any emergency likely to arise.



A BARGAIN COUNTERSIGN.

Millicent (from the dress goods dept.)—Why, it's "Thirty nine cents, was seventy five," isn't it, Gawge?

A STUPID FATAL "JOKE."

THE PRIZE IDIOCY OF AN OHIO EXCURSIONIST.

He Pulls the Air-Brake Cord on an Excursion Train, Causing a Delay Which Was Followed by a Frightful Calamity—Story of the Wreck.

The wreck at Middletown, Ohio, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad was one of the worst that have ever happened in that vicinity. The National Cash Register Company of Dayton had given its employes an excursion to Woodsdale, in a train of sixteen coaches. The day had passed merrily, and everybody was laughing and chatting when the train reached Middletown at 8 o'clock on its way home. Some one had turned the air-brakes on for a joke, and the engine was puffing and wheezing to pull the heavy load with the brakes on. Pretty soon a draw-bar broke, and the train was stopped on the siding at Middletown for repairs. William G. Douglass, one of the foreman of the National Cash Register Works, tells this story of the wreck:

The train of fifteen crowded cars started on its return trip from Woodsdale about 7 o'clock and about an hour later the accident occurred at Middletown. A drawbar about the middle of the excursion train broke and they stopped at Middletown to patch it up for the run to Dayton. Brakemen were immediately sent out with red flags to flag the approaching train, and nearly half an hour was consumed in repairing the disabled car. Red lights were not promptly changed to the rear of this car, though the train was pulling out when the accident occurred at nearly 8 o'clock. The 250 men, women, and children were in the last three coaches and all knew that freight train No. 44 was following and they appreciated and talked of their danger. Some of them called Conductor Peter G. Clancy's attention to their peril and he cautioned them that if they heard train 44 coming they should jump from the car. Five minutes later the awful disaster was upon them. The excursion was slowly creeping off the side-track, when an ominous roaring was heard from the expected train No. 44, not over a quarter of a mile away. Nearer and nearer came the monster mogul with thirty-five loaded cars, and when in sight of Middletown Station Engineer Schwind saw the flagman waving the danger signal, and he immediately called for brakes, shut off steam and applied the sand. He saw that a collision was inevitable. Then he and his fireman jumped and an instant later the crash came—a rear-end collision of mighty force.

The excursion train was pulling out on to the main track and all but the two rear coaches had left the siding when the mogul engine with the heavy train behind it went plowing through. The two rear cars and human freight were hurled into the ditch and the next coach was struck fairly in the end, and the locomotive, pushing under, elevated it to an angle of forty-five degrees, and there it stood, filled with shrieking people. This car caught fire, but Engineer Schwind and his fireman were able to extinguish the blaze by use of hose from the locomotive. Two cars lay crushed in the ditch with a mass of maimed and mangled people moaning in agony, pleading for help. Rescuers set to work at once to extricate them. Legs, arms and heads could be seen through broken windows or pinned under the wreck. Moans of the helpless sufferers, and moans of the dying, mingled with the frantic cries of mothers seeking husbands and children. Many had been cut by glass and the timbers in the rush to escape, and bloody faces and hands bore ghastly testimony to the great number who were injured. Physicians and citizens of Middletown were soon at the scene to join in rescuing the unfortunates. The terror-stricken excursionists were made comfortable in the houses, the dead persons were properly cared for, and the injured received all necessary attention.

A tramp named James Wilson, of Columbus, Ohio, who, with his two little boys, was having a free ride on the freight train, says he is a railroader by occupation and was on the third car from the front when approaching Middletown; that he plainly saw the red lights swinging, and that the engineer tried to stop the train but could not, and the heavy cars crowded him into the excursion train.

WIND FANNED THE FLAMES.

At South Haven, Mich., fire broke out in H. Zeedyke's grocery store. Before the flames were under control twenty-two buildings were burned. A strong northwest wind was blowing at the time, and before apparatus was at the scene the fire had full sway, and the people could only look on and see it burn. The tearing down of two small stores finally stopped the flames. Loss, about $40,000; insurance, $10,000. Among the heaviest losers were: Guy Smith & Co., grocers, $6,000; insurance, $4,200; G. B. Pomeroy, agent implements, $3,000; no insurance; C. Comstock, groceries, $4,500; no insurance; C. J. Fletcher, store and house, $4,000; insurance, $500; H. Peckham, $3,500; no insurance; H. Zeedyke, J. McCrimmons, the Public Library, the G. A. R. armory, Masonic Hall, and many other buildings.

Fire broke out in the foundry-room of the Central Chandelier Company's building, Toledo, Ohio, destroying the greater portion of the two upper floors. The loss was chiefly on machinery, and is roughly estimated at $15,000; insurance, $49,000.

Near Vacaville, Cal., fire in the Blue Mountains burned over a large extent of territory. There are a large number of thriving orchards recently planted in Gate's Canyon, besides a number of residences, and, as seen from the town, the entire section is burned over. No call for help has been made, and no advice as to the extent of the damage is obtainable.

Fire at Newort News, Va., destroyed over twenty buildings, stores and dwellings. Estimated loss, $50,000.

At Montreal Frazer & Co.'s grocery warehouse and Quinet's carriage factory were burned. Loss, $100,000.

Jay County's Fifty-Foot Snake.

The great serpent that was seen by the Lake Erie and Western roadmaster, a few days since, has again put in an appearance. It was seen this time by a band of gypsies camped on Brooks' Creek, near Portland. The story of the encounter is told as follows by the chief of the gypsy band: "We are on our way from Waukon, Ia., to Dayton, O., and camped on the banks of a small stream. We went to bed about 9 o'clock. About midnight I was awakened by the barking of the dogs southeast of the camp, and soon after the horses broke their tethers and rushed away. By this time all the camp were on their feet, not knowing the cause of the trouble. In a moment there was a rushing sound and we saw the head of a monster snake coming rapidly toward us. Before we could collect our senses it was within ten feet of one of the children. My wife then snatched a brand from the smoldering camp-fire and struck it with all her might.

"The serpent reared its head at least twenty feet in the air and turning, in a second was gone. I never saw such a snake before. Its head was nine or ten inches broad and it must have been fifty feet in length. We stood for an hour after it was gone, afraid to move, and then built several fires around the camp to prevent its return. Our horses were scattered all over the country and could not be induced to return to the camp, so we had to hire a farmer to draw us to the pike."

This snake has been in the vicinity mentioned for the last six or seven years and the numbers of hogs and sheep that have disappeared are supposed to have become its prey.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $5 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

—OR—

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

The man and woman were vastly amused. Dick now blushed more than ever and wished he had been out of the way when the fancy struck Ben to dress him in woman's clothes.

Buckett came along as the gallant cavalcade were moving down to the road, and seeing Dick beside Ben and his wife stared at him.

"Let me make you acquainted with our new member," said Ben, soberly, to Buckett.

"Bosh!" said Buckett in reply, in a low tone. "Where did Mitchell pick her up?"

"Don't you remember her?"

"No."

"That's the boy you saw beside me."

Then Mitchell made an excuse to fall behind; he, too, stared at Dick, and rode off smiling.

This was all strange and very puzzling to Dick. He felt like asking Mr. Brown to let him get down and walk. Mrs. Brown, seeing his embarrassment, spoke to him.

"You will ride beside Ben, Dick. I will ride with some one else."

"Thank you," said Dick, greatly relieved

"But we needn't make the change until we get into town, if you'd rather ride with me."

"Thank you," said poor Dick again, blushing through his paint.

And thus it happened that Dick was habited as a member of a circus company, riding on the public highway before nine o'clock one morning.

The gay cavalcade were riding slowly along the country road, laughing and talking; as merry a group as were ever brought together. They were all "up" in their business; a hard-working and hard-worked set of people, for Mr. Buckett got all out of brain and muscle that could be got.

He had the best company in the country; the best that money could secure. He paid on the nail, and paid fair prices. But he contrived to deceive the world; he gave out that his expenses were twice as much as they really were.

As the company (I refer now to the people who were employed as "artistes" in the ring) were crossing a road, Dick heard a loud clattering of horse's feet. Looking to the right his heart rose to his mouth.

There, within twenty yards of him, was Zeke Caper on a horse. He was accompanied by two men who looked like, and proved to be, officers of the law.

Zeke addressed the master of equestrians. Mr. Mitchell shook his head, as he rode on. The company filed past the Superintendent, until Ben Brown reached that individual, who sat looking at them curiously. Brown checked his horse, and held Dick's.

"Looking for anybody, eh?"

"Yes: I'm looking for a rascally boy—the worst boy in Acorn County. If we find him I'll see he is landed in the penitentiary."

"Thought you'd find him here?"

"Yes. I heard there was a circus camped near here, and we came over to see."

"Well, like as not, he's in the crowd. Boys come and go all the time. We don't want 'em, do we, Lize?"

This to Dick, who was looking straight at Caper more in hate than in fear. Dick really felt murder in his heart when he beheld his old persecutor.

He started when Brown addressed him:

"I was saying to this gentleman how we are pestered with runaway boys. We don't want 'em, but they will run after us. You'd like to see this gentleman find the rascally boy he is hunting, wouldn't you?"

"I don't care, I'm sure." And Dick rode on, but not until he heard Caper say to the officers: "That little one is the prettiest girl in the lot."

Then Ben Brown laughed loud and long.

As for Dick, he was so overjoyed at his escape that he joined in the laughter.

"That's as good as a play," said Ben to his wife. "Why, that's the beastly fellow that runs the poor-house at Barnesville, and he's took with Double Dick."

CHAPTER IX.

DICK DISGUISED AS A PRINCESS DISCOVERS THE CLOWN.

The proprietor of the circus—I beg Mr. Buckett's pardon—the proprietor of "The grandest aggregation of talent and beauty ever assembled under a monster canvas covering nearly ten acres," Mr. Buckett, rode on ahead and awaited the coming of his "aggregation" in imposing order. He usually made it a point to head his people, but on this occasion he contented himself with a place beside the Mayor of the city, impressing him meanwhile with the "energy, enterprise and indomitable perseverence" he had expended in assembling the mammoth aggregation.

The parade was a pronounced success. The newspapers employed many more adjectives to describe the effect, but not having so many at my command I content myself with recording the fact.

When Dick was, to use Ben Brown's words, "whisked off his horse" and into the gentlemen's dressing-room (tent) Mr. Mitchell came in after them.

"I say, Brown, what are you going to do with the boy?"

"I've not made up my mind. I'll wait and see what the boy can do first."

"Why can't he go on as a lady rider? He'll do as well—better for looks—than most of them."

"I dare say," Ben replied. "I'll see about the boy by-and-by."

"Why not decide it right away?"

"I'd rather wait a day."

"Well, this isn't a poorhouse, remember."

"See here, Mitchell—I'll pay the boy's subsistence. I've made my calculations to do that."

"Yes, but you know our rules. We don't want hangers-on, Brown."

"It seems to me you are in a hurry to send the boy away. I'll attend to that matter, Mr. Mitchell, and without your assistance."

Ben Brown's manner was independent. His tone expressed a degree of indifference that surprised Dick, who heard the greater part of this conversation unperceived by either. He had almost decided to interpose, and tell them he was going away, but he did not like to speak until Ben Brown had done.

"Why, Ben," said his wife; "may be this boy can not only take care of himself, but make a nice sum—if you'll manage for him. You see that he gets a fair price if he can do anything."

"I will. They'll not get him for nothing. If he can ride, and learns to tumble, they've got to pay him."

Then Ben went out, and presently Dick, who was all eyes and ears now, overheard Ben talking to Mr. Buckett. He heard scraps of the conversation.

"Grand entry anyhow."

"Matter of course, Mr. Buckett."

"See what's in him—turn out a good investment—to be sure—what's fair always, don't I?"

"Understand—I'm responsible for him—interference from Mitchell——"

"Of course—Mitchell don't run this show as——"

"Then—wife furnish dress——"

"Yes, yes—and I'll speak to Mitchell—go ahead now—at once—have him on to-day."

What did it mean? Dick knew he was discussed. He had not long to wait. His suspense was brief. Ben came into the tent and said quickly:

"See here, Double Dick—think you can stick on a horse in the ring—just at a canter—an easy canter?"

"O, yes; I'd manage to hold on, Mr. Brown, but——"

"But what?" demanded Brown, shortly.

"How will I look? Among all the nice riders, too?"

"Pooh. Just you sit up straight. The horse knows what to do. You must let your horse alone—he's been in the ring eight years—you couldn't put him out if you'd try."

The proposition set Dick's pulse throbbing. He experienced a feeling of inexpressible joy. He—he was going to appear in a circus—as a circus rider—among the elegant ladies and finely-dressed knights with helmets and lances. The helmets and lances were lying about the dressing-room now. Some of the riders had placed their helmets on their heads; they looked magnificent.

Dick had never beheld anything a hundredth part as grand or gorgeous. Would he be a——

Just then Ben broke in upon his speculations. Dreams vanished in an instant.

"I say, Double Dick, come along with me—no; stay here till I bring my wife—no! how the deuce am I going to manage? I see now; well, go to the ladies' dressing-room, and I'll call her out."

Dick followed Ben. A few people—loungers and drivers—saw him with Ben, and made way for him. Then he remembered he was still in woman's attire, a fact that he had wholly forgotten.

The loungers thought he was a young lady.

At the entrance to the dressing-room, Mrs. Brown started on noticing Dick, then smiled. She held a whispered consultation with her husband, entered the dressing-room, and speedily emerged with a parcel in a paper, which Ben thrust into his pocket, and then Dick returned with him to the gentlemen's dressing-room.

"See here, Double Dick, I'm going to try to help you all I can. You keep mum—sing low—don't talk till I tell you to. You'll go on in the grand entry, and I'll see how you do. You'll go on just as you are."

"In there, Mr. Brown?"

"Didn't I just tell you! Just as you are. I'll fix you up a little."

Ben had the parcel out now. Producing some pins and paint and puff-powder, and a brilliant scarf—an elegant scarf it was, with fringe a foot long and gold borders—he proceeded to adjust the scarf on Dick's shoulders and about his waist, all the time talking.

"You see, women are scarce, and a nuisance when they're fit for anything, with their airs. If my wife was like some of 'em, we'd make thirty or forty dollars a month more—but there isn't many like Kate Brown. And don't Buckett and Mitchell know it? Oh, no! I guess not! There. A little—just a trifle on the left cheek—and a little powder on the forehead and nose."

Ben was putting carmine on his cheeks and lips—daubing his face here and there, and talking, all the while eyeing him critically.

"By George! You're a stunning beauty, my boy—you'll fetch the house down, you will."

"I'm ashamed of this dress, Mr. Brown."

"What's the kid talking about?" inquired a valiant knight with visor down, as he looked at the artist and his subject. "Boy, do you know I'd give a hundred—yes, I'd give a thousand dollars if I could make up as you look. I'd make it pay."

Dick looked at this knight in amazement.

"I guess you'll do now. Dan, tell Moss to have Whitey ready for this lady."

Dick started. He was called a 'lady' by Brown.

"Now, stay where you are until I tell you to mount."

Some of the knights in full dress were sitting on camp stools and trunks, reading newspapers or novels. The band near at hand somewhere were trying their instruments. Everybody seemed as much at home in the sawdust as though they were sitting at their fireside. Here and there a knight whistled or hummed a tune. Beyond, he heard the lions roaring—the keepers were stirring them up.

It was wonderful the way Ben became a knight. He was dressed in two minutes, seemingly. Ben was the quickest man in the company. He stood before Dick presently looking like a giant.

"Here you are, now—here's the horses."

The horses were brought in trotting, neighing. They champed their bits and tossed their heads up. Ben singled out a white horse—a very intelligent animal—and helped Dick mount him.

"Now, then, you'll ride with me first, then you'll do just what the horse does." And these were his sole directions. The band blared; it was a tremendous blast. Dick heard thousands of voices, thousands of feet coming into the "monster" tent. He did not know whether he was dreaming—it seemed like a wonderful dream to him—when, the ladies with sashes, and the knights with ribbons on their lances, swarmed around him, got into lines, and then all moved forward out of the tent, that served as a meeting ground, into the monster pavilion.

He saw nine ladies who looked princesses, attended by ten gallant knights. Yes, there were just ten. The multitude in the pavilion cheered as they rode into the great ring, and around it.

Dick's eyes blazed with excitement. The band blared, the crowd hurrahed, the horses began to trot, and then Dick was in heaven. Around they went—then the horses formed in lines in fours, with outriders—then in twos again—then they all stretched across the ring in a line, a knight and a lady alternating; then the ladies formed a line, the knights a line, the ladies another, the knights another—then they wheeled thus, five abreast—broke into circles of ten—broke again single file—came up solid, ten ladies facing one way, ten knights another.

Now Dick discovered the people looked at him more than at any of the others, unless it was Mrs. Brown. He heard the women and men praise his beauty—he was a princess, too—he was the tenth—and had been counting only nine until now.

Why, it was as easy—as easy as riding the colt at Barnesville Poorhouse. Then, at a sign from the elegant gentleman with the whip, the knights and princesses trotted out of the pavilion—and Dick drew a long sigh.

There was an interval of four or five minutes; then Dick and Mrs. Brown rode gayly in together, and Mrs. Brown, as the "Queen of Arabia," performed some very fine feats on a horse with plenty of mettle in his heels. Whitey was doing all manner of awkward things—reversing things generally and making people laugh.

There was a roar of laughter, and Dick beheld a grotesque figure flying across the ring in front of him. Now he was under his horse. No; he was on his back. No; he had turned a somersault and lit on his feet. Now he had the cramps! Now he was howling, and the ringmaster's whip was curling in the air.

Why, this must be the clown!

It was the clown. He led first two, then a third, then a fourth horse to the Queen of Arabia, and she stood on them all by turns—rode them singly, by twos, and rode four abreast. The clown was wonder stricken—then he was convulsed with merriment. He rolled himself into a ball; rolled all around the ring. How the crowd laughed. He was the oddest creature ever seen. The most grotesque face, the funniest eyes; you couldn't help laughing just to glance at him.

Now he began to patronize the Queen of Arabia. He looked very knowing, assumed a dignified mein, and spoke to her.

Why, it was Ben Brown's voice. Ben was the clown!

Just as Dick made this discovery, Whitey ran out of the ring, and the other four horses followed at Whitey's heels.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Intelligent Chimpanzees.

Among the most remarkable stories in Mr. Stanley's book on Africa is one told to the explorer by Emin Pasha. Here it is:

The forest of Msongwa is infested by a tribe of chimpanzees of great stature, who make almost nightly raids on the villages and little plantations of the Mswa natives, carrying away their bananas and other fruits. There is nothing very remarkable about this fact, since many kinds of animals make pillaging forays upon the habitations of men; but the surprising part of Emin's narrative is the statement that in these thieving raids the chimpanzees make use of lighted torches to hunt out the fruits.

"If I had not been myself a witness of this spectacle," Mr. Stanley reports Emin as saying, "nothing would ever have made me believe that any race of monkeys possessed the art of making fire."

On one occasion, Emin says, a chimpanzee of this intelligent tribe stole a drum from the huts of his European troops and made off with it, beating it as he ran.

The monkey took the drum to the headquarters of his own "people," who were evidently much charmed with it for the Egyptian soldiers often heard the monkeys beating it vigorously, but irregularly. Sometimes in the middle of the night some sleepless chimpanzee would get up and go to beating the drum.

But what the other chimpanzees thought of this midnight musical performance will never be known positively, but from the fact that no sound of battle and slaughter among the intelligent chimpanzees ever followed, the Egyptians were forced to conclude that they liked it.

Here at least, therefore, we find an indication that the grade of intelligence of even the chimpanzees of Msongwa is still far below that of the human race.—Sheffield Telegraph.

Do You Know?

Did you know that pale-gray undressed kid slippers with high heels are liked for house wear?

That a silver watch two centuries old and quaintly carved must hang on your chatelaine?

That rings on her fingers are specially liked by the smart girl, but only on the third and little fingers of each hand?

That rose-colored veils in a square mesh have come to make you see the world a couleur de rose?

That the woman who writes many letters uses a quill?

That envelopes are so large that they stick in the patent boxes?

That red leather boxes with yellow fleur de lis upon them are liked for holding photographs?

That earrings are entirely out of fashion?

Human Sharks.

Nothing is more distressing than the discovery that one you have trusted as a friend, and one in whom you have reposed confidence, is no more nor less than a human shark; that friendship has been professed solely in order to get near enough to you to rob you. The world has altogether too many of these "friends" of both sexes. When they are women they are oily, soft-voiced, but cold, calculating, unsexed pirates, engaged before the public in "good works," but with as little real heart as East Indian thugs or Sicilian bandits. They accept all your kindness and aid with protestations of unselfish regard and, when they go from you, you discover your heavy worldly loss, though there is a compensating gain in being rid of such slimy associates.

THERE are now twenty-six submarine cable companies, and they have $200,000,000 invested in ocean cables. Their revenues amount to $17,000,000 a year, and they pay from 1 to 14 per cent. dividends in their business. The receipts each year from the Atlantic cables alone amount to $4,000,000; 1,045 cables are already laid under water, 798 belonging to governments, and 247 to private companies. The total length of these cables is 120,070 nautical miles, of which 107,546 miles belong to private companies, nearly all English, and 12,524 miles to governments. Our first Atlantic cable was laid in 1858, and the first message sent over it on August 5th of that year. Many of the government cables are very short. Of these the largest number is owned by Norway, which has 236, averaging only about a mile in length each. France has 2,269 miles total length, but with fifty-one distinct cables.

FOUR monster locomotives have been built for taking trains through the St. Clair tunnel. The approaches to the tunnel have a grade of 105 feet to the mile, and require powerful engines, and these have each five pairs of drive wheels. These engines are of the tank pattern, the tanks being on both sides of the boiler. They run on 100-pound rails and weigh 195,000 pounds each.

HUMOR.

'Twas His Biz.

It happened at Springfield. Scene barber shop.

Victim (to barber)—Is this your establishment?

"No, only half of it is mine."

"So you have a partner?"

"The man at the next chair owns the other half."

"Why don't you own his share?"

"That's my business."

"Well, if you own one-half and the other half's your business, why don't you own the shop?"—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

The Old Man Was a Little Off.

"John, pass the cream," said a man to his son at the breakfast table in a West Side boarding house.

"There is none," mildly suggested the youth.

"What!" roared the parental parent. "There ain't a drop."

"Young man, hand over that milk pitcher or I'll knock the whole top of your head off!" exclaimed the irate paternal parent.

"Easy now, old man; you've given me too many lessons in lying to try and palm off West Side milk for cream. Don't forget yourself, pa, and remember, if you can, just where we're boarding."—Kentucky Journal.

Charlie Played the Game.

"Charlie isn't at home just now," said young Mrs. Tocker to a neighbor who had dropped in to spend the evening. "He said he was going down to the club for a little freeze-out. O. P.—On a pair of deuces?

Hastings—Yes.

O. P.—The accusation is withdrawn; that wasn't poker.—Harvard Lampoon.

Adding Insult to Injury.

While conversing with Miss Esmeralda Longcoffin, an old maid of Houston, Texas, she asked a young man in a bantering tone:

"How old do you really think I am?"

"About thirty," he replied.

"You are joking," said Miss Longcoffin, indignantly.

"Well," said the wretch, looking at her more critically, "you can't be much older than thirty-five or forty."—Texas Siftings.

She Was Teaching Him.

A lady, on entering the kitchen early one morning, saw a plate and knife and fork, the former of which had evidently contained cold rabbit pie. The lady strongly suspected a certain policeman of having supped off it, and the following conversation took place between her and the cook:

Cook—Oh, I didn't think it was wanted, mum, so I gave it to the dog.

Mistress (sarcastically)—Does the dog use a knife and fork, then?

Cook (unabashed)—Not very well yet, mum, but I'm teachin' him to.—London Tit-Bits.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

THURSDAY..............JULY 30, 1891.

POMONA Valley, Cal., will plant the greatest orchard of figs in the world, next year.

DEPEW says the candidates will be Harrison and Cleveland. He is probably not far from right.

ESTIMATES are made that farmers will receive in the United States, a hundred millions more from crops this year than they did last year.

RECENT explorations prove that Alaska has many fine valleys that are so sheltered they produce fine pasturage and abundance of wild fruits.

MISSOURI will send to the world's fair the log cabin in which the James boys lived and in which their mother, Mrs. Samuels still stays. It shows the marks of several hard fights.

MARSHFIELD, Canada, has 200 acres of marsh planted to cranberries. When the field has been cultivated properly, a large steam pump will be used to flood the ground, to insure a good crop.

HEAVY shock of earthquake along the Ohio river Sunday. People in churches at Evansville and other points rushed out into the streets, in one instance causing a passing team to run away. Loud reports accompanied the shock.

FRANCE says she don't think she can afford to help in the world's fair while the United States appears as hostile to them as is shown by the provisions of the McKinley bill. They say if we are too unfriendly to trade with them they will have to refuse to deal with us.

THE bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association just out shows a decrease of 26 per cent. in production of these materials for the first half of this year. There is also a reduction in the manufacture of various grades of pig iron of from 6 to 32 per cent as compared with the same months last year. Our production of Bessemer steel rails has been the smallest since 1885. What ails the McKinley bill that was to stimulate production?

THE Ohio campaign promises to be a hot one. Both parties will fight to the last. The democrats expect to have a large number of leading statesmen to help them, including Ex-president Cleveland. It is believed the Alliance will have the new Kansas men Congressman Jerry Simpson and Senator Peffer to help them, and that they will have no separate state ticket, but will unite with the democrats. They find they agree with democrats on all the leading issues, such as tariff reform, silver coinage, a graded income tax, etc., etc., and can be more sure to get these reforms by helping the democrats, than by running a ticket of their own.

HARD hailstorms in some parts of the northwest, have hurt late wheat, as well as corn, oats and fruit.

THERE have been 2,000 new postoffices added during the past year. Of the total, we have 116 first-class; 550, 2nd; 2,276, 3rd; and 61,442 of the 4th.

WORLD'S fair site at Jackson Park, Chicago, is all boarded in, and no one allowed to enter. Inside all is busy and pushing. Dredges are scoping out the soft earth where lakes and canals are to be made, foundations are being laid for some of the buildings and everything looks as if the work will be completed in ample time. Just outside and toward the city, a big hotel is going up to accommodate the people when the great crowd comes. It is ten stories high.

A DISPATCH from Denver, Colorado, last week has this piece of news about Harrison:

A few days ago the Times addressed the following circular to the republican editors of Colorado:

First. Are you in favor of the nomination of President Harrison? Second. If not, why not? Who is your favorite candidate for president?

A great many replies have been receceived, 75 per cent of which gave Blaine as the favorite, 23 for Harrison, and the rest scattering. From the letters it is seen that the opposition to Harrison is on account of his well known anti-silver views.

MICHIGAN will next year choose her presidential electors by districts and not on a ticket for the state at large as is usually done. This will secure a part of them for the democrats, while under the old plan, all would go one way or the other according to which party carried the state.

THE Madison, Ind., Democrat was recently sued for damages by a party about whom it had published what it believed to be a true statement, in spite of the fact that on the trial the defendant showed the article in its essential points was true, and in spite of an offer he made at the time the alleged offense was committed, to publish any statement or explanation, the plaintiff had to make, and did publish such statement. In spite of all this a suit was brought and the jury gave plaintiff $1,500. It will be appealed and it is believed the higher court will reverse the decision. The trouble lies largely with our newspaper libel law, the infamous "Grubb Libel Law," which was rushed through the legislature several years ago, at the instance and for the benefit of a disgruntled member who fancied a certain newspaper had done him a wrong. His case was so doubtful that the ordinary libel law did not seem to be one-sided enough and he got the present disgraceful law passed. Editors, especially democratic editors, have for several years tried to get the legislature to wipe out this odious law, but so far without effect. We hope to see the next assembly relieve the state of a great disgrace by repealing this unjust act.

IT IS estimated that last week's militia encampment cost the state of Indiana $25,000.

THE Dispatch asks if any reader of the COURIER is so ignorant as to believe that express companies, etc., can be taxed by the state "anywhere, in any state". Certainly not. No reader of the COURIER would be so ignorant as to gather such an idea from what we had said, though the Dispatch appears to gather it. What we meant and what the part of the law the Dispatch omitted, says, is that the state under the new law will tax the earnings of corporations on money collected in the state for business begun or ended in the state. That is, if a person takes a sleeping car from Auburn to Chicago, the price paid will be taxed 1 per cent under the new law, but under the former law it would be taxed nothing. And so of other corporations. But very little business of this kind "begins and ends in the state," and the old law did not produce much even at 2 per cent. But at 1 per cent on all money collected in the state on business extending into other states it will be plain we shall collect much more. If the Dispatch did not intend to deceive, why did it leave out this important part of both laws.

The Creamery Settled.

We get the creamery here so Cal. Husselman informs us. He had been working and watching the matter carefully, together with Chris. Shaffer and others, and is of course, well pleased to announce its certain success. The amount now subscribed is $4,700, or several hundred more than was asked. Now the location of the plant will soon be decided, and work will soon be commenced. It will we believe, prove a valuable thing for us. Stockholders will meet at Gandy's Hall, Saturday at 2 p. m. to appoint the building and locating committees, and to do other necessary work.

They Got There Just the Same.

Tuesday afternoon the calm of this office was suddenly broken by the rapid and confused entrance of less than a dozen of Auburn's most prominent hopefuls, lead by solid, well-built specimen of growing manhood, Paul Davenport. Of course the boys were puffing for breath after running up our long stairs, and the first sound we heard was Paul's familiar, whew! After partially getting his breath he inquired,—"Do,—do y— yo—u take i—tems here. After being assured that we did, he re-related to us the occurrance of a conflict between his nine called the "Red Caps" and Phil Gibson's Standard nine. It seems the boys played a game which grew hotter and hotter, until they concluded to quit with a score of 32 to 33 in favor of the Red Caps. It might be remarked that Paul walked off with the victory as proudly as a young Napoleon. Oh, the boys are hustlers and no mistake. We look to see them take a set-to with the late victorious Garrett nine one of these days.

Great interest is now taken in anything pertaining to Alaska, and those who can not go and see what that part of our country is like for themselves will be glad to read of the experience of two persons who have been there, as set forth in "A Trip to Alaska," by Dr. A. Victoria Scott and Emil J. Bryant, in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for August. The article is profusely illustrated. Other highly interesting illustrated articles in this number of the Popular Monthly are: "Down the St. Lawrence on a Raft," by J. J. Notice to Patrons.

Having disposed of my entire stock of groceries, etc., I desire to have a settlement with all who are indebted to me. Those knowing themselves indebted, are hereby notified to call at once, or their account will be placed in the hands of the collector.

Yours very respectfully,
HENRY J. MOSSEY,

Foreigners Don't Pay It.

The COURIER asks: "If the first cost abroad of an article is 60 cents and on landing at any port a duty of 25 cents is collected, can we add 25 cents to the 60 cents without increasing the 60?" Yes, easily enough. If the price here is 60 cents, adding the 25 cents to the 60 will not increase the price a single farthing above the 60 cents. Again he says: "Suppose the duty on a given lot of goods is $10 does the foreigner send over $10 to pay this?" We say not. If the same kind of goods is manufactured extensively in this country he cuts his prices $10 below what he would do if there were no tariff and thus virtually pays the duty. We wait for the COURIER to mention a single article extensively produced in this country the tariff on which is a tax.

It will be noticed that in the first of the Record copies our question correctly, using the words "first cost abroad," and follows with answer about articles being at a certain price "here." This is dodging our plain question, although in point of fact it would only make a little difference. Yet he seems to think it will save his argument to go off thus on a sidetrack. First, let him stick to the question the way we put it, "price abroad" to be answered as to price abroad. Then we can at any time take up the "price here."

* * *

We might, however, notice the matter he seems so confident about, "goods extensively produced in this country," as he wants us to "name a single one," on which the tariff is a tax," in other words, on which the price would be increased by a duty. Let us see: Sugar is "extensively produced in this country; so is tobacco, so are liquors of various kinds, candy, revolvers, copper, leather, gunpowder, oranges and thousands of other things. A duty is collected on all of them, and that much is added to the cost. Take sugar, for instance. If, as the Record, says, the foreigner reduces his price to the extent of the duty, then why did not foreign sugar producers do this? If they had thus reduced their price we would have been getting sugar before the duty was taken off, at the same rate as now, and there would have been no reduction in the price. How will the Record explain that? A few years ago quinine was taxed a heavy duty. When the duty was abolished, the price fell more than one half. Why had not the foreigner reduced the price per ounce of his quinine when he sent it over here, so as to keep the price here as low as it was after the duty was off? In such a case there would have been no drop in price. Can the Record explain this? A few years ago, an acquaintance of ours, found an engine and boiler in Canada, that he could buy at what he thought, a bargain. He bought it, but on inquiry, he found it would cost $1,200 to pay the duty at Detroit. He sold it again, and did not bring it over. Boilers and engines are made quite "extensively" in the United States. Can the Record explain why that Canadian owner did not come forward and pay that $1,200? That would have prevented a rise in the price on account of a tariff you see. Clothing is "extensively" made in this country." Let the editor of the Record, if he should be in Detroit this week, go over to Windsor and by a suit of clothes, costing we will say, $30. The duty on clothing, per pound is four times the duty per pound on wool, making the duty, about fifty cents a pound, and on an 8-lb. suit this would be $4. Then in addition there is a duty of fifty per cent., ad valorem. Fifty per cent.. of the $30 would be $15. So the total duty would be $19. Would the Windsor dealer throw off $19 on the $30 suit? Let the editor of the Record try this, even if it should give the folks beyond the "Strait" a poor opinion of the intelligence on this side.

Excursion to Niagara Falls and Toronto.

In order to allow patrons to take advantage of the low rate excursion via the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton R. R., from Deshler, Ohio to Niagara Falls to Toronto, the B. & O. will sell excursion tickets on July 30, from Auburn, to Deshler and return at a rate of one fare for the round trip, where excursion tickets to Niagara Falls may be purchased at rate of $4.00 and to Toronto at a rate of $5.00 good for return until August 4th.

They Will be Interested.

Our lady readers will be interested to know something concerning the great sales of Santa Claus soap. The manufacturers, N. K. Fairbank & Co., are justly entitled to rank among the great advertisers of the United States, and are counted among the most liberal patrons of printers' ink in this country.

The Fairbank Company is particularly friendly to newspapers as offering the most legitimate means of advertising, and naturally all newspapers are friendly to Santa Claus soap.

It cannot be said, as in the case of some advertisers, that Fairbank has made Santa Claus famous, but it does seem correct to say that Santa Claus has made Fairbank famous.

Santa Claus has been of course, for time out of mind, a household word. It was a happy thought when the Fairbank Company seized upon this home-like and familiar name for their very best laundry soap.

Naturally enough the quality of the soap has had much to do with its success, for not even the most extravagant advertising could make a success of a poor article. On the other hand there have been so many poor soaps put upon the market the past few years, that in the beginning many purchasers hesitated to try another new candidate for favor at the wash-tub.

Fairbank & Co., are live, wide-awake business men, and they knew just how good housekeepers felt on the soap question. So they not only set thout to manufacture the very best soap that could be made, but they inaugurated a most earnest and honest system of advertising. No "fakes" or "schemes" have been employed to introduce Santa Claus soap on the market. The brand was brought into notice by straightforward and legitimate methods, and has constantly gained in public favor because of the excellence of the article itself. The manufacturers can congratulate themselves upon such a success. We are informed that the sales of Santa Claus soap have increased enormously this year, and far above the average rate. No doubt a great share of the increase in this neighborhood is due to the fact that Santa Clause soap has been well advertised in these columns.

The Colored Campmeeting.

Campmeeting out on the fair grounds is going on successfully. They have had fair attendance, and pretty good order. Once or twice the minister has had to score some thoughtless ones, who were on the outside of the crowd, but he always succeeds in getting them to observe better order. Mr. Hallam is employed on the grounds to assist in keeping things in shape, but more especially to care for the trees, by keeping people from hitching teams to them. This takes constant watching, but the fair society cannot afford to have the trees killed. Thursday and Saturday evenings of this week, will be largely edvoted to song services, as they will on those evenings give full jubilee concerts, singing their old plantation melodies and similar songs and hymns. Their program for the different evenings will be found in another column.

The 25th Annual Encampment, G. A. R., at Detroit, Mich., Aug. 3d to 18,

For this occasion the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company will sell low rate excursion tickets August 1st to 3d, inclusive, from all stations on their lines west of Pittsburg to Detroit and return. These low rates are not restricted to members of the G. A. R., but are open to the general public. Tickets will be valid for the return passage from August 4th to 18th, inclusive. Those desiring to remain longer can do so by depositing their tickets with the agent of the terminal lines at Detroit, until they wish to begin their return journey, such date not to be later than September 30th, 1891.

To Cool a Bedroom.

If the sleeping room is warm, it may be cooled for a time by wringing large pieces of cotton out of water and hanging them before the open windows, says the Ladies' Home Journal. Leave the door open, and as the air comes through the wet cotton it will be cooled. This is a good device for cooling a sick-room; the cloths can then be wet again. Keep the gas turned low during the process of undressing, and sleep without a light, unless it is a tiny night lamp.

Our Leading Druggists

F. E. Davenport is a wide awake business man securing that which he knows will give satisfaction to his customers. He has just received a fresh supply of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the favorite cough medicine, and they are selling more of this remedy than all others combined. This being the case there must certainly be great merit in this medicine as it is giving such universal satisfaction. You can buy it of F. E. Davenport.

Unclaimed Letters.

Unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at Auburn Ind, for the week ending July 24, 1891. Miss Dora Beaty, J. Frederick, Henry Freed.

Claimants will please call for letters in advertised list.

GEO. W. GORDON, P. M.

A Prominent Farmer.

Mr. Nicholas Wagoner, of Monroe, Ind., gives us the following statement in regard to Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. He says: I have used a great many different kinds of medicines for bronchitis, a disease I have had for the last ten years, and found nothing that would relieve me until I commenced to use Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. I took ten 50c. bottles of this medicine and was entirely cured, and can recommend it to any person that is suffering from this disease. NICHOLAS WAGONER.

Spring Fountain Park Assembly

For this occasion the B. & O. company will sell excursion tickets July 15, to 29, inclusive, from all stations in Indiana and points in Ohio west of Fostoria, on their lines, to Warsaw and return, at a rate of one fare for the round trip. These cheap rates are not restricted to delegates, but are open to the general public. Tickets will be valid for the return passage until July 30, inclusive. 29

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

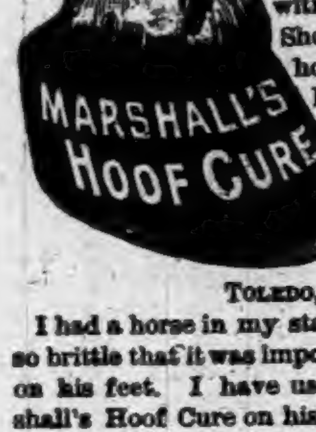
MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE



cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

Tories of the Revolution.

Harper's Bazar has an almost forgotten matter of Revolutionary history. It is the settlement of the Tory town of Shelburne in Nova Scotia. The tories or loyalists, who remained faithful to King George, especially those in and about New York City, found it too uncomfortable for them to remain at their homes after the war had fairly begun and the colonies had declared their independence and so they cast about them to find a suitable place to locate in the British Provinces. They chose the site of their new town, at Shelbourne, and by the close of the war, had quite a large population, many of them being of the wealthier families. But in a few years it was found that the location was not good, as the country around there was too poor to help support the town. They gradually scattered out, some going into other parts of the British Provinces, and many returning to the United States. Now Shelburne is but a moderate sized town and is sustained mainly by its ship building interests. But the story recalls much that is of interest in regard to the fortunes of those Americans who preferred to remain true to the King rather than assist in building up the weak, young republic that is now the wonder and pride of the world, the great republic of the United States of America, with its borders reaching to the Pacific, and its three millions of people now counting nearly sixty-five millions.

Remarkable Facts.

Heart disease is usually supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Limburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which caused the former, "worked wonders for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for thirty years, says two bottles made him "feel like a new man.,, Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold and guarranteed by F. E. Davenport. Dr. Shook of Spencerville has a notice asking his patrons to settle up as soon as they conveniently can. We know how hard it is for a young professional man to get a start. He must be at great expense of time and money to fit himself for his profession. Then he must start up in a new place, and sustain himself on his already small means till he can get business, and then get the pay for it. We believe those who can will look at this in the light of business, and keep their accounts up as nearly even as they can. We know the Doctor will appreciate it.

We are still selling Mason quart fruit jars at $1.00 a dozen. Also have a few baby carriages left, which we do not care to keep over on account of needing the room for other goods, will therefore sell them at the wholesale price, at The Fair, Garrett, Ind.

Our friend J. J. Eakright of Moores, was up here Saturday. Though comparatively a young man, the top of his head, on the left side, has suddenly turned gray. It came on he says within less than a week. He thinks headache and neuralgia did it.

PLAIN SEWING: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Geo. S. Earlston, of Chicago Junction, was here Monday, and as usual, he left a handsome sum with the COURIER. Both he and his sister at Massillon take the paper and we have none that pay more promptly. Mr. Earlston is running on the B. & O. as baggage master, between his town and Chicago, having a run of two days off and two on.

Dr. Richard Elson, now of Canton, Ohio, has been here about a week having a pleasant time calling on his old neighbors. He also spent a part of the time with his brothers in various parts of the county. His brother T. C. Elson, of Buchanan, Mich., was here just before the Doctor came, but left too soon for a meeting with "Dick." He returned home this week.

Last Monday, James Draggoo was leading his cow in front of his premises on South Main St., attached to a long rope, when the animal became unmanageable, and Mr. D.'s feet becoming entangled in the rope, he was thrown to the ground and dragged about considerably, until some of his neighbors noticed the mishap and came to his assistance and he was extricated from his uncomfortable position, considerably bruised, though not seriously.

It is said "a thing of beauty is a joy forever." It is equally true that something comfortable is a profitable investment. A great many times a man pays out his hard earned money for cigars that are little short of "miserable stinkers." Of course, his lack of wisdom brings him discomfort. If you buy the Kessler Bros.' make of cigars, you will never have reason to complain of the quality of goods you have paid for. One trial is sufficient to convince all, of their merits.

Monday evening about twenty of our lads and lassies gathered at the home of Herman Kessler to assist him in the celebration of his 25th anniversary. Not having any knowledge of what was going on, he very naturally ran into a surprise party. Of course all enjoyed themselves until about the time for dispersing, when to their surprise Herman served to them a lap supper that was sufficient to satisfy the tastes of an epicure, as a gentle reminder of his appreciation of the conduct of the evening. A wish was generally expressed that they might meet thus again.

Geo. Shiffer of Leipsic, Ohio, was in town over Sunday, his wife, a daughter of Samuel Swihart, being with him. Mr. S. was the first agent of the B. & O., at the Junction, coming there 17 years ago, when the road first started. He remembers the first bill of freight the road delivered to J. L. Davis, a package from Tiffin. He finds Auburn has changed greatly since then. Then Mr. Davis' was the only bank in Auburn, instead of three as now. He is greatly pleased at the great improvements he sees on every hand. He is still in the railroad work, being joint agent for both the Nickel Plate and the C. H & D. roads.

Auburn is a hustling, busy, enterprising and very popular little city. Her manufacturing, business, social and educational interests are represented and well kept up. But notwithstanding the great progress made here in the past five years, there is one important institution, which, in our rapid rush to the front, has been forgotten. In the larger towns and cities, where young people are compelled to earn their own living in the shops or factories, and have been taken from the school room with but meager qualifications in the common branches, special schools have been established for those who are busy during the day, but wish to study at night. It is believed there are enough of that class of young people in this bustling little burg, who would take advantage of opportunities offered in that direction to make it profitable for some of our professors to establish a Night School. How would it strike some who are consigning themselves to "that toilsome culture, which is the price of all great success," to interview our High School professors on the subject. It certainly would be a praiseworthy instution and its propagator a public benefactor.

Do you want a suit that is "up-to-snuff" in matters of elegance and wearing qualities? If you do Peter Young will accommodate you.

If anyone has missed a flock of ten sheep, they should look for them south of Jackson Center. The neighbors there say such a flock has been there some days.

PIANO FOR SALE: A good square piano in good condition and on reasonable terms. Inquire of Dr. S. B. Johnston at his residence or dental office on North Main street, Auburn.

There will be a Gospel temperance meeting on the court house lawn, next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Address by the Rev. Mr. Lamport of Garrett, and music by the Hoosier Quartet. All are invited.

David Keller, east of town, threshed out six acres of Poole wheat this week, getting 270 bushels, or 45 bushels to the acre. This we have from the best authority, and we would like to hear from the man that can beat it.

J. M. Slussman spent Sunday at the old home in Columbia City. He reports all well over there, not only his own immediate family, but the relatives and friends of the COURIER folks. All of which we are pleased to hear.

Perry Long and John Weaver have the contract for building the new dining hall on the fair ground. It is to be a large one and will take the place of the second-story dining room in the grand stand, that was used last year.

W. H. McIntyre has purchased the building that stood on the parsonage lot of the Presbyterian church and has moved it to another lot, for a dwelling house for some one. The church will at once proceed to erect a new parsonage.

The fifteenth annual "Kriegerfest" or reunion of veterans of the German war will begin in Fort Wayne August 15. It is expected that over 5,000 of the old vets will meet there. They also talk of trying to locate a soldiers' home at that place.

Frank Myers informs us that his mother, Mrs. W. P. Myers of Kendallville, submitted to a severe operation last week, for scirrhus tumor that has troubled her for some time. At latest accounts she was doing well and in a fair way to recover.

Just step into the general variety store on South Main street, and you will be met half-way by John Kruger, sr., whose face is wreathed with a long series of bootjack smiles, as he very pleasantly inquires: "Will ze make us acquainted wiz ze desires of ze heart?"

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

The Wabash has contracted twenty-two ten-car trains from Chicago to Detroit for the purpose of carrying Grand Army men to Detroit next week. Every post in that city has contracted to go by that route. Everybody goes by the Wabash Ry. Buy your tickets at the city office.

The Hoff room is nearly completed. It is a neat business room and very convenient. There is an elevator at the rear end, to lift heavy goods into the room above where they will be stored till needed. The room is nicely finished, Fred. Kring doing the carpenter work and John Blany and Wm. Meeks doing the plastering.

Mrs. Swinehart, wife of the late John Swinehart of Troy, and her son Jacob, were here Monday, to see about the matter connected with the settlement of the estate. The son has been appointed administrator and entered on the discharge of his duties. As his father was a man always actively engaged in business, there will [illegible] to do Little Braddie Ralston is having an unlucky streak. Monday, he got his foot hurt, a toe being broken, and only the next day he was riding with Harry Draggoo, when in some way, they collided with another team and the boys were thrown violently to the ground. Braddie, in falling, struck his face on a stone cutting a bad gash.

The Draggoo building in which Brown & Culbertson have their agricultural implements, is to be extensively re-modeled, and a two story brick added to the rear, extending to the street north. Then Brown & Culbertson expect to put in a stock of hardware and make that a regular business in addition to their already extensive business in implements and machinery.

At the meeting called at Mrs. Plum's last Friday afternoon, the Presbyterian ladies who manage the socials etc., agreed to raise $500 toward the expense of building the new parsonage. This is quite a sum, but those who have witnessed their success in helping to pay the old church debt, and later in raising funds for the parsonage lot, will feel a good deal of confidence in their ability to meet this new obligation.

Dr. Shook of Spencerville, was in town Monday. He is looking well, and reports his practice as good, for a young practitioner. Mr. Kimes, the farmer who was so unfortunate as to have his leg cut off in a binder, a week or two ago, is getting along nicely. It was a dangerous hurt, but Dr. Shook assisted by Dr. Emanuel, amputated and dressed the torn limb, making a perfectly successful operation. We feel like congratulating the doctor on his success as a physician and surgeon, and likewise the people of that vicinity in having a thorough going practitioner located among them. We believe he is going to be one of our leading doctors.

John Richards went up Tuesday evening to Hudson to visit his grandparents Wm. Buss and wife.

Court began again on Monday, and is occupied with the Aldrich case we mentioned a week or two ago.

Mrs. D. D. Snyder of Danville, Ill., is visiting her former neighbors. She is stopping with Mrs. Cuppy.

Everybody comes to the Auburn fair this year. It was immense last year, but will be still better this year.

J. Beuret for screens that will stand the usage of more than one season. Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere. 19tf

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will meet this Friday with Mrs. G. A. Meade, from 2 to 5. All invited to come.

L. J. Miller reports new wheat coming in slowly, but that it is of good quality. The price seems to keep at about 81 and 85 cents.

A few dollars invested in screen doors will add greatly to your comfort during the hot months of summer. J. Beuret has them, and don't you forget it. 19tf

The New Process Vapor stove sold by Beuret is the latest invention in household labor saving stoves. The simplest, easiest and safest. Go and see it for yourselves, at Beuret's, Auburn.

Look out! Now is your time to buy a baby carriage cheaper than you will ever have a chance to get them again. Avail yourselves of the opportunity at The Fair, Garrett, Ind.

The Woman's missionary society of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. Barns next Monday evening. Subject, Indians, Chinese and Japanese in America. A full attendance is desired.

G. W. Weamer starts next week for Colorado, where he goes to spend some months in the hope to improve his health which has been poor for some time. We trust he may return in sound health.

Mrs. W. Penfield and family are spending a season of rest at Clear Lake near the state line in the northeast part of Steuben county. This is becoming one of the most popular resorts in this section.

The young friends of Harry Bell will be pleased to hear that he has a good position at Detroit. He is employed in the general supply office of the Michigan Central railroad at good wages, with a good prospect for promotion.

Charlie Casebeer came home last week, after a stay of several years out west. He is now located at St. Louis and is evidently prospering. Charlie has an abundance of friends in Auburn who will always welcome him home. He is bookkeeper in a large coal company. His brother Ed. is in a drug store there.

Al. Houghton has put down a very substantial cement sidewalk along the front of his South Main street residence. He used the dirt thrown from the trench to fill up the lot. Al. is a single young fellow as yet, but when he is beaten for proper pride and ambition in appearing well, his peer must get up before daylight.

The town has put down a new crossing on South Main street just north of Mrs. Houghton's. The cement crossing already there was about six inches too high, and had to be taken up, and as it was not as wide as Main street crossings are now being constructed, it will be put down across Seventh street north of Harter's store. The new walk at Houghton's has colored blocks, a neat device of Marshal Pfefferl.

John Ferguson a slater, while working on the roof of Clerk Bishop's new residence Monday forenoon slipped and fell to the ground. In falling he struck on the floor of a porch which somewhat broke his fall, although, it also added to his injuries. He was carried to his boarding place at Mrs. Timmerman's, where Drs. Matheny, Casebeer and Watson attended to his injuries. It was found that his right arm was dislocated at the wrist and elbow, one rib fractured and he was badly bruised generally, but no other bones broken, as had been at first supposed. At last accounts he is doing well. He is married and lives at St. Joe. He is able to be out a little.

W. H. McIntosh has the best garden in town, all things considered. Besides having abundance of ground, he cultivates it well. There is a profusion of beautiful flowers, always, and then such a variety of fruits as one seldom sees, from currants to apples, and all of the choicest. He finds no trouble to keep his currants thriving, as a little white hellebore will drive off the worms. Then his Isabella grapes are a marvel of productiveness. Few are now cultivating this former favorite, but his vines are strong and the fruit perfect. Even quinces he has in abundance, for he knows how to keep them in good health and bearing. It will pay an admirer of flowers, fruits and vegetables to take a walk over his premises.

Hank Little, who does the intellectual (?) part of the Garrett Clipper was leaning up against several of our buildings this week, especially Tuesday evening, drunk as a lord. Yet we suppose there would have been no more difficulty than there was the other time, in finding men to swear he was sober, and that the state of Indiana was very wrong to interfere with what appears to be his only enjoyment. We say he was drunk. Why don't our authorities fix up the calaboose and put him into it, as others are served? Had he been a stranger or a country boy, there would have been no difficulty in proving him very drunk. We suppose he was up here hunting for that Garrett ditch, that he wants the Auburn papers to oppose. He probably found the ditch on the road home.

Fatal Runaway.

A Well Known Citizen Dashed to Death by his Frightened Horses.

Stephen Girardot's team ran away with him yesterday afternoon about three o'clock. They had come up onto Main street off of Eighth, and as they turned east on Seventh, a defective bit on the off horse gave way and the team started. He seemed unable to do much, and they ran to the north side, striking the pile of bricks in front of Brown & Culbertson's. This threw him out and he was struck by the wheel of the heavy wagon, which cut his skull open as is believed. The next instant he was dashed against the foot of the sign-post of Wilson's boot and shoe store, the hub of the wagon also striking the post. The horses tore loose, breaking the lines, which appeared fast to him. He lay an instant, then raised, quivering, a part way up, and then fell back. He was lifted to the sidewalk, and Dr. Swarts, who was among the first to reach him, tried to help him to get his breath, but after a few gasps he was dead. There were terrible cuts on his head, caused by the wheel striking him, or by striking against the post, possibly by both. His brother, Justin, came up at this time and got a carriage and took the now lifeless body to his home a short distance east of town. The team was stopped as it reached 7th street bridge. It was a valuable but rather dangerous team for him to drive. He had been over to Garrett, where he bought a fly net, and finding the ring of the bit of the off horse, a stallion, broken, he tied it up with a string. It is supposed that the breaking of this string set this horse off, as he started first. Mr. Girardot was a man well liked and respected for many good qualities, and his untimely death casts a shadow over our community. There was a rumor that he was in liquor. Such was not the case. He never drank so he could not manage a team, although he sometimes took a glass of beer. He was a farmer past middle age and leaves a family, who are, we believe, in good circumstances.

AUCTIONEER.

J. C. Walters wishes to say to the people of Auburn and vicinity, that he is an experienced auctioneer, and offers his service to those who have sales, at any time when needed. Call on him at his home two miles east of Auburn or write to him here. tf

Literary Notes from The Century Co.

Poultney Bigelow, who was a schoolmate of the German Emperor, will contribute an article to the Midsummer (August) number of The Century on the first three years of the Emperor's reign—the third anniversary of his ascent to the throne having taken place on the 15th of June. Mr. Bigelow believes that "since Frederick the Great, no king of Prussia has understood his business like this emperor," and in this article he gives what he considers the secret of the power of William II with his people, and incidentally contributes many facts regarding his life.

This number of The Century will be especially rich in illustrated articles and complete stories, and the illustrations of Mr. Bigelow's paper will include a number of views of the places at Berlin and Potsdam, and engraved portraits of the Emperor and Empress will form a double frontpiece.

Colored Camp Meeting

THEY are talking of holding an extra session of Congress in Chicago during the World's Fair. Wait awhile, gentlemen, and you will see all the sessions of Congress held in that city. It is only a question of a little time until the National capital will be located where it belongs—in the center of the country—and Chicago is about the proper spot.

YOU should never neglect your personal appearance. No matter how glad a friend is to see you, he will look more at your clothes than he will at you. Your clothes play a very important part in your life. You are judged by what they make you. If they make you appear a guy, it is your fault, for it is in your power to make them show you to be a very neat, sensible looking person.

THE other day a New York man enjoying the advantages of delirium tremens fell from a fifth-story window and (so the report in a local paper puts it) "when he struck the ground he was dazed, but not hurt." In view of the fact that when he set out on his downward trip he was delirious and when he landed he was only dazed, the conclusion is logically irresistible that if he had fallen from a tenth-story window he would have been utterly cured.

THE crime of embezzlement, which is the technical name for one form of theft, is usually one of the most inexcusable of all offenses against property, as it implies the holding of a place of trust which must pay a reasonable sum to the delinquent. The drawing of a liberal salary leads to liberal or even lavish living, and it is a truism to say that the man with $1,000 a year, who spends $900 is better off and a safer man to trust than is a man who earns $5,000 annually and spends it all, and a little more in addition.

FANATICAL advocates of Darwinism and its materialistic corollaries will make great ado over Prof. Garner's discovery that monkeys understand each other and have articulated language. The value of the discovery, if proved, is not relevant in the Darwinian controversy, science having shown that man does not proceed from monkeys. It is generally people who know very little about science that make most of it in their assumption that there is conflict between it and religion. "Pope Bob" ought not to be too fast getting up new jokes at Moses' expense on the strength of the Garner theory.

THERE is not now living a single descendent in the male line of Chaucer, Shakspeare, Spenser, Milton, Cowley, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, Goldsmith, Byron or Moore; not of Sir Philip Sidney, nor of Sir Walter Raleigh; not one of Drake, Cromwell, Hampden, Monk, Marlborough, Petersborough or Nelson; not one of Bolingbroke, Walpole, Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Grattan or Canning; not one of Bacon, Locke, Newton or Davy; not one of Hume, Gibbon or Macaulay; not one of Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds or Sir Thomas Lawrence; not one of David Garrick, John Kemble or Edward Kean.

GEN. BUTLER'S recent experience in Judge Carpenter's court in Boston brings out this narrative in one of the papers of that city: It was while the late Judge Colt was presiding in the Supreme Court at Salem, during the trial of a noted case in which Gen. Butler was counsel, that the General insisted upon his right to introduce certain evidence which had been repeatedly excluded by the court. Butler, nevertheless, renewed his attempt until the court peremptorily ordered him to desist. Judge Lord, then of the Superior Court, and a resident of Salem, was within the bar, and as he passed Butler, said, "Butler if I were on this bench, and you persisted in trying to introduce evidence after I had excluded it, I would commit you." Quick as a flash came the reply, "Judge, if you were on the bench, I shouldn't try it."

MRS. ALONZO W. PAIGE, of Chicago, is to be congratulated upon the recovery of her stolen diamond earrings, and the public at large is to be congratulated upon the way she recovered them. Long before her jewels were taken by a burglar, Mrs. Paige took pity on a small boy who, on a bitter cold day begged her assistance for his sick mother. She sheltered the child, fed and assisted him. A few months later her jewels were stolen, and about three weeks afterward they were slipped into her open doorway, done up in a cotton rag, and accompanied by these words scrawled on the rag: "For the lady what was kind to me last winter." It is a pleasing story, at which hardened old worldly-wise sinners will sneer, but the possession of a heart not wholly blase will take kindly to it and feel deep down in it a rejoicing that the habit of condemning "indiscriminate charity" sometimes, as in this case, suffers a richly deserved black-eye.

THE working of the law passed by the Fifty-first Congress, allowing enlisted men to purchase their discharge from the army after a year's service, at certain established rates, is beginning to excite attention if not apprehension. It is said that about 700 men have thus far been discharged under this provision, and that the applications continue. This makes a serious drain, considering that without this additional facility for exit it has long been found impracticable to keep the army up to its legal maximum. Still it may turn out that the new system is the best in the end. The annual losses by desertions are reckoned not in hundreds, but in thousands; and if it should be shown that this liberty to buy one's way honorably out of the army materially decreases the number of dishonorable escapes there will be a great gain for discipline. The knowledge that an honorable way of leaving the service has been thrown open must help enlistments among those who fear a long pledge to an occupation they may not like.

Butterflies Bathing.

It is commonly thought that butterflies dread water as a fine lady dreads rain; but evidently this is not true in Australia.

The case of an Australian butterfly deliberately entering the water to take a bath is recorded by M. G. Lyell, Jr., in the Victoria Naturalist. He saw it alight close to the water, into which it backed till the whole of the body and the lower part of the hind wings were submerged, the two forelegs alone retaining their hold of the dry land. After remaining in this position for something like a half minute it flew away, apparently refreshed.

Mr. Lyell says, "During the morning I noticed a number doing the same thing. In one instance no less than four were to be seen within a space of not more than three yards, and to make sure that I was not deceived I captured several as they rose from the water, and found in each case the body and lower edge of the hind wings quite wet. While in the water the fluttering of the wings, so noticeable at other times, was suspended, and so intent were the butterflies in the enjoyment of their cold bath that they could hardly move, even when actually touched by the net. Apparently the heat of the weather drove them down to the water, as immediately upon emerging they flew up again to the hillsides."

Butterflies are often seen apparently sucking in the moisture around the edge of pools; but they have never before been seen actually to enter the water.

"On Time."

It is a matter of pride with railroad companies to run their trains on time, or to come as near to punctuality as possible. This well known fact no doubt explains an incident which an English traveler relates in connection with a journey which he took across the American Continent. It was one of the great transcontinental lines which had made special promises as to punctuality.

On the journey, the English traveler seemed to notice a marked disregard for the time-table, but he was interested in the country, and made no complaint.

At last the Pacific terminus was reached. There he met a beaming official of the company, who, pulling his own watch out, said:

"Just look and see what time you've got, will you, please?"

"It wants 10 minutes of 1," said the Englishman, a little puzzled.

"Yes, sir; 12:50 exactly! And that's the time she's scheduled to arrive! How's that for promptness? Crossing the continent, almost 3,000 miles, and getting here at 12:50 o'clock, precisely as advertised."

"I can't deny that, you know," said the Englishman. "It's very fine, no doubt; but look here—how many days were you late?"

"Oh, a matter of two or three, perhaps; but we struck the coast at 12:50!"

A NEW M'KINLEY TRUST.

THE TABLE GLASSWARE MEN HAVE ORGANIZED.

A Trust to Enjoy McKinley Spoils—McKinley's Big Advance of Duties Gives the Trust a Good Thing—Our Exports of Glassware Prove the Duty Not Necessary.

The makers of table glassware have completed the trust they have been building ever since last December. McKinley gave these men such a handsome increase of duties that they at once determined to "get together" and appropriate the good things which McKinley had so generously placed in their power.

Even before the famous McKinley bill became a law it was said that the manufacturers had in view a combination of some kind. This fact was stated during the debates in Congress last year; but the McKinleyites went ahead in defiance of such information, regarding it as but another "free trade attack on American industry," and made a large increase in the duties.

Glassware.	Old rate, ℘ cent.	McKinley rate, ℘ cent.
Plain	40	60
Cut, decorated, etc.	40	60
Lamp chimneys	40	60
Bohemian	45	60
Shades	45	60
Tubes	45	60

But these figures do not bring out the full protection of the McKinley law. The customs-administrative law, which went into effect on the 1st of last August, assesses the same duty on the boxes or crates containing goods as on the goods themselves. The packing makes a considerable item of expense in handling glassware. Furthermore, the same law requires that no allowance be made for articles broken in transit, unless the broken articles amount to 10 per cent. of the shipment, in which case the Government takes the broken or damaged articles, sells them at auction, and pockets the proceeds. In the shipment of glass and glassware a considerable portion is always broken; and the losses thus entailed form an additional protection to the domestic manufacturer over and above the high rate of duty in the McKinley law.

The additional protection in these items amounts to at least 10 per cent., making the full protection granted the trust by McKinley about 70 per cent.

There was no need whatever for increasing the duties, since our imports amount to only fifty or sixty thousand dollars' worth per annum, while we export at least ten times as much. In the report of Mexico's imports for 1889 it is seen that that country took from us $243,000 of glass and china, from Germany $164,000, from France $159,000, and from England only $16,000. If we can compete so successfully in Mexico, even without reciprocity, with the "pauper-made" glassware of Europe, there is clearly no need for McKinley's high duties to protect our manufacturers in the home market. Even the New York Tribune admits that glassware "can be produced in the United States as cheaply as in Europe."

It could have been easily foreseen that McKinley's high duties would give rise to a trust; and such has been the result. After much preliminary work during the past six months the glassware men have at last gotten their trust fairly launched. The high tariff New York Tribune, which holds the queer view that the McKinley law is "a trust-killing tariff, men and brethren," has recently printed the following dispatch:

GLASS MANUFACTURERS COMBINE.

PITTSBURG, July 15.—At a meeting of the table glassware manufacturers of Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia in this city to-day, the plants were consolidated and an association formed under the name of the United States Glass Company. D. C. Ripley, of this city, was elected President. The company comprises eighteen firms, with a capital of $1,000,000. The object of the combination is said to be to systematize and to harmonize the workings of the several plants and to secure such economies in cost as may result from a consolidation of interests. The headquarters will be in Pittsburg.

The report that the price of glass fruit-jars has been recently raised by a trust is evidence of what this infant combine can do in the way of bleeding the masses of our people. Where is the family which does not use glassware? Nearly every table in the land has its tumblers, goblets, butter dishes, salt cellars, and numerous other articles of glassware. Poor, indeed, is the housewife who is not concerned in this McKinley tariff trust.

The organization of this trust calls attention once more to the fact that trusts have been springing up like mushrooms in a wet summer ever since McKinley's high tariff went into operation last October. McKinleyism and trusts go hand in hand.

The Foreign Market Willing.

A protectionist trade paper says: "Foreign countries are turning their eyes to the United States for their bread supplies, and will buy everything in that line which we can offer them. This means the turning of a wide stream of gold into this country and a corresponding increase in the prosperity of all branches of trade."

This is the confession of a protection journal thirty years after the Republican party began to build up a home market for the farmer, in which, as it promised, all his products would be consumed "right at his doors." But the attempt to build up such a home market is further than ever from realization, and our farmers must find a market for $600,000,000 or $700,000,000 worth of their produce. This year, with abundant crops here and unusually short crops in Europe, the prospect is that our farmers will have $800,000,000 worth of their products for export.

The farmers are intelligent enough to see the enormous value to them of so large a foreign demand for what they raise, and to see, too, the importance of promoting our trade with foreign countries by a free admission of foreign goods into our ports. To suppose that foreign countries can for any great length of time pay us for our farm products and manufactures in gold or silver is absurd. There is not a sufficient quantity of the precious metals in those countries to stand such a drain.

If we wish, then, to sell to foreign countries, we must necessarily buy their products. Even the organ of the American Protective Tariff League has made the following sweeping admission: "Probably no common law is more rigid than that a nation's imports must in the long run be paid for by its exports." In other words, the more goods we buy abroad the greater the foreign demand for our products. Why, then, all this noise about the tin plate that we import? Why not encourage the Welshman to send us double the quantity we now take, since we can thus open a market for "another bushel of wheat and another barrel of pork?"

Labor and Commodities.

The system of protection is defended upon the ground that it will create more labor. Here is a favorite protectionist maxim: "The best system for a country is that which secures for it the greatest amount of labor."

But labor is not an end in itself; we labor solely for the sake of the commodities we need. Most people of ordinary common sense think that the best system is that which secures the greatest amount of commodities. They are quite content to save their labor, and will even invent curious and cunning labor-saving machinery in order to spare themselves unnecessary toil.

If the protection theory is sound then Elias Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine, was a great foe to women, since he made it possible for one woman to do the work of ten; and the inventors of the self-binding reaper did great harm to the farmers by making it possible to reap their grain with one-tenth of the labor needed under the old system.

No; the best system is not that which gives us more labor, but more goods, more food and clothing. The shortest road to these is the system requiring the least labor. When men are let alone they take that road of themselves; protection only steps in to make men take the longest road, since in it they will have to take more steps in order to reach the same point.

"European Interest" and Tariff Reform.

One of the cheapest and most foolish efforts of protectionists to create a prejudice against the tariff reform movement is to point out how Europe sympathizes with the Democratic party and is anxious for its success. Thus Hon. John S. Clarkson, who recently returned from Europe, said at a banquet given in his honor in New York:

"A thing that strengthens the faith of the Republican visiting Europe is the plain expressions of hope heard in many quarters that the Democrats may return to power in the United States and reverse the American legislation, in European interest."

If Clarkson would apply this protection wisdom to his private affairs he would have to boycott every merchant with whom he has been in the habit of trading. He must refuse to buy sugar from his grocer, since this worthy citizen is anxious to sell sugar; and it would be equally impossible to have a coat made, for the tailor is always keen for a job. If the great Republican "headsman" of the Postoffice Department is consistent and will refuse to buy from people who are anxious to sell, he will go naked and hungry.

Nobody of even the lowest intelligence will be deceived by this favorite "argument" of the Clarksons, the McKinleys, and the lesser lights of Republican statecraft. The fact that Europe wants to trade with us is no evidence of hostility to our prosperity—no more so than the demand of our farmers for a market in Europe for "another bushel of wheat and another barrel of pork" means that they are seeking to cripple European industries.

In the long run all trade must yield a profit to both buyer and seller. It is extremely silly to suppose that we are going to suffer loss at the hands of European traders because they want to sell to us; and still more silly to pass laws to keep our people from buying wherever they find sellers with wares which they want.

Lead Smelting and McKinleyism.

Mexican silver-lead ores were taxed by McKinley almost to a point of exclusion under the pretense of helping Colorado lead producers. Now the Mexican ores are being smelted in Mexico, largely by American capital driven out of the country by McKinley, and the product, in the shape of crude lead bars is being shipped directly to England.

Formerly the ore came into this country free and gave employment to many laborers in our smelting establishments. Being used for smelting the "dry ore" of Colorado, the Mexican ore acted as a direct encouragement to the development of our numerous mines producing these "dry ores." The owners of the so-called "carbon ore" mines in Colorado, however, had the "pull" on the Republican tariff maker, and, since the carbon cured did not need Mexican silver-lead ores to mix with their own in smelting, they demanded a high duty to practically exclude them.

The result of this protectionist jugglery is thus stated by the New York Engineering and Mining Journal: "Everyone knows that the 'dry ore' miners have been paying for the exclusion of Mexican fluxing ores, and everyone knows that the only people who have gained are a few owners of high grade or 'irony' lead ores, and some of the railroads. Our miners are worse off than before."

In the meantime, what are the consumers paying for lead itself? The price of lead in the New York market is now 4.40 cents a pound, against 2.68 cents in London, the duty being 2 cents a pound. Early last year, before McKinley got in his work, the price of lead here was as low as 3.80 cents per pound: but as soon as his tariff bill passed the House "lead jumped to 4.40."

These are figures which anybody can verify from market reports in the trade journals, however violently the protection organs may deny the existence of any such thing as "McKinley prices."

Taking Back-Water.

The Republicans of Massachusettes are trying to run away from McKinleyism. The Republican Club of that State has recently sent out a circular to all its members to get their opinions as to the issues to be made prominent in the campaign next fall.

One answer was: "Touch very lightly upon protection;" and another: "The McKinley bill is not a final settlement of the controversy, but Republicans are ready to amend the law as the evils incident to it become apparent." Says a third: "It is the duty of the Republican party, while protecting our industries, to correct any parts of the tariff laws which, after a fair trial, are found to work injustice to the masses of the people." Others still go further. "An attitude looking toward free raw materials for New England" is demanded by a Westfield correspondent. A Boston letter is even more emphatic. "No further development of the theory of high protection," it says, "but an extension of the free list and a careful and equitable reduction of the existing duties, as well as a practical cessation of a further addition to the list of dutiable articles, with the understanding that a foreign market is a desideratum as well as a home market."

Not a Money-Making Fair.

Ex-Congressman Ben Butterworth, who kicked so vigorously against the McKinley bill last year, is now in London. Speaking there of the Chicago World's Fair, of which he is Secretary, he is reported to have said:

"Besides a successful show, we intend to have a gathering of nations and to promote commerce. You may think it strange to talk of promoting commerce when we have built a wall across the road with the McKinley bill. Anyhow, we think the Exposition will lead to a better entente. It is not a dollar-making business."

But Butterworth will hardly find any European manufacturers who will go to the trouble and great expense of exhibiting at Chicago except as "a dollar-making business." Europeans will have no patriotic sentiment such as moves us, and it is certain that the only European products found at the Chicago Fair will be such as appeal to the taste of the rich, who are able to buy costly articles of luxury despite the high-tariff wall "across the road."

Europe makes a thousand and one articles which the poorer and moderately well-to-do people of this country would like to buy, but it is safe to predict that very few of these will be seen at Chicago.

IT seems that a hen that lays two eggs a day must neglect some other duties.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.

Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.

After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause. Respectfully,

The Man of Letters and the Burglar.

A man of letters, reading late at night, became aware that a burglar was breaking through the wall of his house. He happened to have a teapot full of boiling water standing before the fire, and this he took, placing it by the side of the wall while he waited for the burglar.

Now, when the burglar had made an opening, he thrust his legs through first, whereupon the man of letters grasped them firmly and drenched them with boiling water.

The burglar uttered a piercing cry and begged for mercy. But the other, continuing to pour out the water, replied gravely:

"Only wait till I have emptied my teapot?"

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as childrens' troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine. ①

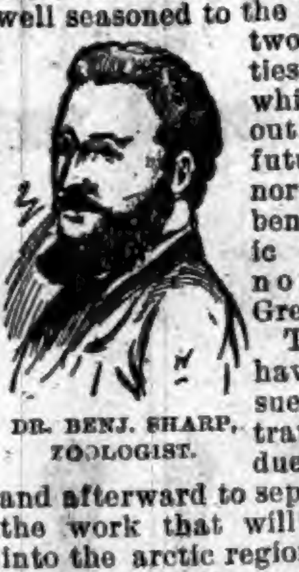
ICE-BOUND GREENLAND

THE SCENE OF NEW EXPLORING OPERATIONS.

Lieutenant Peary and a Party Bound for a Jaunt to Determine the Country's Northern Limits and Lay Out a Route Toward the Pole.

From New York there has sailed a little bit of a whaling vessel—the Kite—well seasoned to the arctic waters, with two adventurous parties, one section of which intends to lay out a route for some future expedition to the north pole, the other bent on the scientific exploration of the northwest coast of Greenland.

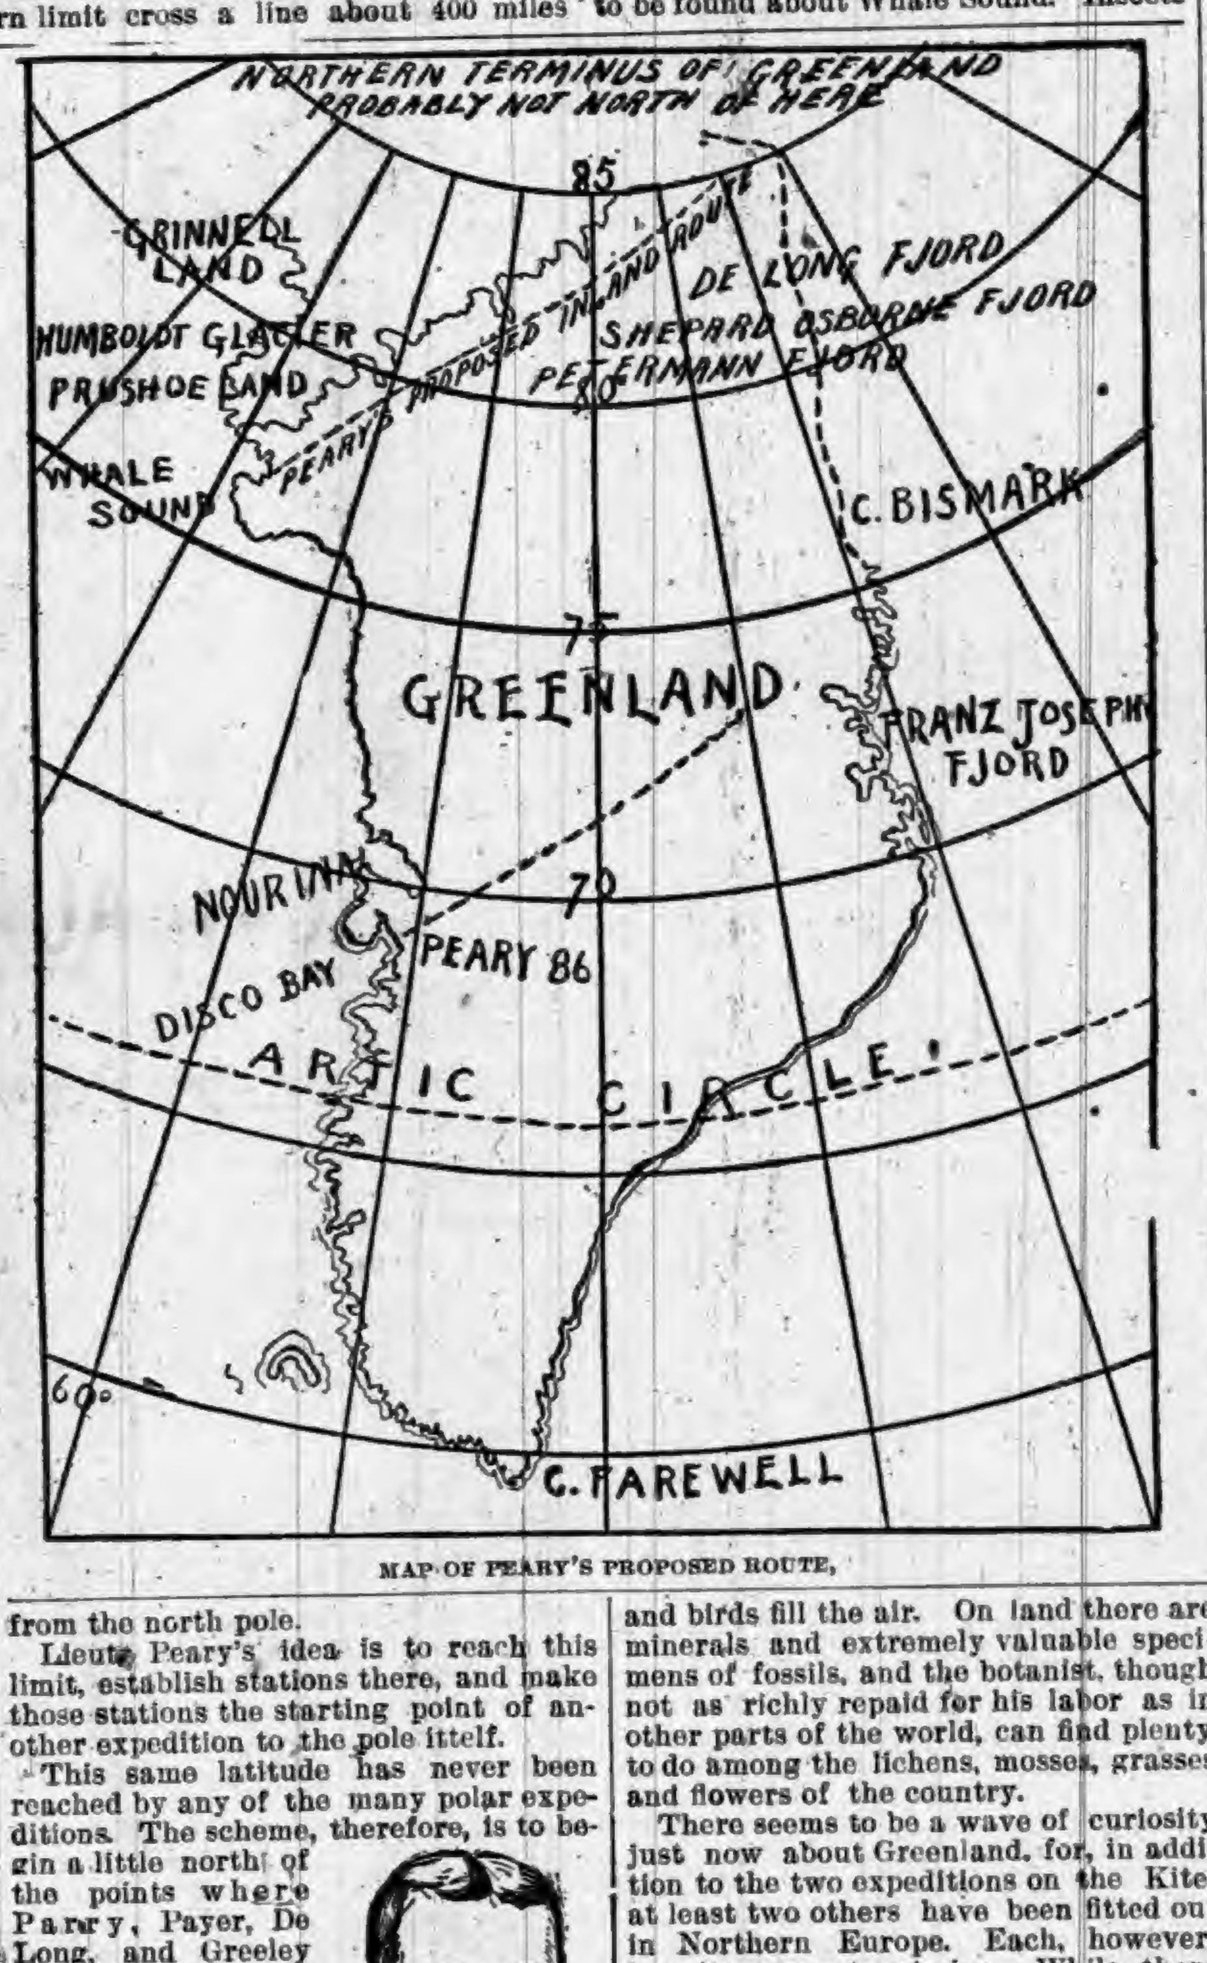


DR. BENJ. SHARP, ZOOLOGIST.

The two bands which have pooled their issues and arranged to travel about 3,000 miles due north in company, and afterward to separate and do alone the work that will have brought each into the arctic region, are Lieut. Robert E. Peary's party, to determine the northern extent of Greenland, and the company of scientists under command of Prof. Angelo Heilprin of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, who will ascertain the physical facts about what is probably the most interesting section of the same country.

Although Greenland was colonized by Europeans a thousand years ago, very little is known about its interior, and nothing in relation to its extreme northern boundary. Some people claim that it is a continent stretching perhaps as far as the north pole, but geographers generally agree that it is an island, and that there is an ocean passage connecting the Arctic Ocean with the Atlantic not very far north of the most northerly point so far reached on the west coast of Greenland.

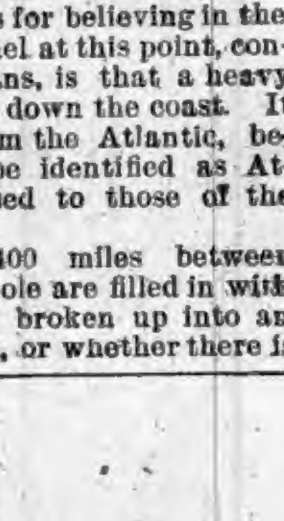
This theory is borne out by the configuration of the coast line, which narrows on both coasts toward the north, and it requires very little imagination to round out the island, making the northern limit cross a line about 400 miles from the north pole.



MAP OF PEARY'S PROPOSED ROUTE.

Lieut. Peary's idea is to reach this limit, establish stations there, and make those stations the starting point of another expedition to the pole itself.

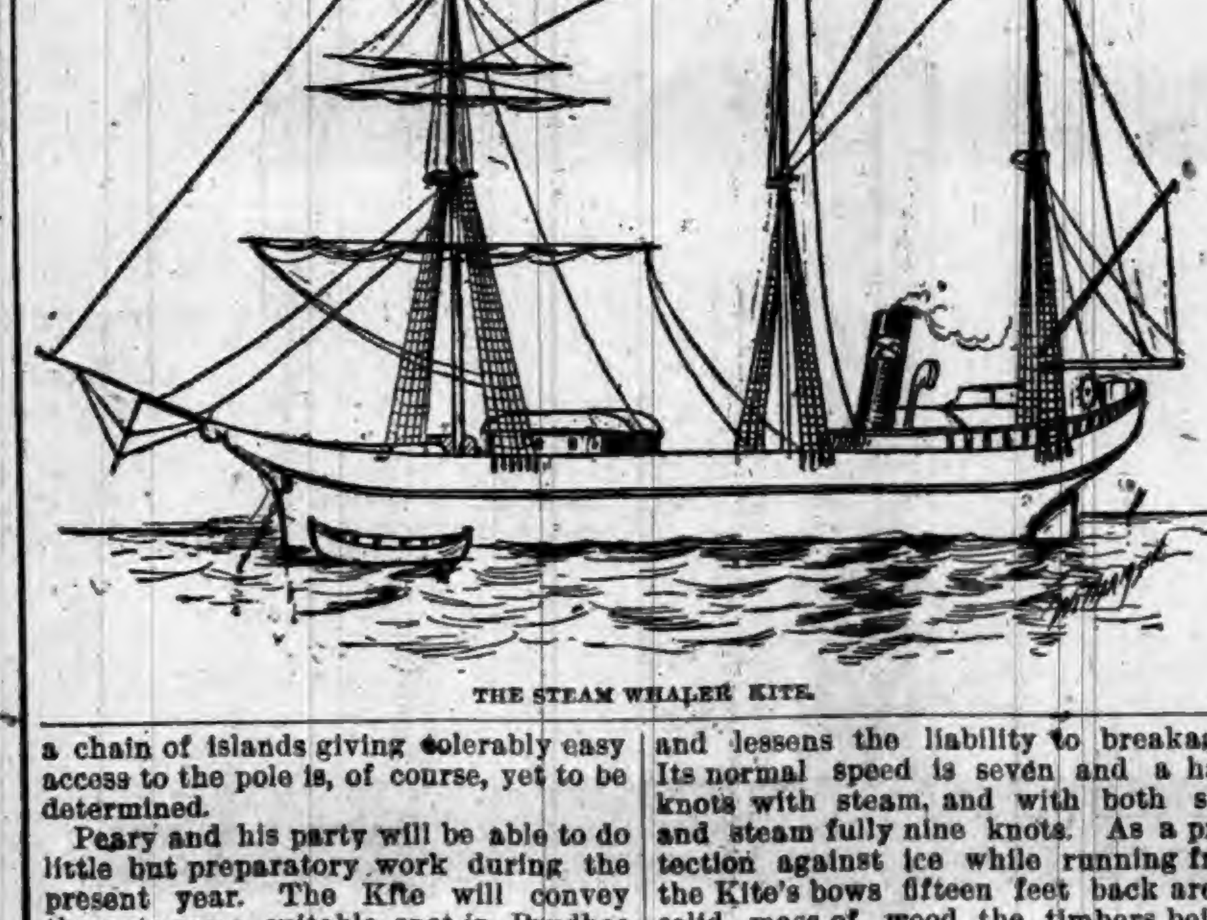
This same latitude has never been reached by any of the many polar expeditions. The scheme, therefore, is to begin a little north of the points where Parry, Payer, De Long, and Greeley left off, assuming that Greenland is an island, and that future expeditions will probably be made in strong whaleboats, carried in sections over the ice cap which covers the country. The surface of the cap is comparatively smooth, and admits of traveling which might be called luxurious when compared with journeys over the jagged, frozen sea.



DR. WM. B. E. HUGHES.

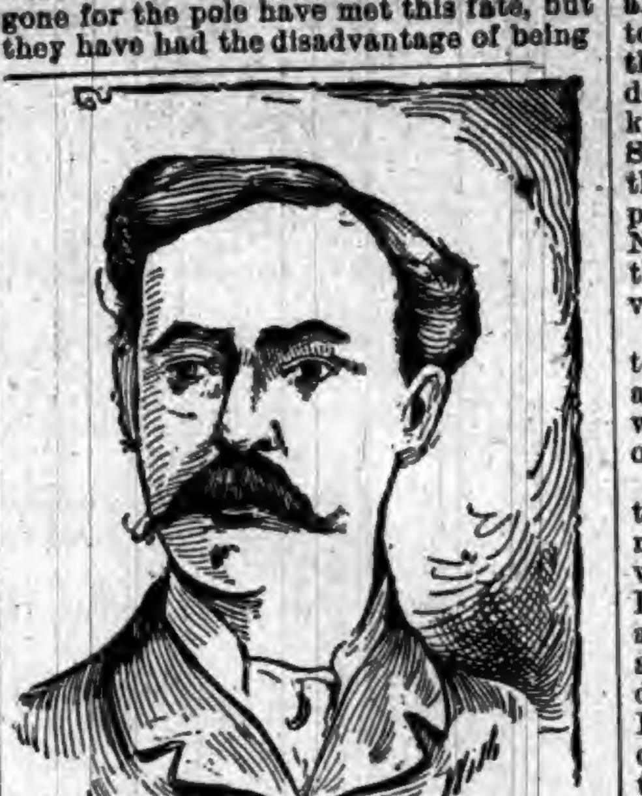
One of the reasons for believing in the existence of a channel at this point, connecting the two oceans, is that a heavy flow of water comes down the coast. It comes, probably, from the Atlantic, because the tides can be identified as Atlantic tides as opposed to those of the Pacific.

Whether these 400 miles between Greenland and the pole are filled in with only a frozen ocean broken up into an impassable ice gorge, or whether there is a chain of islands giving tolerably easy access to the pole is, of course, yet to be determined.



THE STEAM WHALER KITE.

Peary and his party will be able to do little but preparatory work during the present year. The Kite will convey them to some suitable spot in Prudhoe Land, and they will go into winter quarters immediately, where they will wait until next summer for their great dash to the northern limits. They will deliberately get frozen in there for the winter. All the expeditions which have gone for the pole have met this fate, but they have had the disadvantage of being in ships which were likely to be "nipped" and sunk.



LIEUTENANT R. E. PEARY, U. S. N.

It will not be until next year, therefore, that the fruits of Peary's explorations can be plucked.

With the Heilprin party, however, the case is different. After depositing Peary and his effects in the most sheltered nook it is possible to find, the bonny little Kite will take to her heels and land the other party at points along the coast favorable to the determination of important facts missing in the scientific history of Greenland.

Considering their well-known ability and capacity for research, the discoveries of the Heilprin party are likely to be more diverse and interesting than even those of Peary. The region to be traversed is very rich in animal life, and it is intended to secure specimens of every creature that will kindly come within the range of the very effective guns that will be carried.

Polar bears, wolves, foxes, seals, reindeer, musk ox, walruses, and scores of animals almost equally interesting are to be found about Whale Sound. Insects and birds fill the air. On land there are minerals and extremely valuable specimens of fossils, and the botanist, though not as richly repaid for his labor as in other parts of the world, can find plenty to do among the lichens, mosses, grasses and flowers of the country.

There seems to be a wave of curiosity just now about Greenland, for, in addition to the two expeditions on the Kite, at least two others have been fitted out in Northern Europe. Each, however, has its separate mission. While there will be, to a certain extent, scientific competition, the expeditions are not likely to come to blows, or even to meet. Patriotic Americans will, of course, hope that the Heilprin party will carry off the laurels.

The Kite, in which the party will travel, is a typical whaler, not beautiful to the eye but powerful, seaworthy, and just about as unsinkable as a vessel can be made.

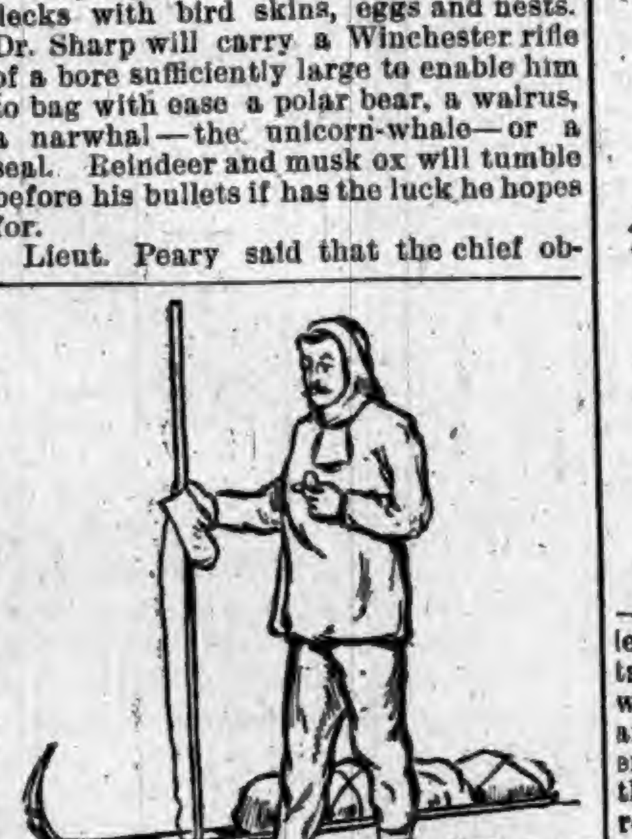
This craft, to which the party commit themselves and their hopes for a period of about four months, is bark built, but barkentine rigged, and, though equipped with all the sails a vessel of her size can possibly carry, she has an engine and propeller. She relies chiefly on her canvas, but the steam is useful in extricating her from ice.

The Kite's dimensions are 117.6 feet over all, 26.4 feet beam, and 14 feet hold. Its tonnage is 280 gross and 190 net. The engine is fifty horse power, and, being a vertical engine, the builder was enabled to place it well aft. This gives the propeller a short crank-shaft, and lessens the liability to breakage. Its normal speed is seven and a half knots with steam, and with both sail and steam fully nine knots. As a protection against ice while running free the Kite's bows fifteen feet back are a solid mass of wood, the timbers being dovetailed together. A vertical strip of iron passes from the bowsprit down the nose under the water line and some distance along the keel. The iron is 4 inches wide and 1 inch thick. Straps of iron 4 inches wide and 1¼ inches thick are bound around the nose horizontally to snub the ice. From the stern two-thirds of the way forward the sides are doubly planked. Both sides down to the keel forward are also doubly planked. She has had plenty of experience among the icebergs. Mr. Bowring, of the shipping firm of Bowring & Archibald, of New York, the agents of the Kite, says that if she hit an iceberg it would be a very bad thing for the berg.

Whalers of this kind go north, loaded to the gunwales with coal, and if they are specially fortunate and catch their whales quickly, they heave the coal overboard to make room for the oil.

The Kite may bring back a whale or two, but the plans of the party are to make its zoological prices much more varied than those of a whaler. Dr. Hughes expects to have a carnival among the birds of Greenland and fill up a large part of the steamer's 'tween decks with bird skins, eggs and nests. Dr. Sharp will carry a Winchester rifle of a bore sufficiently large to enable him to bag with ease a polar bear, a walrus, a narwhal—the unicorn-whale—or a seal. Reindeer and musk ox will tumble before his bullets if has the luck he hopes for.

Lieut. Peary said that the chief object sought to be accomplished by the expedition is the solution of the problem whether Greenland is an island or a continent. "If it is a continent, and it seems to me that the weight of the evidence is that way," Lieut. Peary continued, "the vexed question of the finding of the north pole will have been answered in the affirmative, for it will be necessary, in order to reach the pole, only to penetrate further and further into the frozen country along the line of the western coast of Greenland. If it shall be proven that Greenland is a continent, many lives of explorers who might seek to reach the pole by sailing north will be spared."



EQUIPPED FOR TRAVEL.

In some parts of Greenland, particularly the north, the ice and snow, collecting for ages, has accumulated until it is a mile thick in some places. As it never melts, the surface is tolerably smooth. It is the discharge of ice by means of glaciers that keeps the supply down.

The weight of the snow pressing from the center to the edges forces the ice into the sea. It flows down the valleys as rivers do, and, reaching the sea, is broken off into icebergs. Greenland, therefore, is one huge iceberg factory as well as a refrigerator which, with its stock of millions upon millions of tons of ice stored up for eternity, has a tremendous effect upon the temperature of everything within hundreds of miles of it, and no doubt upon the climate of this country.

In July the party, numbering five or six, will go into winter quarters at Whale Sound, to make reconnoissances and lay in supplies for the journey toward the pole. Next spring an advance party will be sent forward to establish depots of supplies, and the main party will follow, proceeding as far north as possible.

Here a second depot will be established, and two or three of the party, with full sledges, will push on, the others returning with light sledges to Whale Sound.

The advance party will push on from Petermann fjord to the head of Sherard Osborne fjord, establish a depot there, thence to the head of De Long fjord, establish a depot, thence to the northern terminus of Greenland.

This point reached and determined, the advance party will retrace its steps to Whale Sound, taking up the various depots, and seize the first opportunity to return home.

The whole theory of the project is based upon the fact that the interior of South and Middle Greenland is known to be covered with an uninterrupted ice cap and the more than probable that in North Greenland the conditions are the same and the ice cap practically coextensive with the land.

The Red Man's Bronco.

The toughness and strength of the pony can scarcely be exaggerated. He will live through a winter that will kill the hardiest cattle. He worries through the long months when the snow has covered up the bunch grass on a diet of cottonwood boughs, which the Indian cuts down for him; and in the spring it takes but a few weeks for him to scour out into splendid condition. He can go unheard of distances.

Colonel R. I. Dodge records an instance coming under his observation where a pony carried the mails 300 miles in three consecutive nights, and back over the same road the next week, and kept this up for six months without loss of condition. He can carry any weight. Mr. Parkman speaks of a chief known as Le Cochon, on account of his 300 pounds avoirdupois, who nevertheless rode his ponies as bravely as a man of half his bulk. The pony has often carried two people as one. There is simply no end to this wonderful product of the prairies. He works many years. So long as he will fatten up in the spring his age is immaterial.

The absence of crest in the pony suggests the curious query of what has become of the proud arching neck of his ancestors, the barb. There are two ways of accounting for this. The Indian's gag bit, invariably applied with a jerk, throws up the pony's head instead of bringing it down, as the slow and light application of the school curb will do, and this tends to develop the ewe neck. Or a more sufficient reason may be found in the fact that the starvation which the pony undergoes in the winter months tends to deplete him of every superfluous ounce of flesh.—Baltimore American.

LADIES IN A SADDLE.

Prof. L. De Gispert Chats Interestingly on the Subject.

"How few women know how to sit in a saddle!"

This was the comment of Prof. L. De Gispert, the well-known tutor of the riding-school.

The Professor's life has been devoted to equestrianism, and he is one of the most expert of riders.

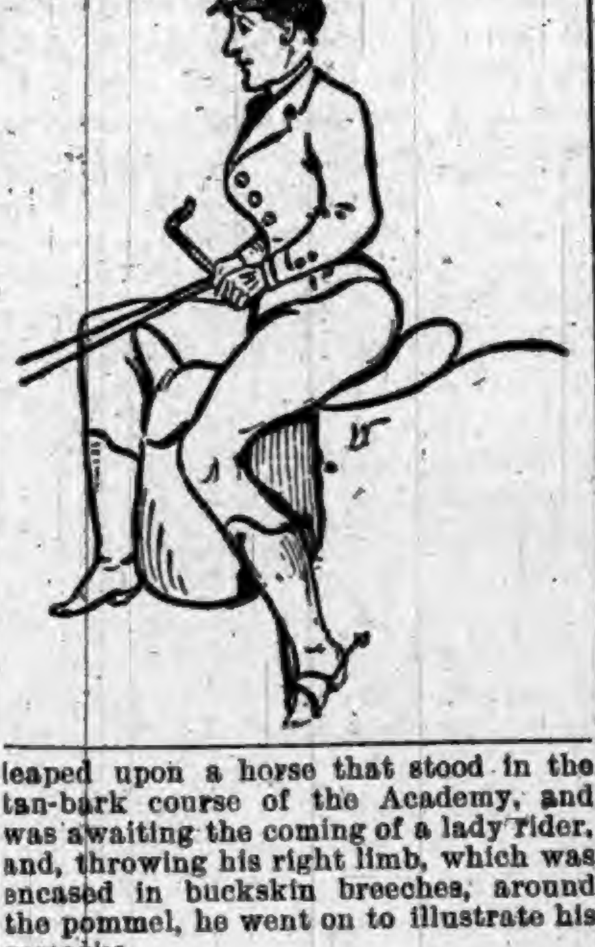
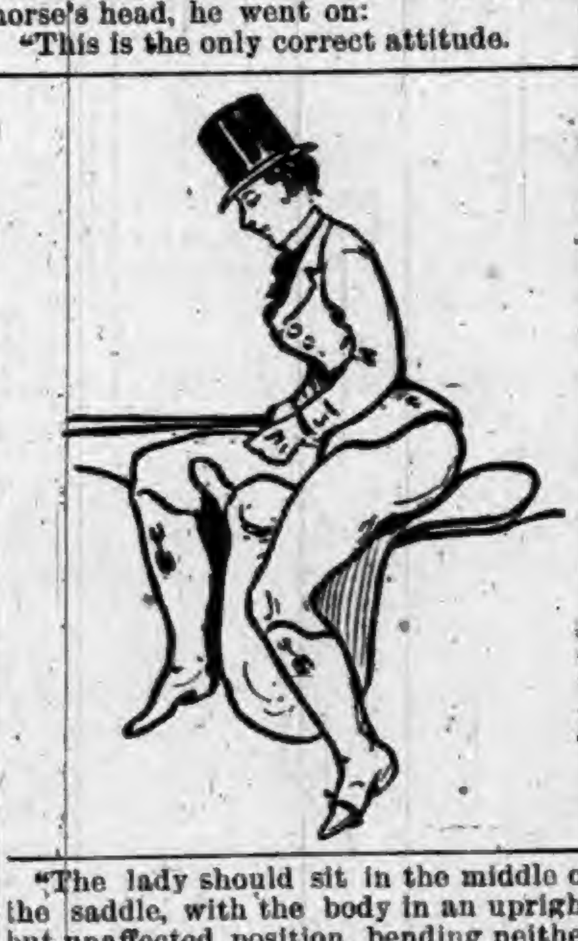
Thereupon the lively little Frenchman leaped upon a horse that stood in the tan-bark course of the Academy, and was awaiting the coming of a lady rider, and, throwing his right limb, which was encased in buckskin breeches, around the pommel, he went on to illustrate his remarks.



"This proportion is about fair, because there are always three ways of doing a thing wrong where there is one in the right direction."

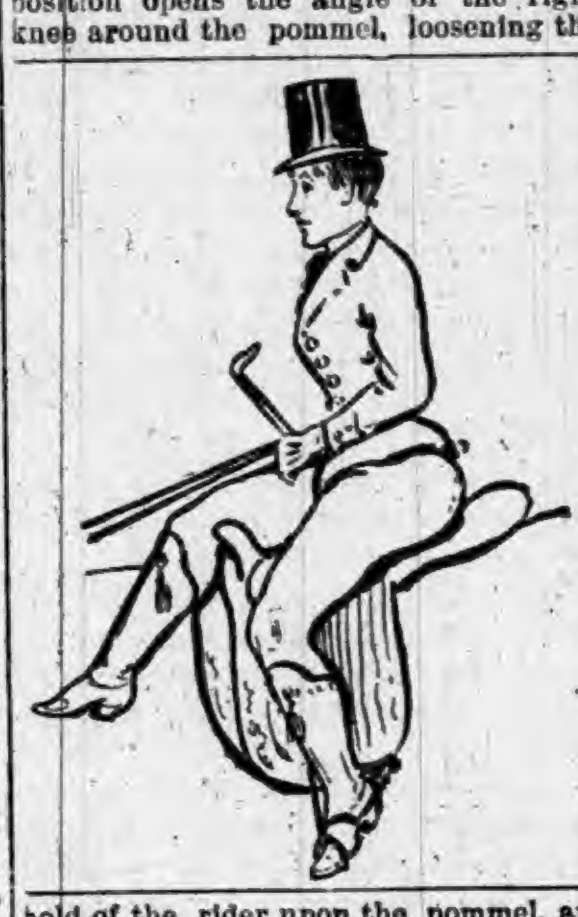
Grasping the reins and pulling up the horse's head, he went on:

"This is the only correct attitude.



"The lady should sit in the middle of the saddle, with the body in an upright but unaffected position, bending neither forward, backward, nor to either side. The right leg should pass firmly around the upper pommel, leaving the lower part of the leg to hang perfectly perpendicular.

"A common mistake of an unskilled horsewoman is to thrust the right foot forward toward the horse's neck. This position opens the angle of the right knee around the pommel, loosening the hold of the rider upon the pommel, and thus lessening her security in the saddle."



Several of the skilled riders, who owe all of their grace and ease on horseback to the nervous Parisian, applauded his graphic description. Wheeling the animal swiftly around and back again with his full side in view, he kept on:

"The left leg should be held under the lower pommel, the ball of the foot resting in the stirrup plate, but not pushed hard against it. With the left leg in this position an imaginary line from the shoulder would pass through the hip and meet the foot a little back of the heel. The practice of drawing the heels too far backward should be guarded against for two reasons. First, because it inclines to throw the body forward (as is shown in this cut), and second, because the left heel is in this way drawn back to the horse's side, striking it at every movement in a way that is certain to irritate a sensitive animal."

While the most graceful of riders, the Professor so thoroughly illustrated his utterances that half a dozen stifled "Oh-he'll-fall-offs" were heard, but a laugh from the jolly Frenchman soon relieved their fears.

A dash across the end of the large room and a quick return displayed the correctness of his remarks. "For running and leaping the seat should be short enough to press the left leg against the lower pommel. In leaping this will prevent the rider from being thrown forward," concluded he, and leaping lightly to the tan-bark he cried: "All ready, ladies." A few minutes later he was flying over it astride his favorite horse, with a class of young ladies, shouting: "Watch your horse, not me."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hints on Shovelling.

Nearly all the annoyances of winter, says the Philadelphia Call, arise from the fact that people do not know how to meet and manage them. Of these, getting the snow cleared off the pavement is the most troublesome, and causes no end of late arrivals at places of business and an untold amount of suffering from headache. All this can be avoided by attention to a few simple rules, based on scientific, mechanical, and anatomical facts:

First, borrow a shovel.

Next procure a pair of warm mittens, a neck-wrap of some kind, a bottle of arnica, and a chest protector.

Now you are ready for work.

Now, having donned overshoes, which we forgot to mention, slip out and close the door after you, being careful to fix the dead-latch so it will not lock. Take the shovel in your right hand, the thumb upward and the fingers clasped firmly but not too tightly around the handle. Many persons cramp their fingers by taking too close a grip, a practice which also tends to irritate the tender skin on the inside of the palm.

Rest the steel end of the shovel on the step and, placing one foot a little behind the other, let the handle sink of its own weight to an angle of forty-five degrees. Be careful about this angle, for up to this time the principle of a pivot is being used, and if the angle is more acute than forty-five degrees it will be a sign that you are obtuse.

Now bring forward the left hand and gently grasp the handle just two-thirds of the way from the top, raising the implement about seven and a half inches into the air for that purpose. If you take hold too low you force your right arm to do double work, as the left hand is merely a movable fulcrum. If too high the evil is increased. The shovel, if properly made, will nearly balance when the left hand is in just the right spot, and after a few experiments this point can be determined and if necessary indicated by a pencil mark.

It is well now to slowly swing the shovel back and forth in the air, with the hand in the positions indicated, until you acquire the proper motion.

Next in order, not to get out of breath, rest the shovel on the steps, straighten your back bone, throw back your shoulders, and inhale the exhilarating, antiseptic winter air.

Now look up and down the street until you see a boy.

Beckon to him.

When he comes strike a bargain with him; give him the job and go in to breakfast.

The Ruggedest Path in Life,

If it be but irradiated by good health, is shorn of half its distasteful features. Hosts of distinguished men and women have uttered regrets for a past when young, full of vigor and hope, though battling with obstacles that seemed well-nigh insurmountable, their pulses beat, their veins tingled with the glow of joyous health. Chronic invalids, would you once more feel that glow, would you—as of yore—sleep, eat, digest perfectly? Then use, with persistence, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, foremost among tonics, most reliable of vitalizing medicines. Nervousness, dyspepsia, hypochondria, a loss of appetite and sleep, this grand reparative of a debilitated physique and impaired constitutional vigor speedily prevails against. Rheumatic and neuralgic ailments, malarial disorders, kidney troubles, and the growing infirmities of age are successfully combated by this benign specific.

'Twas in a Retired Nook.

He was a stranger in Detroit, the guest of a city official who had been showing him around for two or three days. As they entered the City Hall recently they met a florid-faced gentleman of comfortable proportions whom the city official stopped to introduce to his friend.

"This," he said, "is Ald. So-and-So. Alderman, this is my friend from Ohio."

"So you're one of the aldermen, are you?" queried the Ohioan. "Guess we haven't found your saloon yet."

There was nothing in his countenance to indicate whether he spoke facetiously or in the honest belief that all Detroit aldermen own saloons.—Free Press.

LISTEN TO MOTHER.

BY LEWIS B. FRETZ.

How many, oh, how many, loving and tender-hearted mothers are compelled to view with a terrible and unalterable helplessness, the idolized son of her bosom going the deplorable rounds of dissipation, sinking deeper and deeper each day into the awful depths of sin and destruction. She remembers with sorrow, the days when the wreck of noble manhood before her, was a rosy cheeked, happy, careless boy, on whom she doted as only a mother can dote on a child. She loved him with all the power of a woman's heart, mingling her affections with bright anticipations for the future, when her child would arrive at his majority, a grand and noble man standing as an evidence of honor to his ancestral race. But alas! Her fondest hopes were dashed to pieces mid the lashing sea of sin. The darling boy soon began to imagine in his own narrow-minded way, that simple, trusting mother was an incumbrance, and he meant to do as he pleased, and have a good time while he could. He forgot her pleadings and plunged into sin with a recklessness that ere long ruined all self-control, precipitating him over the precipice of lost manhood. Saloons and gambling dens were the common places where he spent his money and his time. All respect of self, friends, home and parents were alike forgotten in his wild rush for pleasure, till at last sorrow and remorse drove him to that rejected mother in all his wretchedness. Her broken heart bleeds for him and with the love known only to mothers, he is again welcomed to her forgiveness. The number of young men, who can look back over the years of their existence, only to find it a counterpart of the picture above described, is astonishing. It is a fact beyond question, that the majority of men go down by their own hands. It is common for boys to think their parents are ignorant and are trying to enforce a rigid discipline, by having an obedience to their commands as parents. As soon as a boy begins to cramp his brain with the idea that he knows more than those who cared for him in infancy, just that soon he will cease to walk the path of rectitude. Vulgarity, sin and intemperance, rapidly take the place of virtue. Of all the agonies a tender-hearted mother is called upon to endure, the thought of an ungrateful, careless and disobedient child, is the most crushing. She can cheerfully suffer pain, hunger and privations, that her children may be comfortable, but her heart breaks, when a dearly loved son refuses to take instruction from the mother who gave him birth. Of all the hands that shall wreathe rich garlands of choice flowers in the land of Paradise, none will be more welcome than the faithful, broken-hearted, neglected and cast down mother. Her purity, patience and love, will shine resplendent in the beauties of a bright and happy beyond. Young man, is that dear, old mother of yours grieving her heart out, because you are too stubborn and too smart to follow her teachings? Is she pleading with you day by day, asking you to leave off the evil habits that are swiftly and surely dragging you down to the level of a brute? Have you permitted the spirit of imaginary superiority to push aside a venerable father, a fond mother, a pure sister and loving friends, only to clasp the demon—the fiery fiend to your heart, whose influence would drag you down to the misery of the hell that burns within his own bosom? Stop and reflect a moment on what it cost those aged parents to bring you from the depths of infant helplessness and place you on the foundation of your own responsibility. See to it, that they have the regard you so justly and properly owe them. Give heed to mother's advice, and you will find yourself in the pursuit of virtue that leads to eternal happiness. Love mother as she loves you—take a broader and better view of your existence, learn to consider christianity the true element of success, and once more try to imprint a kiss on her brow as spotless and pure as the last one imprinted there in childish innocence. The power of mother's influence is fully illustrated in the following incident, which occurred a few years ago, in this city: Two young men, whose ages were about seventeen and twenty, respectively, were very warm friends and their associations were close and continuous. The older seemed to have a strong addiction to card playing. Being constant companions, it was but natural that cards should serve as a pastime. The opinions of the mothers of these young men differed somewhat in regard to card playing. The mother of the older one, seemed to think that as long as the boys played for fun and did not gamble, there could no harm result from it. The other's opinion was decidedly the opposite. She considered it a crime to handle cards in any way whatever, and would not tolerate the presence of a pack in the house. Things went on in this way for some time, when one Sunday afternoon these two friends were enjoying a highly interesting game of "Seven up," they were suddenly interrupted by the appearance of the younger's mother, who said: "Anyone who will play cards, will lie, and anyone that will lie, will steal." After speaking thus, she returned to the house, leaving the young fellows in full possession of their own reflections, which to say the least, were in no wise pleasant. Their interest in the game suddenly ceased; the cards were thrown away, and to this time, a game has not been proposed by either. They have drifted far apart, but each one learned that the calm tones of a virtuous woman wielded a greater influence over them, than the palatial splendor of gilded palaces, or the gaudy sublimity of marbled halls. As a closing paragraph, it will pay any young man to listen to the teaching of his mother.

It is manufactured as a powder, which can be given in a glass of beer, a cup of coffee or tea, or in food, without the knowledge of the patient. It is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. It has been given in thousands of cases, and in every instance a perfect cure has followed. It never fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific it becomes an utter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. Cures guaranteed. 48 page book of particulars free. Mrs. Dell Locke and son, have gone to St. Joseph, Mich., to visit friends.

Rev. Mr. Londy will go to Rome City, August 1st, to attend the Assembly a few days.

Small fruits have been abundant this year, and the market supplied at reasonable prices.

Mrs. I. Davidson and Miss May, her daughter, went to Green Springs, Ohio, to visit relatives, Thursday.

Miss Nettie Beidler will not return to Elkhart, until fall. Until then, she will remain with her grandparents.

Judge R. Wes. McBride lectured on the theosophical movement, at the Morton Club Hall, Ft. Wayne, July 23.

Rev. Mr. Mygrantz, of Hicksville, was in town last week. He and his family are well, and pleased with their present location.

Flora Speer is helping her father in the store, during the absence of Mr. Dye, who is attending his sick wife at their home here.

Rev. J. M. DeWeese and family went to Rome City, the first of the week to attend the Assembly meetings. He owns a cottage on the island.

Mrs. A. J. Sinclair is very low. Mrs. Murray, with her children, came last Wednesday, and a sister to Mrs. S., came Friday. A brother, who is a physician, has been here and gone.

C. S. Harper will travel with the Hoosier Quartet, of Auburn, during the month of August. His position in the broom factory will be filled by some one else, during his absence.

Mrs. Dye, of this place, was taken suddenly ill Sunday morning, the trouble resulting in a partial stroke of paralysis, one side being paralyzed. It is hoped the attack may be only temporary.

We copy from "Notes," about the Encampment at Ft. Wayne, in the Gazette: "Adjutant Locke, of Waterloo, the Colonel (Haste) says, is the best one in camp, and was seconded by Major Griffin. The adjutant is a graduate of DePauw University, and was a member of the military department there, ranking as battalion major.

The W. C. T. U. met Saturday evening, at the home of Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson. A lady from Angola, was present, Mrs. Gleason, in the interests of an association to inculcate temperance principles in minds and hearts of the youth of this land. In defining the position and belief of the society represented, she said in substance: "It is useless, almost to labor with and for grown men or women, in the cause of temperance. But influence the children aright. Teach them to be temperate and to help others to be so—therein lies our hope for the future, that we as a nation may be temperate." A society was organized that evening, with Mrs. Benage Long as superintendent.

BUTLER.

The normal is being well attended. A large number of foreign students are in attendance.

R. C. Campbell is about to go to the Michigan fruit belt, to work during the peach season.

Peter Helwig and wife were in Fairfield, over Sunday. Mr. H., has greatly improved of late.

The dangerous trap at the Lake Shore crossing has been replaced by a 30 inch tile, which makes it safe.

Workmen are enlarging the railroad ditch, which, when completed, will drain a large portion of the town.

Quite a number of our people contemplate a trip to Detroit, during the encampment there, next week.

J. A. Campbell, wife and daughter, Florence, took a drive across the country to Van Wert, Ohio, the latter part of last week.

The water works talk continues and the chances are that an expression of the real estate owners will be called in the near future.

James Revett's oldest daughter, Mrs. James Leonard, from Michigan, is caring for her aged parents. Mr. R., is as well as he has been for some time, and Mrs. R., is up again after an illness of nearly six months.

A recent letter from a former resident of this place, now residing in southern Kansas, reports the peach crop as enormous. It seems that the crop is so large as to be valueless, as they are being fed to the hogs in large quantities. A few bushels brought here would find many watery mouths.

(From another Correspondent.)

Butler is on the boom.

Mrs. John Wycoff is slowly improving after her severe illness.

A. Plum, wife and son, Fred, visited the former's mother, Sunday.

Mrs. William Wilsey, of Edgerton, O., made Mrs. Plum a short visit, Tuesday.

Mr. Haskins has his new building nearly completed. Rumor says it will be utilized as a hotel.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Ann Chilcote and daughter, made a short call here, while on their way to Waterloo, Wednesday, of last week.

Oliver Grambling, who has been in Goshen Ridge, Virginia, since early in the spring, returned home Saturday. He thinks of going back again soon.

Wm. Betts and family, visited his sister, Mrs. Musser, Saturday and Sunday. William says he has the prettiest baby on this street. We think it is nice, but it don't resemble its papa very much.

Saturday evening, about thirty friends and neighbors gathered in at the residence of Thomas Hamman, it being the occasion of his 25th anniversary. To say he was surprised does not express the peculiar position he occupied as the central figure of attraction. His father-in-law, Edward Erwin, induced him to go to Waterloo, where he managed to keep him until the people had time to assemble. Mr. H., had previously remarked to his wife that he was not easily headed off, but we are inclined to think he has acknowledged his inability to say as much on this occasion. All seemed to enjoy themselves until a reasonable hour, when ice cream and cake were served. A number of useful presents were left as mementoes of the esteem in which Mr. Hammon is held.

The Demorest Medal Contest.

As announced, this meeting took place at the M. E. church last Friday evening. There was a fair attendance and everything passed off well. Mrs. Ehlers presided and after prayer by Mr. Healey the speakers were called on, each responding promptly. They were Sadie Shearer, Metta Prosser, Rolla Moffit, Alice Shull, Nellie Buckley, H. G. Provines, Helen Ralston and May Rose. The selections are furnished for the speakers, and all have more or less in view the advancement of the cause of temperance and prohibition. The young speakers all did themselves credit, and it was no small task to decide which should have the prize. The judges were Prof. Keep and J. M. Waterman of Waterloo, and Mrs. J. D. Leighty of St. Joe. They carefully noted all the points of excellence, and after some discussion awarded the prize to No. 8, which was May Rose's number. Dr. Lida Leasure then presented her the medal in a thoughtful and well delivered address, and the meeting was dismissed with the benediction by Mr. Wooton. The singing by the Hoosier Quartet was excellent. The same should be said of the solo by Mrs. Cuppy and the violin solo by Mr. Gaylor.

So-called "courageous leaders" are by no means always safe leaders.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

How much ahead was the farmer, counting cost of production, threshing and marketing, when he had returned home with a portion of the $18, questionably good money received for his load of forty bushels?

No wonder the lands advertised for delinquent taxes comprised hundreds of partly cleared farms, and great wonder they finally redeemed their hard-won property from the speculator in the necessities of the agriculturist.

Meanwhile, events at the county seat repeated themselves with monotonous uniformity. There were few meetings of the town board, and only occasionally a quorum was present.

Dr. Dancer was continued town assessor, and the trustees were empowered to expend money or labor, whether it was tax or gratuity, to cut any ditch or drain and to make any needed excavation for the improvement of their respective wards, in streets or sidewalks.

The sum of $25 was ordered appropriated towards making a ditch on the west side of town, and S. W. Sprott was appointed to solicit donations and to direct the execution of the work. This was the first allowance made by town authorities for public benefit, and a greater ditch, at a corresponding greater cost, has now forty years later, been supervised by S. W. Sprott's son.

A special meeting was called in May, 1851, at which Mr. Dickinson resigned the office of clerk, he having been as stated, appointed deputy in the county offices of auditor and treasurer. S. W. Dickinson was on the same day sworn in as his successor.

At the general election, held May 5th, a full vote was polled; the list of persons voting was increased to 63, and the old board was re-elected by majorities of 21 to 20. This result at once emphasized their popularity and endorsed their official service.

It was right that those who had been intrusted with the work of organization should be given time to complete their important duty.

Fifteen years since DeKalb county was organized, and of the great stream of settlers sweeping over the valley of the Mississippi, 8,000 had found homes within its boundaries.

Looking away from Auburn, we turn our attention to other parts of the county and find the struggling town has as yet no rivals to fear. Other counties had begun to build plank roads, which have long since been superseded by splendid graded highways, but DeKalb county never had a plank road, much less a graded one, and save the sensible work done by some supervisors with the road scrapers, the roads have improved only as drainage has made the road bed firmer, and cuts and fills have reduced sudden grades and covered deep the corduroy.

Spencerville and Newville were small, thriving villages, but of the towns now so fast grown and growing, there was scarce a beginning. As early as 1844, the people in the vicinity of what is now Butler, had a postoffice known as Oak Hill, situated two miles south of the present town of Butler, and kept by Thomas Fosdick.

The first house built in the village was a log school house erected about 1841, in which L. Harding was teacher. The first dwelling had been put up by a Mr. Brainard and was long occupied by Mr. Otis, and in 1851, a small trading point was established on the southwest corner of land owned by Charles Morris. Here, in a little log hut, on a site where later stood the store of Stiefel & Strauss, Ladd Thomas and Osburn Coburn began business. Later a village sprang up and Norristown was a name familiar to the settlers of Wilmington and the adjacent neighborhood. The outlook was favorable but withal, Auburn seemed almost stationary and records and recollections bear witness that despite the improvements made and contemplated, a period of depression existed which doubtless had origin in the poverty of settlers and stagnation of trade.

In September, 1851, the wife of Rev. J. T. Bliss died and she was buried in the old cemetery. There are those living, but not many, who attended and remember the details of that funeral.

The slow journey south of town through the woods, the simple rites of sepulture, the peaceful solitude when the last loiterer had departed, the simple and sweet requiem sung by the wild wood-birds, and the softly dropping rain were memorials of that time and place as loving nature began her subtle process of dissolution and resurrection in forgetable forms.

There be many each Sabbath, who find melancholy pleasure in visiting the well-kept grounds of Evergreen Cemetery, but few there are who care to traverse the winding paths which lead among the pitfalls of the recumbent granite stones and the brambles which cover the site of the old grave yard.

These two burial places, a highway only between them, vividly contrast the new with the old. The one beautiful in its environing iron fence, its costly monuments and abounding evidences of tender regard for dear ones, the other given over to rank decay, with broken, defaced and fallen marble slabs, sunken earth and manifest neglect presaging a speedy oblivion of name as well as resting place of Auburn's pioneer dead.

Here and the among these tombs of the early day, stand some of recent date, well cared for and attesting rememberance, but in general, the two places of burial solemnly as silently typefy the inevitable tendencies of modern times.

The ancients built cities of granite stone, stately mausoleums and great pyramids, and from beneath the rubbish of centuries, the antiquary exhumes the ornate sculpture of courts and temples, and the marvelous skill of the embalmer of old Egypt's dead, has preseved the forms of king and prince to be recognized as their mummified remains a score of centuries down the course of time, but our modern civilization all is transient and superfiicial. Forgetful as we are, the time approaches when even the graves of the last of Auburn's early settlers will become obliterated and perhaps a chance-preserved copy of the AUBURN COURIER, of 1891, penned in curiosity may remain the only link to connect the then present with the olden time.

Shaken Up.

There was a lively runaway on Seventh street Monday night about 11:30. John Thomas and Charles Martin had been to Rome City and were coming into town from the west, and as they crossed the small bridge just west of the Jackson railroad on Seventh the team shied at a big hole in the bridge and ran the buggy off on the north side, throwing the men out with the buggy partly on them. Thomas is a fat man, but fortunately fell in such a way as not to be seriously hurt. The other man, however, was badly bruised and had a very narrow escape from serious injury. The team ran on, striking the buggy pole against the railroad track and that stopped the buggy, which was considerably damaged. The team ran on up town, slipped and one fell over the lime barrels in front of the Leasure building, ran into the public square and were caught. They belonged to Geo. Baltz.

New Idea in Well Pumps.

J. D. McAnnally of Waterloo never tires the matter of originating new ideas and inventions. Lately he had a talk with Ex-Commissioner Cyrus Bowman, of Smithfield. Bowman had heard of a patent pumping arrangement for wells, that would take the place of a windmill. The plan is to have the gearing run by a weight that is to be wound up each day. Mr. McAnnally took the matter to study over and has invented an improvement on the original patent, which he believes will be a success. The chief point he makes is to so gear the apparatus that there will be a double stroke of the pump at each revolution of the crank—in other words it will be a double acting crank, by which twice as many strokes will be secured in the same time, as by the usual method. Mr. McAnnally feels sure the plan will work, as he has already made the experiment and knows what it will do. If successful, the plan will lessen the expense of machinery, and give an unfailing power, one that will not depend on the wind, or any other uncertain element. He feels confident he can make his invention a success.

Chiquanga—A Queer African Dish.

Saleh, Stanley's attendant, said it was curious to watch Stanley's white officers when introduced to chiquanga, a kind of pudding made of boiled manioc root. Neither the taste nor the odor of this food is at all inviting at first; but necessity brings all whites as well as blacks to regard it as the bread of life before many months of residence in Central Africa.

Sometimes when deprived of it for many days I have often hailed a piece of toasted chiquanga as a real luxury, and I have been rather disgusted with newly arrived whites whose upturned noses condemned my barbaric taste.

When Stanley's white officers had finished their small stock of tinned provisions and rice, they were absolutely compelled to fall back on the manioc dishes; but the sourness of taste of this African pudding is a serious barrier to the enjoyment of it, and some stubborn persistence is required before the white man hails chiquanga as a delicacy; but like other white travelers, these officers began to like it, and when they passed beyond the districts where it grew, and were forced to adhere to a roast plantain diet, they regretted bitterly that they had no manioc.

The New Bakery.

Thomas Brothers have only been waiting till the plate glass for the big windows should arrive, when they will start up business at the old stand, in the new building. They, themselves are ready any day. Saturday they went to Fort Wayne, to lay in a stock of goods, get their show cases, etc., and they will all be in place at once. They have the finest cases ever brought to Auburn and all their outfit will be new, fresh and of the best. They will have canned goods in addition to the bakery business, and they have made a point to get the choicest, including a good stock of California canned fruit, etc. They will keep the choicest of fresh bread, pies, cakes, etc., and hope to see many of their old customers back with them, together with any number of new ones. All who have tickets bought of them before the fire, are requested to bring them in as soon as the bakery is started, and they will redeem them just as if there had been no fire. They will also to a certain extent be able to furnish lunch, especially to the farmers, who can be accommodated to a good substantial lunch when they are in town. If the glass comes, they will be in running order the last of this week.

THE NEWS GATHERED IN.

THE GREAT PARADE OF VETERANS AT DETROIT.

Fully Forty Thousand in Line—A Brutal Affair in Peru—Fooled With Dynamite—Wheat Struck by Lightning.

WITH STATELY TREAD.

Forty Thousand Veterans March Through the Streets of the City of Detroit.

A special from Detroit, dated the 5th inst., says: This has been a proud day in the history of the Grand Army of the Republic. It has witnessed the grandest parade in the history of the organization. For six hours to-day under a bright sun, 40,000 veterans tramped the five miles' march. The firing of a salute from the United States steamship Michigan in the harbor announced to the waiting veterans at 10:30 that the command to move had been given by the Commander-in-chief. Besides the staff of Commander-in-chief, there were on the reviewing stand, Secretary of War Proctor, Secretary of Navy Tracy, Gen. Miles, Assistant Secretary of Interior Bussey, two or three governors and half dozen past commanders-in-chief.

Promptly at the hour indicated, and with a military precision which showed the volunteer soliers had forgotten none of their early training, the posts assembled on the line of march. Slowly and majestically, in measured tread to music, the procession started from Woodward and Adams avenues with Commander-in-chief Veazey and his staff in the lead until the reviewing stand was reached.

Prior to the parade there was an interesting scene at the National department headquarters, where ex-President Hayes, in behalf of a committee of the order, in a graceful and eulogistic speech, presented the retiring Commander-in-chief with a diamond studded Grand Army badge, upon which a round thousand dollars had been expended. Col. Veazey made a brief reply. To-night the comrades flocked out to the rink to participate in a reception to Veazey. Ex-Governor Alger was master of ceremonies. Mayor Pingree, in a well chosen address, welcomed the veterans to the Metropolis of the Wolverine State, and the Commander-in-chief made a brief response. Brief addresses breathing a spirit of good will to the veterans were made by ex-President Hayes, Secretary Proctor, Govs. Hovey and Page, Gen. Butterfield and Gen. Fairchild. Meanwhile another great crowd had gathered at Camp Sherman in the exposition building and thither the same speakers were hurried and the program was repeated.

At midnight to-night the streets are just as crowded as they were at midday, but the sleeping accommodations are ample, and nobody will be compelled to seek a lodgment in the open air.

Chinamen in Trouble.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: Sam Lee and Chong Sam, two celestials doing business at Chatham, recently crossed to the United States to visit friends. They were arrested and held up there by the American authorities for deportation despite their explanation that they were British subjects. A. M. Lafferty, barrister of Chatham, has recently sought the intervention of the Dominion Government. As a result, the British Minister at Washington has secured a stay in the proceedings against Chong Sam and the other Chinaman has been released.

Gambled, Lost, Forged, Jailed.

A young man whose name is C. M. Leake and whose home is Franklin Ky., was arrested at Terre Haute, Ind., for passing a forged check. He went under the name of R. M. Clark, and the checks were supposed to have been drawn by his father on a bank at Vincennes. He confessed, and says he passed a forged check at Evansville. He says his father owns a flouring mill at Franklin, and had given him $2,000 to start in the grocery business, but that he lost the money gambling.

A Brutal Affair.

Advices from Lima, Peru, says: Intense excitement has been created in diplomatic circles here by a fierce personal encounter between the representative of the Chilian revolutionary party and a military attache of the Chilian Government legation. From all accounts the attacking party was the attache of the Government and the assault is said to have been of a most brutal character. The insurgent representative is severely injured.

Fooled With Dynamite.

Two boys, David Gresham and Johnny Ping, got on an engine in the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis yards at Columbus, Ind., in the absence of the watchman, and got hold of one or two dynamite torpedoes. With a hammer one of them was exploded, but while there was not a funeral, both David and Johnny are laid up for repairs in the shape of bad burns and cuts.

Fell from a High Cliff.

Mathias Wolfe fell from the high cliff at Eagle Point, Iowa, a distance of sixty feet, alighting on his head. He was literally smashed in pieces. The remains were terribly broken and mangled.

Bank Cashier Killed by a Train.

W. L. Buck, cashier of the First National Bank of Derby, Delaware County, Pa., was struck by a train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Collingdale and instantly killed.

Killed by Muskrats.

James Loftus, a farmer of Lawrenceburg, Ind., while fishing was attacked by muskrats and so terribly bitten that he died from blood poisoning.

Indians Holding a War Dance.

A large number of Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians have refused to take Government pay for their lands. They are gathered near Darlington, I. T., and holding a war dance. Trouble is expected.

Wheat Struck by Lightning.

Lightning struck wheat ricks belonging to Frank Kramer, a farmer living five miles south of Vincennes, Ind. Seven ricks, containing about fifteen hundred bushels of wheat, were consumed.

Bayless Hanna Dead.

Hon. Bayless Hanna died suddenly of heart failure at his home in Crawfordsville, Ind. The family had gone driving, leaving him alone bolstered up in a chair, and upon their return, found him dead. For many years Bayless W. Hanna has been one of the most prominent and leading Democrats in Indiana. He was the intimate associate of Thomas A. Hendricks, and was frequently called into his counsel. Mr. Hanna was twice defeated for Congress in the Eighth Congressional District, but always ran ahead of his ticket. When Grover Cleveland was elected President he appointed Mr. Hanna envoy extraordinary plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic. Mr. Hanna held this position during Cleveland's administration, but resigned shortly before Harrison's inauguration, because of ill health.

WIPED OUT.

Wayne County, W. Va., was the scene of one of the most horrible murders that ever blackened the criminal calendar of that State. A Mr. Brumfield, his wife and five children were murdered in the most horrible manner imaginable and their bodies consumed by flames. The only theory advanced for the crime, as told by a Mr. Payne, just from the scene of the murder, is revenge and the love of gold. About midnight a party of fifty Italians, employed as laborers on the Norfolk and Western Railroad, became drunk and started upon a tour of devastation. The Brumfield family resided some distance from the railroad camp, and were thought to have a considerable amount of cash in their possession. After raising a big noise, the Italians, in a body, made their way to Brumfield's residence. After arriving at the residence admittance was demanded, but refused by the inmates. Rails and clubs were secured by the drunken dagoes and the doors and windows forced. Mr. Brumfield and two half-grown sons made a brave fight in defense of their home and life. The defenders fought with desperation, using every available article as weapons, but without avail, as their number was fifteen to one. After the brave defenders were brought to the floor with repeated blows they were murdered in a most cruel and cold-blooded manner. Their throats were cut from ear to ear, and their bodies repeatedly stabbed with knives carried by the Italians. After disposing of the men folks, the now infuriated dagoes turned toward the helpless women and children. Whether the women suffered outrage is not stated by my informant, but it is supposed they did. Mrs. Brumfield and her three little children were the next victims of the drunken devils. After completing their hellish work the dagoes searched the house for valuables and then completed their work by setting fire to the house, consuming the bodies.

OUTRAGEOUS

The Cruelties Practiced Upon the Jews by the People of Russia.

The Russian Jews who arrived at Boston on the steamer Norsemann recently, and are detained at the emigrant commission, have pitiful stories to relate of the cruelties perpetrated upon them by the Russians. One lad, who refused to give his name for fear of being apprehended and returned, said he came from Slabolky. The Jews of his town, he says, were ordered to vacate their houses and betake themselves away, no matter where, inside of three days. The much surprised and madened Jews set fire to all their property and burned it, rather than have it fall into the hands of their enemies. The Russians, enraged at this, set upon the refugees and maltreated them by every means in their power. One man was suspended by his wrists from a telegraph post, where he hung for two hours. All the families who had burned their houses were arrested and convicted and sentenced to Siberia. The young man and his father and brother were among the victims, but as they were being marched through the streets the narrator managed to slip his hands through the handcuffs and escape. He succeeded in reaching a friend in another province who gave him money to come to America.

Others told harrowing stories of the general atrocities practiced upon that race by Russian soldiers and of extremely unjust laws in force against the Jews. Any Russian Christian, it is stated, who wishes to possess himself of the property of a Jewish neighbor, can obtain it by paying one-tenth of its value to the Mayor or government representative, who will thereupon give him authority to expel the Jewish owner and install himself as proprietor. It is quite an ordinary thing for a Jew's house to be burned over his head or a Jew to be stoned on the streets, and it has become a common saying in parts of Russia, "Kill a Jew and pay twenty roubles" (ten dollars). No other punishment is ever inflicted for the murder of a Jew, and even this fine is seldom imposed.

LAST OF ITS KIND.

Kentucky Adopts a New Constitution.

This year's was the last election by viva voce that will be held in Kentucky. The new constitution, despite the powerful opposition of railroads, banks and corporations generally, has carried by an overwhelming majority, and the last State Constitution that still recognizes slavery is a thing of the past. The new constitution will tax railways, banks and stock companies, abolish the office of public printer, provide for a secret ballot system and municipal government reforms, and carries an anti-lottery clause which will wipe out the half dozen lottery charters now being operated with the semi-daily drawings at Covington and Louisville in the interest of "policy" games throughout the United States generally. Reports from the cities and towns throughout the State indicate that the Democratic ticket has about the usual majority—probably 20,000. Indications are that the Alliance or People's party vote is very small, despite the fact that every effort was made for two months preceding the election to organize the Alliance men in the State, all the leaders of that movement of national reputation, including Senator Pfeifer and Jerry Simpson, of Kansas, Taubeneck, of Illinois, and Davis, of Texas, having stumped the State thoroughly. The greater part of the Alliance vote seems to have been drawn from the Republican party. The vote for and against the new constitution was without partisan significance. Later returns indicate that the vote for the new constitution is fully five times as great as that against it.

Destructive Fire at Chicago.

The Siegel, Cooper & Co.'s mammoth dry goods and notions establishment at State and Adams street, Chicago, was totally destroyed by fire. Half a million dollars' worth of assorted stock was entirely consumed and nothing but bare walls are left where a magnificent trade palace stood. Unfortunately the fire could not be prevented from spreading, and a number of other firms suffered much damage. "The Leader" dry goods store on the opposite corner caught fire several times on the roof. Mr. Pincus, the manager, thought that the damage by fire, smoke, and water would reach from $100,000 to $150,000. Next door north of Siegel, Cooper & Co.'s is J. W. Berry's large confectionery house. The total loss is about $1,000,000. Eight hundred employes are thrown out of work. Siegel, Cooper & Co. will at once rebuild. No lives were lost in the fire.

Soon after the fire started large crowds had collected and the seventy-five officers under the command Lieut. Backus had hard work to keep the people out of danger.

England Insulted.

A dispatch from Conquimbo, Chili, says that the government forces stationed there have been increased by the recent arrival of a reinforcement of 2,000 men from Valparaiso. The insurgents will have to fight hard to take the town. The Esmeralda and Aconagua of the insurgent fleet have brought their party into serious complications by detaining on the high sea the British bark Pedro Peral. The Peral was bound for Couquimbo with a cargo of flour, when the two insurgent war ships came up with and boarded her. They towed her for some distance north when they released her. In the meantime news of the action of the insurgent's vessel reached Couquimbo. The British gun boat, Garnet, was sent in pursuit. The Peral, however, arrived before the Garnet had a chance to come up with the insurgent vessels. The German squadron, which has been in Couquimbo for a few days past, has gone to Iquique. The junta's outpost is now at Vallenero. The British war ship Metholme has left Valparaiso for Couquimbo. The Dapne is still at Valparaiso.

A Sleeper Invaded by an Assassin.

Charlottesville (Va.) special: A most dastardly attempt was made to murder D. F. Connell, of Portsmouth, Ohio, by some unknown person, on the Pullman sleeper attached to train No. 2 from the West, on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, at some point between Waynesboro and Basic City. From the best information obtainable it is learned that the person who did the shooting was a very young white man, a passenger on the train, who wore a black slouch hat.

It is said that he first went to a berth in which there was a young lady, who of course became badly frightened upon being disturbed and screamed to her mother, who occupied another berth near by. The would-be murderer politely asked to be excused and then went to the berth of Mr. Connell, who resented the intrusion upon his privacy by a vigorous kick at the intruder. The assassin then drew his revolver and fired, the ball taking effect in Mr. Connell's abdomen, passing nearly through his body and lodging in his back, very near the surface of the skin. Robbery was the assassin's motive for entering the car.

A Bad Wreck.

An accident occurred on the Bellaire, Zanesville and Cincinnati Railway, just south of Bellaire, Ohio, in which one man was fatally injured and several persons were badly crippled. A passenger train loaded with people jumped the track, the baggage and one coach falling down an embankment. Joseph Morris, baggage master, was thrown out of the door and the car turned over on him. He is now in a dangerous condition. Following is a list of the injured: John Irwin, leg broken and side mashed; Samuel and Willie McElroy, arms broken; George Wilcox, bad cut on head; Henry Miller, broken wrist and dislocated shoulder; George W. Day, hip crushed and back badly sprained.

Avenged Herself.

At Selwood, Fla., Miss Myra Fancher, a beautiful girl 16 years of age, shot and instantly killed A. C. Jones, connected with the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad. She lay in wait for him at a street corner and when he appeared, blew out his brains with a revolver. For nearly a year past Jones has been paying devoted attentions to Miss Fancher. About two months ago, however, Jones discarded her and married another girl. Since the shooting the girl says that Jones became criminally intimate with her under promise of marriage, and she could stand her disgrace no longer. She was immediately arrested. Public sympathy is entirely on her side.

Schooner Marvin Seized.

The Navy Department is in receipt of a telegram from Commander Colton, of the United States steamer Thetis, forwarded from San Francisco but dated Ounalaska, which verifies the press accounts of the seizure of the schooner Marvin in the Behring Sea. Capt. Colton reported a scheme of movements on the part of the fleet lying in Behring Sea that indicate that the campaign against the illegal sealers will be vigorously pushed both by American and English cruisers.

Cooked Alive.

While John Wagner, an emoloye of the Ceraline mills at Columbus, Ind., was inside one of the boilers cleaning it, another employe, not knowing that Wagner was there, turned a stream of hot water in on him, almost cooking him alive.

Murder on a Train.

On an excursion train near Elizabethtown, Ky., John Larue, of Elizabethtown, shot and killed John Richardson, of Louisville. They appeared to be intimate friends and the shooting was the result of a sudden quarrel. Larue is in jail.

Her Skeleton Found.

The skeleton of little Annie Fredericks, who disappeared a month ago from her home in Laurel Run, Pa., was found in the woods on Wilkesbarre mountain. The child was either killed by bears or died of starvation.

Fair Commissioners Abroad.

Berlin special: The Chicago Fair Commissioners have been made certain of a cordial reception by the German officials here, Emperor William having wired special instructions to have every attention shown them.

Blaine Improving.

Secretary Blaine is showing much improvement in health. He takes long walks and drives and is steadily gaining strength.

Life Crushed Out.

Louis Maple, of Fort Wayne, was crushed to death in a freight wreck on the Nickel Plate Railroad, at Green Springs, Ohio.

PEACE NOW RESTORED.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF THE MINING TROUBLES.

Successful Adjustment of What Might Have Been a Serious Matter—Militia Sent Home—Resolutions—Origin of the Trouble.

Peace has been restored in the Tennessee mining regions, and the trouble, which seemed about to necessitate shooting down probably scores of miners to uphold the law, has been adjusted.

COL. SEVIER, OF MILITIA.

A Knoxville special says: When the situation looked to those on the inside more dangerous than at any time since the beginning of the Briceville agitation, the miners' committee met in a room at the Lamar House, and in half an hour the trouble was ended.

The Hon. Dennis Leahy, at the beginning of the session, presented the draft of a series of resolutions, which were unanimously received. The resolutions were presented to the Knoxville committee of citizens, and by them approved and signed. An interview was then had with Gov. Buchanan and Attorney General Pickle. To say that the opportunity to obtain peace without bloodshed was jumped at puts the thing mildly, for a "love meeting" followed in which all took part. Following are the resolutions:

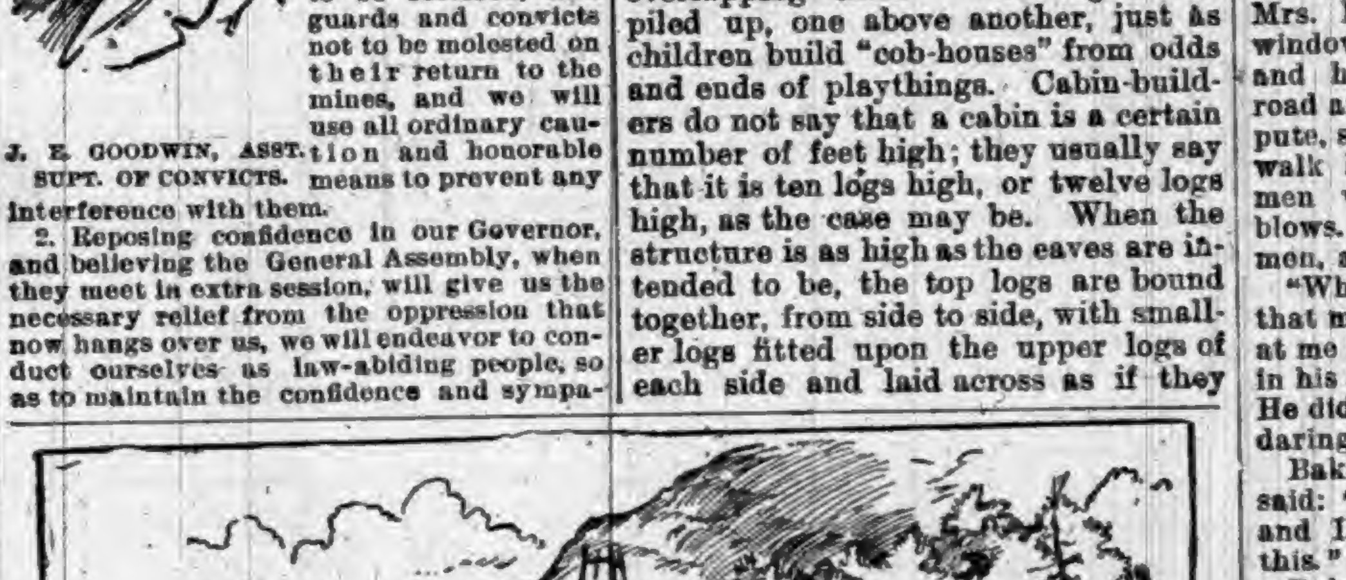
EUGENE MERRILL, THE MINERS' LEADER.

We, the undersigned, committee on behalf of the miners and their friends of Briceville and Coal Creek, and in the interest of harmony, do submit the following, trusting that it will meet with your favorable consideration:

1. The status quo to be restored, and guards and convicts not to be molested on their return to the mines, and we will use all ordinary caution and honorable means to prevent any interference with them.

J. E. GOODWIN, ASST. SUPT. OF CONVICTS.

2. Reposing confidence in our Governor, and believing the General Assembly, when they meet in extra session, will give us the necessary relief from the oppression that now hangs over us, we will endeavor to conduct ourselves as law-abiding people, so as to maintain the confidence and sympathy of the public in the future as well as in the past.



THE BRICEVILLE MINES.

3. And we do hereby express thanks to Governor Buchanan for the kind consideration in holding the militia in this city and thereby preventing a conflict that might have resulted in bloodshed.

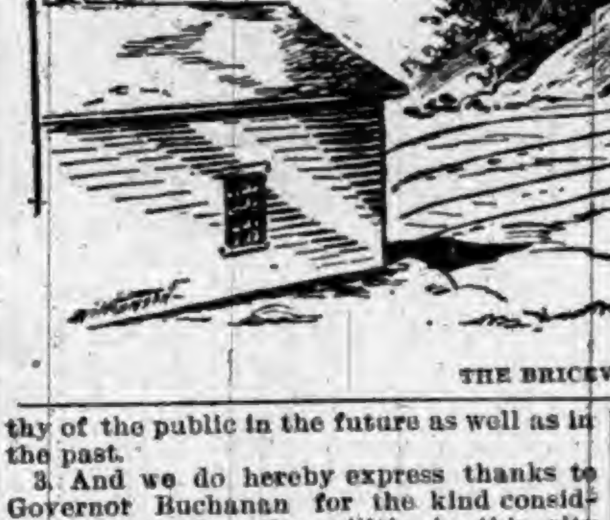
4. And to the committee of citizens we also express thanks for the interest they have shown by their counsel and advice in their efforts to adjust the existing difficulties.

JOSIAH T. THOMAS,
J. W. HARDIN,
S. R. PICKERING,
S. F. MOORE,
W. F. SMITH.

We, the citizen committee, hereby approve of the above.

DENNIS LEAHY,
WILLIAM RULE,
J. C. J. WILLIAMS,
D. A. CARPENTER.

This ends the trouble in the mining districts. The militia were drawn up at dress parade and orders read releasing them from strict discipline. The orders were received with tumultuous cheering, for the troops did not relish a week or two in the mountains. The fourteen companies left for their homes on a special train. The convicts will be removed to Briceville and Coal Creek at once. The miners' committee remained in Knoxville to accompany the guards and convicts to guarantee protection when the train arrives at Coal Creek. This action will not meet the full approval of all the miners, but the terms of the agreement will be kept.



THE COAL CREEK DEPOT.

Never in the history of labor agitation have illegal acts been committed in as orderly a fashion as were those of the Coal Creek Valley miners. They are so thoroughly disciplined and so thoroughly controlled by the miners' union that it is universally conceded that the end of the struggle has come.

ORIGIN OF THE TROUBLE.

Last week about 400 armed strikers attacked the guards who had charge of fifty felons at Briceville and liberated them. Gov. Buchanan was immediately notified and responded by ordering two companies from Chattanooga and one from Knoxville to the scene. Of the fifty convicts taken from the guards at Briceville, two escaped and the others were brought to Knoxville. When the militia arrived they took the convicts back with them and warned the mob that they would protect them at all hazards. Gov. Buchanan at once proceeded to the seat of trouble and explained his position to the rebellious miners. He told them that it was his sworn duty to uphold the law, and if the convict lease system was wrong he was not to blame, and that the only recourse of the men was through the Legislature. The miners announced that their families were starving and that they were compelled to drive out the convicts if it cost the life of every man in the valley. They made all sorts of fun of the beardless youths, but declared they would not harm the "spider-legged, cigarette-smoking dudes," as they characterized the militia, but that as soon as the militia were withdrawn they would release every convict in the region. Becoming impatient, however, at the delay in recalling the troops they decided to try to overcome the soldiers by force of numbers, and succeeded only too well.

While there have been differences existing between the mine operators using convict labor and the miners for years, never did the people of Coal Creek and vicinity feel that the State militia would be needed to settle the differences between East Tennessee miners and convict operators. But when it became evident that another mine heretofore using free labor was to be handled by the outlaws of the State there at once arose mutterings of discontent. Had the Tennessee Coal Mining Company not made an effort to put in convict labor instead of retaining the free miners, it is thought there would have been no call for troops at the company's mines. The people could have endured the convicts they had had to fight against for years, but when it became apparent that more free miners were to be displaced, and work had to be sought elsewhere, a halt was called. Indignation reached a fever heat, and but for the cool heads and good judgment of the leaders there would doubtless have been bloodshed.

EARLY DAYS.

Building a Log Cabin on the Desolate Frontier.

Log-cabin building was great fun to the boys, although they did not find it easy work. There was a certain novelty about the raising of the structure that was to be a home, and an interest in learning the use of rude tools, that lasted until the cabin was finished. The maul and the wedges, the frow and the little maul intended for it, and all the other means and appliances of the building were all new and strange to these bright lads.

First, the size of the cabin, twelve feet wide and twenty feet long, was marked out on the site on which it was to rise, and four logs were laid to define the foundation. These were the sills of the new house. At each end of every log two notches were cut, one on the under side and one on the upper, to fit into similar notches cut in the log below, and in that which was to be placed on top. So each corner was formed by these interlacing and overlapping ends. The logs were piled up, one above another, just as children build "cob-houses" from odds and ends of playthings. Cabin-builders do not say that a cabin is a certain number of feet high; they usually say that it is ten logs high, or twelve logs high, as the case may be. When the structure is as high as the eaves are intended to be, the top logs are bound together, from side to side, with smaller logs fitted upon the upper logs of each side and laid across as if they were to be the supports of a floor for another story. Then the gable-ends are built up of logs, shorter and shorter as the peak of the gable is approached, and kept in place by other smaller logs laid across, endwise of the cabin, and locked into the end of each log in the gable until all are in place. On these transverse logs, or rafters, the roof is laid. Holes are cut or sawed through the logs for the door and windows, and the house begins to look habitable.

The settlers on the Republican Fork cut the holes for doors and windows before they put on the roof, and when the layer of split shakes that made the roof was in place, and the boys bounded inside to see how things looked, they were greatly amused to notice how light it was. The space between the logs was almost wide enough to crawl through, Oscar said. But they had studied log-cabin building enough to know that these wide cracks were to be "chinked" with thin strips of wood, the refuse of shakes, driven in tightly, and then daubed over with clay, a fine bed of which was fortunately near at hand. The provident Younkins had laid away in his own cabin the sashes and glass for two small windows; and these he had agreed to sell to the newcomers. Partly-hewn logs for floor-joists were placed upon the ground inside the cabin, previously leveled off for the purpose. On these were laid thick slabs of oak and hickory, riven out of logs drawn from the grove near by. These slabs of hardwood were "puncheons," and fortunate as was the man who could have a floor of sawed lumber to his cabin, he who was obliged to use puncheons was better off than those with whom timber was so scarce that the natural surface of ground was their only floor.—St. Nicholas.

Queen Victoria's Square-Toed Shoes.

It is a pity that there are not more mothers guided by the Queen's excellent example in the matter of square-toed boots and shoes. Not only has her Majesty persistently worn this shaped chaussure all through her own life, but she insists that the royal children shall all be similarly shod. It is nothing short of absolute cruelty to imprison growing children's feet in the unnatural pointed-toed instruments of torture that we have so long permitted to remain the fashion, and there can be no doubt that the children of unthinking and fashionable mothers do suffer very greatly from this barbarous practice. But perhaps, now that the fact is made known that not one of the royal family is ever seen in anything but sensibly shaped boots, it may induce these foolish women to make their little ones comfortable, and save them from much suffering in after years.—Ladies' Pictorial.

BLOOD SHED IN A FEUD.

DUEL BETWEEN I. N. BAKER AND O. M. ANDERSON.

The Former, Private Secretary of Colonel Ingersoll, Is Fatally Wounded—Mrs. Baker Witnesses the Desperate Combat and Then Falls Unconscious.

One of the most thrilling tragedies that have ever occurred in Westchester County, New York, took place at Croton Landing. It will probably result in the death of I. Newton Baker, private secretary of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, who was fatally shot four times by Orville M. Anderson, late New York agent of the Louisville Gas Company.

Anderson and his family, says a New York dispatch, live in the Moody homestead, half a mile from the village. Anderson sub-let part of his home to Baker and his wife. The two families have never agreed, and quarrels were frequent between the women in the house. Anderson and Baker took part in them. The disagreement went so far that each husband threatened to kill the other. The threats culminated in a duel.

In Anderson's household was a pretty niece, 5 years old. She showed a great fondness for Mr. Baker, who also took a liking to the child. A few days ago Anderson forbade Baker's talking to the girl, and also told him that he and his family must stop gossiping with Anderson's servants. Anderson was not satisfied with this caution to Baker, but wrote him a rather uncomplimentary note to that effect.

Baker came to New York, as was his custom every day, and, after transacting his business and attending to some private matters for Col. Ingersoll, he took an evening train for Croton Landing. When he arrived there, he started to walk to his home along the wooden road which runs close to the Hudson River. Mr. Baker walked slowly along the road, admiring the beautiful sunset over the Palisades.

Midway between the station and his home he saw Anderson coming down the road. When they met, Baker said: "Anderson, I would like to have a talk with you about our family differences, and see if we cannot adjust matters and avoid family quarrels. I am averse to squabbles, and want to live in peace and happiness."

The two men started up the road together. They had not gone far when they saw Mrs. Baker coming toward them. When Anderson left the house, Mrs. Baker, who was standing at the window, saw him, and, knowing that he and her husband would meet on the road and would be likely to have a dispute, started to meet her husband and walk home with him, so that the two men would not quarrel and come to blows. Mrs Baker approached the two men, and, addressing her husband, said:

"While you were absent this morning that man (pointing to Anderson) stared at me in an ungentlemanly manner, and in his actions and conduct insulted me. He did not address me, but laughed in a daring and sarcastic manner."

Baker then turned to Anderson and said: "That was an insult to my wife, and I, as her husband, can not allow this."

Baker, it is said, then drew a 22-caliber revolver. Anderson, observing Baker's movement, also drew his weapon, which was a 32-caliber. When Baker drew his revolver Anderson stepped back about six feet and turned aside, fearing that Baker would shoot before he could draw his own weapon. As both drew their revolvers Mrs. Baker sprang between them, and rushing toward her husband threw her arms about his neck and tried to shield him from Anderson's bullets. Both men were wild with rage. Baker tried to shoot, but was prevented from doing so by his wife clinging to him. Anderson was afraid to shoot, fearing he would hit Mrs. Baker. Anderson, seeing that Baker had the advantage of him by being shielded by a woman retreated some distance and took refuge behind a tree.

While Baker and his wife were struggling Anderson suddenly closed in upon the two and grappled with Baker. Mrs. Baker became exhausted, and, seeing the desperate struggle of the two men, swooned. Both men fought for their lives. They clung to each other for a few moments. Then Anderson suddenly broke away from his opponent, stepped back a couple of paces, and, raising his revolver, fired at Baker. His aim was true, for as Baker was about to raise his arm to shoot Anderson fired, the ball striking Baker's right arm, breaking it. Baker's weapon fell from his hand. Anderson then fired three more shots in quick succession. The second shot struck Baker in the forehead, making a glancing wound, while the third bullet entered his left side just below the heart, and the fourth bullet pierced the right side. Baker dropped to the ground mortally wounded and begged Anderson not to shoot again.

When Anderson saw his opponent lying upon the ground he coolly placed his revolver in his pocket and walked home, leaving Baker and his half-crazed wife on the roadside. Mrs. Baker called for help, and her wounded husband was taken to the house to which Anderson had already gone. The doctors who were summoned pronounced the wound fatal. Anderson was arrested.

—The Telegrapher, the official organ of the Brotheahood of Telegraphers, which has heretofore been published at Chicago, has been removed to Fort Wayne. It is a weekly paper devoted to the interests of telegraphers. J. H. Schwerzgen and Charles S. Andress will comprise the editorial staff.

—Secretary Brown, of the Republican Editorial Association, has sent out postals stating that the Lake Erie outing, contemplated by the association, has been indefinitely postponed, if not wholly abandoned. A number of circumstances have conspired to make this decision advisable, in the judgment of those who have had the arrangements in charge. He states that the committee will be glad to receive any suggestions.

—Some six weeks ago George Tapp, of Crawfordsville, was bitten by a dog, supposed to be mad. He went to Terre Haute and had a mad-stone applied, which adhered several hours. For this he paid $25 to the owner of the stone. Now he is in receipt of circulars from a Chicago concern telling him if he does not pay $100 to said concern for the use of a remedy for the cure of the effect of a mad-dog bite he will surely die from the disease. He, however, is still firm in the belief that the mad-stone has cured him.

—John McCarty, head-brakeman on a section of the Panhandle Green line, of the Logansport and Indianapolis division, was run down by the cars in the yards at Kokomo and killed. McCarty attempted to cut the train in two for switching. He was walking between cars trying to raise the pin when his foot got caught in either the guard-rail or the frog, and being unable to extricate it, he was pushed down to his death by the moving cars. In falling he threw himself outside the rail as much as possible, the wheel striking him at the left thigh and running down his leg full length, crushing it into a shapeless mass. The mangled limb was amputated and everything possible done to save his life, but to no purpose.

—At Jonesville, ten miles south of Columbus, ten masked men met Mark Perry upon the street, and seized him, took him to a telegraph pole a mile away, and proceeded to give him twenty-five lashes with keen switches. Perry is a worthless, drunken young man who will not work, and who has been driven from Columbus by the Marshal and dares not to return without going to work through fear of being clubbed away again. The work of whipping Perry was quietly done, and would have remained a secret had not he returned to that place and informed the citizens of what had occurred. Perry was twice invited to leave Jonesville but failed to do so. It is feared that he will again be whipped, and much more severely than at first.

—The onion crop raised by the farmers residing on the river bottom west of New Albany is said to be very large and fine this season. Four hundred barrels have already been shipped to Northern points.

—William Kratz, of Jeffersonville, who instituted an action in the Circuit Court against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for $5,000 damages, for running over his little daughter, Regina Kratz, was paid $2,000 by the corporation, and the proceedings have been withdrawn.

—Young boys at Columbus are again guilty of attempts at petty larceny. Their names, out of consideration for their families, are withheld, but the local papers say that another offense will bring publicity and punishment.

—Frank Dyer, a young man 18 years of age, was drowned in the Tippecanoe at Delphi, while in bathing. He sank at the same point an Indianapolis boy met his death a year ago, and where two others were drowned several years previous. Young Dyer was the son of one of White County's most prominent farmers.

SAVED AT LAST.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:
From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER X.

THE SECOND LETTER.

MISS BEAUCHAMPE—Lest the cover of this may excite needless apprehension, I will say at the outset that this is written for the purpose of allaying apprehension.

You will be surprised to receive a letter from this city, but your surprise cannot exceed the surprise and annoyance I experienced upon receiving orders to come here without moment's delay. In our business we are expected to journey anywhere within five minutes' notice. I was on my way to your lodgings when I was met by the messenger who bore the orders to me which brought me here.

This will fully explain the rather unsatisfactory telegram you received—wired from the train. My business here may detain me three or four days. I write to say what must sound cold; words are so weak, unless there is something behind them. All I can say is to keep up heart. I am convinced all will yet be satisfactorily explained, and that your brother and you will soon be together, and that you will look back to this time with a smile at your feverish anxiety.

I desire to caution you against a certain, or, rather, a very uncertain class of interviewers. I refer to men employed upon the press who will put words in people's mouths that were never uttered. It will be best for you—and your landlady, also—to have but one answer for all comers. Say that you are not in a condition or frame of mind on speak on the subject; then firmly close the door.

This rule ought to apply to all strangers. If a tried or trusted friend vouches for a news-gatherer, of course you will use your judgment. I say this because there are reasons for preserving rigid silence. Dabney's friends will resort to anything to lessen the correct impression already made upon the public by the articles printed in a score of papers.

I believe the estimate of his life that has excited Dabney's friends to frenzy is just.

If you should be in a great strait, or from any cause whatever require the services of one like me, or whom you can trust implicitly, address a note to John Simmons, 1102 East Eighteenth street. Mr. Simmons is in my confidence, and will prove a true friend and a wise and experienced counsellor.

Once more—do not despond. You have friends, Miss Beauchampe, who are resolved to seek and restore your brother to you. If money, or ingenuity, or the experience of the police avail, he will be found speedily.

Your friend,
ARTHUR LIVINGSTON.

P. S. You will understand I referred to such aid as a man only could render. I assume that you will repose confidence in Victoria, whose interest in you is very great. Rely upon her as you would a sister.

CHAPTER XI.

BEHIND THE BARS.

These letters were posted by Livingston about ten in the evening, after he had done a hard day's work.

He had lunched lightly at noon. Now the inner man craved food. He posted the letters with his own hand, and, glad that so much was off his mind, turned in quest of a restaurant.

Was it fancy? Did his senses play him a trick? Was not that Simmons' brother at a little distance? The gas-light shone full in his face. Livingston walked toward him. The man suddenly stepped into an open door near at hand. Livingston hastened into the house—a saloon. There was no one in sight but the barkeeper. Livingston ordered a glass of wine. As the barkeeper handed him the bottle, Livingston said, carelessly:

"Which way did my friend go? He came in just now."

The barkeeper shook his head but did not speak.

"He wants to see me as much as I want him. Tell him that Livingston—Arthur Livingston, from New York—is here."

The barkeeper pursed his lips.

"We mind our own business here. I don't know who you want. Do you see anybody here?"

"My friend came in just now," said Livingston, adding, carelessly, "No matter. I give you credit for minding your business. At the same time, there is my hotel; my name is on the card. If it suits you to hand it to the gentleman who entered, I will be obliged to you."

He walked out slowly, feeling half vexed at the barkeeper, and stood at the lamp fully fifteen minutes, but Simmons did not emerge from the saloon.

Then Livingston stepped aboard a car and rode to his hotel. He would not make the rounds of the police headquarters and press until one in the morning. In the meantime he would rest.

As he was in the act of entering his hotel loud voices in hot altercation attracted his attention. A man, evidently under the influence of liquor, was regaling a group with his views of government. A man in citizen's attire approached the brawler and addressed him. The brawler looked up and down the street suddenly, and walked away quickly. Livingston looked after him. The man in citizen's attire followed the brawler. Livingston was a little distance in the rear of this man. The brawler stepped into a saloon. Livingston could see a score or more of men in the saloon.

Suddenly his heart bounded. He beheld the side of Beauchampe's head at the end of the counter. Beauchampe was talking to a villainous-looking man twice his age. He was gesticulating rapidly. Livingston entered the saloon without pausing, and was making his way directly to his friend, when a commotion arose. There were blows and cries, oaths and pistol shots. It was all over in thirty seconds—less time. But even that short time sufficed to clear the room of those who were in it.

When Livingston recovered his breath he was on the pavement rubbing a sprained wrist. A number of men were running away, but it was plain that at least half those in the room had escaped through the rear door and windows.

But four men were in custody, and Livingston smiled upon realizing he was one of the four.

He found an opportunity to whisper to one of the officers who had raided the place, telling him to send a well-known detective to him immediately. Then he was conveyed to the station house with his fellow-prisoners. One of these, the loud-talking man, was next to Livingston, but the brawler was silent, subdued.

When he was placed in a cell, Livingston for the first time experienced dread lest he might be detained until morning. What if his friend should not be near at hand? The very thought made him angry. He strove to call the attention of the officer near him. The man looked at him, but made no response.

"Come here. I have something of importance to communicate."

The officer shook his head.

"They all say that. Try something else."

"Very well," Livingston answered calmly. "I sent word to McCandless, by one of the men who brought us here. If McCandless fails to get word, and you refuse to deliver my request to the captain within half an hour, at most, I will be sorry. It does not suit me to remain here long. Still, in that case, my feelings would be more agreeable than yours."

The man affected indifference at first, then thought better of it. Perhaps it would be best to speak to a sergeant, or some one who could relieve him of the sole responsibility. He called the sergeant.

The sergeant was engaged with a gentleman, at that moment. Presently the sergeant found time to step back. The gentleman accompanied him. The moment the gentleman beheld Livingston, he uttered an exclamation.

"You here!"

Livingston's surprise checked his utterance. It was Simmons, who spoke. Simmons whom he thought, at that moment, was in New York.

The sergeant looked from one to the other.

"Here, let my friend out," said Simmons shortly. "What blunder is this anyhow?"

"It isn't so wonderful after all," said Livingston, as the door was opened, and he stepped out. "I was looking for a friend in the saloon the police entered—that's all."

He smiled. The sergeant recited the facts; Simmons regained his good humor, and presently all were laughing over the newspaper man's misadventure.

When the friends left the station-house Simmons suddenly clutched Livingston's arm, saying, "How in the name of all that is wonderful did you come here?"

"That is just what I was going to ask you," Livingston replied, coolly. "I mailed a letter to New York for you an hour ago."

"Humph! Like as not it is in the pouch with one I wrote to you."

"Come to my hotel," said Livingston. "Let us talk this thing over."

Then they walked on, arm in arm.

CHAPTER XII.

A PURELY LOCAL DISTURBANCE.

When the friends exchanged their views at Livingston's hotel comparison of notes showed that they were both subject to orders neither could have anticipated or disobeyed.

"I had not a minute to lose," Simmons said. "My time was as short as the time allowed you. And I am here, as you may surmise, on business of the utmost importance. The truth will never be known outside of a certain circle; but before we are done any information in my possession, or that I may acquire here, will prove very useful to the State authorities, as well as the city and county authorities."

"Then you are not employed by the authorities of New York?" said Livingston, quickly, jumping to a conclusion.

"You've hit it. In this instance I will be paid out of the secret-service fund. But now—about your friend. This is a mistake. You are wrong."

"Why do you speak so positively?"

"I'll convince you you are mistaken."

Livingston smiled incredulously and shook his head.

"You were positive you saw my brother not long since?"

"I did."

"My brother is in California."

Livingston started.

"I received a message from him today. He is at San Jose, on a matter of business."

"Then it was you I saw?"

"Of course. Tell me where you saw me?"

When Livingston related the particulars Simmons nodded his head sagely. "That was precisely where I was—the barkeeper understands his business. By the way, he is not a barkeeper, except in an emergency. He is one of the sharpest detectives in the country. Some of the police here know it, but the authorities—the men who have given him his choice—relying upon him to do good work, know it better."

"I may be mistaken about Beauchampe, and if I am, do you know it will relieve my mind? I can't believe he would avoid me as this man does."

"And I am glad you are upset, as you say."

"Why?"

"Because it is conclusive proof to me that we are all here together. The man you think is your friend, and the man I know is the murderer of Dabney—you and me—we are all here in Chicago just as we were all in New York two days ago. I consider it a good sign. Something will turn up soon. Mark my words if matters are not brought to a focus suddenly. The only trouble is, I don't know when I may have to jump on to New York again."

"In my case, it is certain I will be here for some days, at least."

"I am not sure about that, either," said Simmons. "This sensation is stunning—it will blow over in a few hours. It is purely local. I've got that far along. The people in New York and other cities needn't worry."

"That's the best news I've heard," said Livingston earnestly. "I confess I was stunned at first."

"That's natural. It is our first experience in this line."

"I hope it may be the last," said Livingston. "So you think, spite of the fact that we are strangers in Chicago."

"You forget. I am as much at home here as I am in New York."

"True. I forgot that."

"I can trace a man here as easily as I can in New York. And I mean to place my hand—or to be able to put my hand on this man you think is Beauchampe."

"You seem to have a new theory about my friend."

"I have. I will not say now that your friend did not commit the murder. I will say I have satisfied myself, after turning everything over in my mind, that there must be two men as much alike almost as my brother and myself. You have proved that much to me."

"Have you any settled plan?" Livingston asked after a lengthy pause.

"Yes—I have thought it all out. I'll take some of the police into my confidence, and inside of twenty-four hours, I think, we will know something. If I want to see you——"

"You'll find me at police headquarters. Just ask for Jacobs."

"Jacobs?"

"That's all. What are you going to do now? Have you any report to make?"

"Yes. I'll be busy until daylight. I am going to police headquarters now. If you are going that way we may as well go together. I've a lot of work before me—I'll be glad when it's all over, as you seem to think it will be, so far as the safety of other cities is concerned. I've been thinking all along it could not be as bad as it seemed at first. Americans are not the people to permit an uprising such as was feared when I came on here."

"Not much," said Simmons, in his positive way. "I won't say what will be a hundred years hence; just now the man who proclaims himself an anarchist will come to grief. Well, come. I have some work on hand, too, which, by the way, I will give you an account of confidentially—not for publication. For your guidance, and to convince you this is a local disturbance."

"I suppose it will not be amiss for me to tell the Record folks, and impress it on them that this is simply a local outbreak?"

"I'll stake my reputation on that," said Simmons.

When Livingston closed his report, three hours later, he tacked to it the idea for a heading which reassured all who read the Record that day. One of the head-lines read: "A Purely Local Disturbance."

CHAPTER XIII.

BAFFLED.

Livingston was fagged out when he closed his report. He was despondent. The conference with Simmons had stimulated him, infused hope, and inspired him with courage until his work was done.

Then he began to experience a strange oppression. His thoughts reverted to New York, and to Miss Beauchampe. What was she doing? What could a girl like that do all alone? She might go mad. She might be tempted in sheer frenzy to go out alone, perhaps be subjected to insult or suspicion.

In short, Livingston became a prey to utter despondency.

Where then was her brother? If the man he had seen was another, where was poor Beauchampe? How did it help matters if it could be proved that Beauchampe and this man resembled each other?

Livingston was walking to his hotel when his attention was attracted to two men on opposite corners of a street. One stood silent, motionless. The other shuffled his feet, and looked all about him. One stood so close to a lamp post that he might have been unnoticed, or mistaken for the post. The other stood out boldly on the street corner. One was slight. The other was of massive frame, evidently.

As Livingston looked, he was impressed with the idea that the slender man was watching the large man. He felt somehow as if he was about to participate in a struggle. Instead of pursuing his steps in that direction, he paused, and stood looking at the figures on the opposite corner.

Suddenly the large figure stood stock still. Livingston was sure the man was contemplating the figure close to the lamp-post. Then the big man made a move. He was crossing the street, when the slight man shot out from the lamp-post and sped toward the opposite corner.

Then a figure suddenly shot out as from a wall seemingly, and the slender figure turned, doubled on his tracks, and was heading toward Livingston.

His face was turned toward a powerful light—a huge lamp in front of a hotel. The instant Livingston beheld his face, he sprang forward, uttering one word—"Beauchampe!"

The man shot a look at Livingston that bespoke fear and terror, but did not pause. The big man shouted:

"Halt!"

He, too, ran swiftly. He was within a few feet of Beauchampe when the latter whirled around—there was a flash, a report, and the big man put his hand to his thigh, but still pursued his man.

Now, the third man sped past Livingston, and he could not resist the temptation to follow them. Thus all four were running on one side of the street swiftly. The wounded man labored, but he ran fast withal. Gradually this man's breath gave out. He paused to signal his fellows, and at that moment Livingston passed him.

The man nearest the man who fired the shot gained noticeably on Beauchampe. It was a neck-and-neck race for at least the length of a block. Then the pursuer put out a hand. Livingston could see the men struggling. He was near them when one was thrown violently to the ground. The other—Beauchampe, sped on. Livingston still pursued. Another and another block was passed. Livingston realized they were approaching a passenger depot. He feared he would lose Beauchampe now, if he did not succeed in reaching his side. It was Beauchampe—but so strangely altered. He called to him now as he ran, not in a loud voice, but so distinctly that Beauchampe could hear him. Beauchampe did not turn, did not abate his speed. He ran the faster until he reached an alleyway, when suddenly Beauchampe disappeared.

When his pursuer looked up and down the alley, no sign of a living being was seen. It was as if the earth had swallowed Beauchampe up.

While Livingston stood dazed, marveling what had become of Beauchampe, he heard violent outcries on the next street. Hastening in that direction, he observed a number of men running along the railway track toward a train of cars. They darted in and out and under the cars, which were motionless, then gathered in a group. Livingston could hear them talking excitedly.

He approached the group slowly. As he neared the group, one man said:

"I thought I had my hand on him."

"And I was sure he jerked under the rear car," said another.

"It is the strangest thing I ever saw," another said. "But he's as good as ours. I'll bet my month's pay we'll nab him before the day's over."

"I feel like taking that bet," said a voice Livingston recognized. "In my opinion he'll not be nabbed in Chicago."

"How will he get out of it if we mind our business and look into every car?" demanded one young man, whereat there was a loud laugh at the young man's expense.

"What you don't know, Adam," said a big policeman, "would fill whole libraries. Of course he will get out of town if he gets aboard; he won't be ahead of a brass band."

Livingston stepped forward, and was recognized by Simmons, who said to him, quietly:

"It's our man. I thought we had him, but he is too quick for us. He is one of the sharpest I have ever had to deal with."

Livingston was on the point of relating all he witnessed, but he reconsidered and remained silent for a time. Finally he asked Simmons what he thought of the affair.

"I think," said Simmons, with rare deliberation, knitting his brows, "that he will find Chicago too hot for him, and will get out if he can."

"And which way will he go?"

"To New York. Where else would he go?"

"What did he come here for if he cannot manage to stay?"

"You and I don't want to stay, yet we are both here," Simmons answered with a smile. "I don't know what he came for—I know why he is getting out—because the town is too hot to hold him now. He may thank me for that much."

"Then you may as well admit he has baffled you again."

"Yes—that's the word. But that is precisely the reason why he is near the end of his string. I consider my reputation is at stake now, and I won't rest satisfied until I have him in my grip. We have just lost six hours' solid work. Let him look out the next time I go after him."

HUMOR.

His Time Was Money.

The bill of fare was printed in a mixture of English and mongrel French.

"Waiter," he said, after glancing over it, "want to make half a dollar?"

"Sutt'nly, sah," answered the waiter.

"Is there a good dinner on this bill of fare without going outside of the straight United States language?"

"I reckon so, sah."

"Then bring it on. Here's your hush-money. I'm no linguist, and my time is worth $10 an hour. Get a move on you!"

"After being at the Paris Exposition I don't suppose you will care to go to the next World's Fair, Miss Jurneigh?"

"Well, no. Even if I was sure there would be a fair in the next world I am in no special hurry to go there."

It Was True.

"The same old jokes," snarled the landlady as she overheard the new boarder discussing the spring lamb.

"They've one thing in their favor," answered the boarder.

"What's that?" snapped the landlady.

"They are not as old as the lamb," was the cruel answer.

Not a Spendthrift.

"My young friend, I am sorry to note that you are falling into a habit of profanity."

"H'mh! You use some pretty strong language yourself, occasionally."

"So I do," replied the old man, "but I don't waste it."

"I don't see the prisoner," said the County Judge, as he walked up preparatory to sentencing a culprit. "Where is he?"

"I'm blessed if I know," said the Sheriff, looking under the benches. "Just lent him my paper of fine-cut, too."

"Was he a big red-headed man, with a scar on his cheek?" asked the foreman, who was playing stud-horse poker with the rest of the jury.

"That's the cuss," said the clerk, who had been betting on a horse-race with the Prosecuting Attorney.

"Why, then," said the foreman, "he asked me to go out and take a drink about an hour ago, but I showed him I had three sixes, and he said, 'Well, next time, then," and walked out.

"The thunder you say!" roared his Honor. "However he's sure to be in town next week to see the dog-fight, and some of you must remind the Sheriff to shoot him on sight. VERMONT was admitted into the Union 100 years ago, and is the first state to celebrate the centennial of its admission into the Union.

FORESTS near Bradford, Pa., are being injured by a worm that causes the tops to wither something like the trouble with apple trees here a year or so ago.

COTTON crop reported good again this year, and with several hundred thousand bales left over from last year's crop, there will be plenty of that staple. Prices are likely to be low.

THE work in the census office at Washington is getting so light that great numbers of the clerks are being dismissed, 900 being dropped last Saturday. About 400 more will go about the middle of this month.

SIOUX Indian base ball nine to play the Ft. Wayne boys on Wednesday of this week. They played the Garden City, in Chicago Sunday, and were defeated 13 to 5. They are real Indians, and have been playing in various parts of the country all summer.

MANISTEE, Mich., has a new attraction for parties, etc. It is called the "foot social," where the ladies meet and wash each other's feet. It is said to be a very moving sight when the fair Michigan damsels rest their heels on some tall bluff, the lovely foot and rosy pink toes extending out over the lake a part way to Chicago.

QUAY, the corrupt head of the republican national committee resigned last week, going entirely off the committee, even as a state member for Pennsylvania and as head of the executive committee. Dudley, of blocks-of-five notoriety also resigned his place as treasurer. J. S. Clarkson, who changed about 50,000 postmasters when Harrison went in, will be chairman, at least till the next meeting, which is in November.

THAT lively little daily, the Indianapolis Sun, has a fine article in Saturday's issue, descriptive of Lake Tippecanoe, in Kosciusko county. This fine body of water lies in a southerly direction from its big sister at Cedar Beach, and is a lovely sheet of water. It is the head of the Tippecanoe river. The writer of the article, Chas. J. Buchanan, is evidently a scholar and a lover of nature as well, and accompanies his letter with fine and life-like pictures.

SUPPOSED that parties are shipping arms from the United State to Chili for use of the insurgents there. The rifles etc., are concealed in bales of hay. Some have been seized.

SOME ladies, strangers in Washington, were looking at the mutilated statues in Corcoran Art Gallery, the other day, and one of them asked a gentleman what they were. "They are old soldiers," he replied, "who came here looking up pension claims. They had to wait so long they petrified and were put in here."

THE Press seems to complain because the Hoosier Tidings is down on the McKinley high tax bill, the same as democrats are. The Tidings, is probably like all who stop to think for themselves. It can't see the use of taxing nine of our people, merely to make the tenth one rich, especially as the nine are already poor and the tenth already rich. The democratic idea is right and the Tidings shows its good judgment and fearlessness by agreeing with us, that far, at least.

QUEER state of things reported in Kansas. Some parts of the state that had some people a few years ago, now have few or none, as they were driven out by foilure of crops. It is now learned that the state sends them their school money as before, and the few families remaining divide it up among them. In one district the school house has not been opened for a year, but a family living there, hires their daughter to teach at $35 a month. Lately they had a "school meeting" and raised the "teachers" wages to $40 a month. Who says the school fund isn't a good thing?

HIGH tax papers about here are just now busy showing the farmers how the top notch tariff tax has reduced the prices on goods and groceries they have to buy, and has at the same time increased the price on things the farmers have to sell. And we suppose that in manufacturing centers these republican editors are telling the manufacturers how McKinley's bill has raised the price of their make of goods, but has reduced the price of the farm products which they and their men have to buy. Cute things can be done with McKinley's little law among those who are ignorant enough to believe such tales.

Please Settle Up.

All parties indebted to me for professional services, are earnestly requested to come in and settle with me as soon as they conveniently can, for owing to a long and expensive preparation for the practice of medicine and surgery, I have incurred heavy expenses which I wish to adjust. I hope my patrons will kindly remember this and greatly oblige me.

NELSON J. SHOOK, M. D.

Notice to Patrons.

Having disposed of my entire stock of groceries, etc., I desire to have a settlement with all who are indebted to me. Those knowing themselves indebted, are hereby notified to call at once, or their account will be placed in the hands of the collector.

Yours very respectfully,
HENRY J. MOSSEY.

NORTH OF PUBLIC SQUARE.

DETROIT'S GREAT DAY.

The G. A. R. filled the City, and their Twenty-fifth Annual Encampment the best They ever held.

The beautiful city on the straits was all ablaze with flags and patriotic colors and emblems this week, and to a reporter of the COURIER, who was there on Wednesday, many of the old vets, declared enthusiastically, it was the most pleasant and successful national meeting the order had ever held. Several camps had been provided for them, in various yet convenient quarters of the city and there was an abundance of good tents which in the extremely pleasant weather, afforded them excellent shelter. But the chief source of accommodations was at the Exposition grounds, where acres of tents were pitched, and all the main buildings utilized in same way. The great Expo. Hall was filled with neat new bunks, and many thousands of the G. A. R. boys found a welcome shelter and rest within its ample area Here, as all over town, extensive accommodations had been made for food, and all the hydrants in town were turned enough to let flow a stream of water to quench the thirst of all who came, the overflow running off in bright rivulets along the clean gutters. And the town was glowing with gay colors and covered over with words of welcome. Three great arches had been erected, the most beautiful and tasty being that across Fort street near Griswold street, was something of the old Roman style and at each side, sheltered among the pillars that formed its support, were four young ladies who showered flowers on the old heroes as they marched past, until the stock of flowers failed, or they were too tired to throw any more. There was nothing too good for the "boys," and everything seemed to be prepared, or on show, or on sale, purposely for them. And there was no more common sign up, than "Pilsener, G. A. R. Beer cool and Nice on Drought Here." Early on Wednesday the streets filled with G. A. R. and visiting friends and citizens. But there was plenty of room and the many stands put up and marked "Seats 75cts.," "Seats $1" were mainly ignored. The price was too high, especially in a city whose people welcomed you into their front yards, onto their doorsteps and lawns. At 11 a. m. central standard time the column began to move and at 3:45 the last band of S. V's. had gone under the great arch. This was four hours and three quarters. But of this time, about twenty minutes should deducted, to allow for time lost by having to stop several times when the state delegations in moving to their stations on the route interfered with the main line. First came the general officers and staff mounted. It might be said, that nearly every state staff was mounted. The signal for starting was a gun from the revenue cutter, Michigan lying in the river.

NOTES.

There were some pathetic and many laughable features. It was painful to see some of the crippled veterans making the long march. We believe this should not be permitted. The march as a whole should be shorter. Some, however, went dancing along the line, happy and gay as the traditional sunflower. The line couldn't be too long for them.

After the parade, thousands of the vets, went over to Windsor on the Canada side to see our British American friends. And they are friends as they very sensebly and gracefully showed, for the first thing seen on landing was a fine arch across the street with the familiar legend "Welcome G. A. R." It was such an unasked and friendly greeting that the hilarious old soldiers stopped and looked at it both ways. Just up at the postoffice corner was a large banner, stretched from the government building across to the Manning Hotel on which stood out in great letters "This is Canada; God Save the Queen." It was a delicate and manly reminder, and its frankness and patriotism just suited the veterans, for the love of one's country is strong in English speaking people, the world over. At the next block was a banner that looked home like. It told the hungry United States Americans that the ladies of the M. E. church had prepared to give them a supper. So hundreds responded, and got a fair meal for 35 cents, and made several good looking Canadian ladies happier for the impromptu visit. All over Windsor were British flags and emblems. One or two places showed red, white and blue, and a few had small American flags mixed with them.

We believe every state sent some members, though the far west, and southern states had but few. Florida delegation carried palmetto branches and had a stuffed alligator. Ohio had the biggest delegation if we except Michigan. Massachusetts marched the best and had best uniform. Wisconsin carried "Old Abe," the war eagle, stuffed. The New York Sixty-ninth, the Highlanders, with their picturesque uniforms and "skirling bagpipes," made a fine show and were cheered.

Please Call and Settle.

All who are indebted to me on account or otherwise are earnestly requested to call and settle at once, as I have waited on them patiently and now need all that is due me.

Mr. Nicholas Wagoner, of Monroe, Ind., gives us the following statement in regard to Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. He says: I have used a great many different kinds of medicines for bronchitis, a disease I have had for the last ten years, and found nothing that would relieve me until I commenced to use Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. I took ten 50c. bottles of this medicine and was entirely cured, and can recommend it to any person that is suffering from this disease. NICHOLAS WAGONER.

SECTION II.

And it is further ordered and ordained, by said Board of Trustees, that the sidewalks along the ends and sides of said lots above specified, shall be by the owners of said lots, excavated or filled, as the case may be, to within two inches of the established grade line (which is a direct line from one street crossing or alley crossing to another) to the width of——feet and that said planking or paving requird by this ordinance, shall be placed so that the surface thereof shall be on the true grade, and the inner side or edge thereof, one foot from the ends or sides of said lots, respectively, as the case may be, and be five feet wide. To plank said sidewalks there shall be used four stringers laid lengthwise, with said streets, of live oak timber, not less than five inches wide and three inches thick, to be set on edge, and the earth to be graded up the sides of the stringers so as to embed them therein. The plank must be of sound oak timber, not less than 1½ inches thick and not more than four inches wide, to be firmly nailed crosswise on said stringers with two tenpenny nails at each bearing on said stringers, and within 4 inches of each end of each plank, so that the end of no plank shall protrude more than two inches over the stringer.

SECTION III.

And it being the opinion of said Board of Trustees that the public convenience and safety requires that the said walks on the east end of said lot No. 54, in the original plat of said town owned by Emily Dills, and on west end of lot No. 110, in said plat, owned by Mr. and Mrs. John F. Aber should be paved by the construction of a cement or stone walk, instead of a plank walk, the same is so ordered to be done by the said owners, respectively, to the width of five feet, on the proper grade, as aforesaid, of the same material as is being used in the construction of other cement walks on Main street in said town.

SECTION IV.

All of said sidewalks shall be completed, in the manner aforesaid, by the 15th day of Septemper, A. D, 1891, and in case of the refusal or failure of any owner or owners of said lots to so complete said sidewalks within said time, the marshal of said town shall proceed to cause the same to be graded, paved and planked as by this ordinance required, and as authorized by sections 3,259 and 3,360, of the Revised Statutes of the state of Indiana, of 1881.

SECTION V.

And it is further ordered and ordained that this ordinance be published in one of the public newspapers in said town at once, and that it shall take effect ten days after such publication.

Passed and adopted by said Board, in regular session this 3d day of August, 1891.

Town Clerk.

MODERN INVENTION.

What it has done. It has affected all trades, cheapening nearly all things.

"A good mechanic is master of his tools." The wisdom of our ancestors is in the old maxim; but, alas! much of the wisdom of our ancestors was buried with their bones. Now-a-days the tool is rapidly becoming master of the mechanic. Modern invention is continually making the tools more important, and the mechanic less important. The workman is becoming, everywhere and in all the trades, more and more a mere attendant upon special machine tools that do the work—particularly the nice work—automatically and with machine regularity and precision, while the man merely supplies and handles the material. The race of mechanics that our fathers knew, who could do anything and everything in their respective trades by deft hand work, are almost gone. In fact some entire trades are gone, and more are on the verge of going. The majority of the boys of to-day never saw a stage driver, formerly

THE PRIDE OF THE ROAD.

The railroads have driven him out of existence. And the boys will do well to take a good look at the expert street car driver. In twenty years from now—probably in ten years—there will not one be left, unless he still lingers in some back village of the effete despotisms of Europe where it takes two generations for a new idea to sprout. Electricity will have taken the place of horses. The old fashioned hatter, who used to measure your grandfather's head with a tape, and make a hat complete from beaver fur, and later from silk, is now invisible as a ghost. Hats are made by machinery, in factories, and purchased at a store warranted to fit, in accurate sizes. The old style shoemaker, who made foot wear complete from beginning to end, from a lady's slipper to a heavy boot, is nearly gone. You can find him barely lingering here and there in some small shop on a back street. The factory has taken his place. The old-style blacksmith, celebrated by the past, who could is a tradition now. In his stead you shall find a putter together of parts made in a factory. He puts the ready-made irons on your carriage—he does not iron it. He puts shoes on your horse—he does not make them.

Tailors are nearly out of fashion. You shall hunt long to find one such as every village could once boast—a man who measured, cut, and sewed all kinds of garments from a shirt to a dress coat. Now there are cutters, and some sewers; but the latter are growing few. A little longer and the factory will have beaten them all from the field.

THE OLD FASHIONED CARPENTER,

who could build an entire house with his chest of tools, making the winding stairs with neevels, posts, and carved rails, and who cut the cornices, beading, moulding and panel work and made the doors, sash and blinds by hand—where is he? Gone forever. Yet a little while, and all houses will be altogether made at the factory, and only be put together in sites, as they already are mostly.

Still there are handicrafts that seem perpetual, But don't be too sure. "Machinery cannot touch our trades," say the bricklayer, the type-setter, the painter, the stone-cutter. They are mistaken. Already a large part of stone cutting is done by machinery. Already machines have been devised to construct brick walls. Already type-setting machines have appeared. Already painting machines have been invented. Be sure that invention will not cease until all these things have been accomplished and are common.

The old cooper's trade is dying, too. Immense factories now turn out machine-made barrels by the hundred thousand, cheaper and better than hand work can accomplish. The wagon and carriage builder has also given place to the factory. And so through all crafts—the tendency is the same. In the factory

THE TOOL DOMINATES THE WORKMAN.

He obeys the machine, instead of the tool obeying him. He becomes part of the machinery. He makes just so many motions per minute, governed by the incessant speed of the machine upon whose movement he attends. The results are cheaper products, in the main better products, and immensely greater production. There is less individual skill, but a higher average grade of work. There is more leisure and less hours of labor per day for the workingman. There is less crudeness and better finish. The world is more comfortable at less cost. In some things working hardship, on the whole invention has proved a great blessing to all classes of people. If the farmer has forgotten the skill of his fathers, and no longer reaps, mows, sows or plants in the old, slow, hand way, see how much better off he is, and how much better he lives, freed from the necessity of toiling fourteen hours per day. The mechanic no longer works from early sunrise to late sunset. And wages are much higher than they used to be in those old days. However poverty may pinch, or skill be idle in occasional places, for all who are able to live there is continually increasing comfort at continually decreasing cost. The workman of to-day is better dressed, better housed and better fed, and enjoys more of the graces of life, than the employer of our fathers' times.

THE G. A. R. people are going to build a memorial hall at Decatur, Ill., the city where the order first originated. It is believed the members all over the Union will assist, and it will be but little for each post.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

We learn that A. Y. Rosenberry at Waterloo, is having extraordinary success in his special way of treating diseases. People are coming to him from various quarters for treatment. We have seen and at times published many testimonials from persons who have been treated for various diseases, and they always testify to the benefits they have received.

There was quite an excitement Saturday over the fire at Garrett. All sorts of rumors were afloat, although a fair report could be had over the telephone. Several of our people, went up to the roof of the Hollister House, and from there watched the column of black smoke till it died down. It was learned that a frame barn southeast of Linkenbelt's corner had burned. Of course there was danger that it might spread farther.

Prof. Horace A. Hoffman and wife came home last week to remain a few days with his mother. It will be remembered that Mrs. Hoffman alone, was here at vacation last year, the Professor being then in Greece, where he had gone to perfect himself in the language and literature which are his special work at the University. Both are in excellent health. They return this week to Bloomington.

Harper's Bazar for this week presents, as usual, a rich variety of articles pertaining to the fashions, domestic economy, household management, etc., including a pattern sheet supplement. Interesting articles are contributed by Colonel T. W. Higginson, C. De Hurst, Mrs. Agnes B. Ormsbee, and others. Mr. Hardy's new story, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," is continued, and Charlotte M. Packard contributes a short but entertaining story entitled "The Stranger at Hibbard's."

Coldwater, Mich. July 8th.

W. L. Meese & Son:

Gentlemen: I have been canvassing for the Swing Washer and exhibiting it thoroughly and find it to be just what the people want. It is just as perfect for cleansing clothes as the sewing machine is for sewing. And I am now ready to give my whole time and attention in selling it, for I know if it will please the people here, it will anywhere in the Union. Will you please send to me twelve Swing Washers just as soon as you can ship them. Ship by freight.

Very truly yours,
L. A. York.

We acknowledge a neighborly call from Ex-Trustee Dancer of Jackson, last Saturday. He was one of the first of our original subscribers and did not forget us these hard times.

Samuel Vanzile at Collingwood has his feed mill and exchange business running at full blast, and is ready to accommodate all who call. We are told he will soon have a cider mill going also.

The Junction is booming, as the erection of new residences and general business activity indicates. Mr. L. Spangler has erected a house suitable for two families. He is now laying the foundation for another.

H. E. Garrett, the good natured fellow, who was in the meat market with Ben. Williams, has disposed of his interest, and Mr. W. will now conduct the business alone. He sends a cordial greeting to all his old patrons.

Mr. Craig's store room on South Main street, formerly occupied by H. J. Mossey, has undergone some needed and noticeable repairs. It has been neatly papered and painted, and will make a pretty business room.

Our wide-awake photographer, J. G. Clapp has added attractions to the entrance to his large and well arranged gallery by replacing the pictures in his old sign, by new ones, of prominent persons of town and country.

We are still selling Mason quart fruit jars at $1.00 a dozen. Also have a few baby carriages left, which we do not care to keep over on account of needing the room for other goods, will therefore sell them at the wholesale price, at The Fair, Garrett, Ind.

PLAIN SEWING: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Mrs. Alice Imler in the north part of town will weave carpets for those needing this work. Striped carpet for 10 cents a yard, hit-and-miss, for 9 cents. Good carpet made with 1¼ pounds of rags to a yard. If not convenient to call on her drop a postal and she will call on you and get the material. 32tf

Our room being nearly completed, we will have a selected stock of goods on hand in a very few days, and we send greeting to all our former patrons and the public in general. We will be better equipped than ever to satisfy the many wants of our customers. Watch for our grand opening.
Thomas Bros.

Father Young was taken sick at his rooms at the hotel where he stopped in Chicago about a week ago, and when found next morning, had evidently fainted as he had fallen to the floor, striking his head against the bed post. His face was considerably cut, and had bled a good deal. He was cared for, and as soon as he was able was brought home. He is improving now, and we trust may soon be out of danger.

The Hoosier boys took the fire engine down on South VanBuren street Monday evening, where after sprinkling several lots, they inserted the hose into the little ditch running west from the Furniture factory, at the corner of E. C. Foltz's property and threw a stream of water through cleaning it out from there to the main ditch. They then went east to Jackson street, but could not force the water through as the ditch seemed to be clogged up.

The current number of Harper's Weekly includes among its many attractive features a series of illustrations from instantaneous photographs of the recent Naval Review at Boston. The very popular series of illustrations relating to the Columbian Exposition is continued, this number containing portraits of the "World's Fair Committee." The illustrated supplement embraces an interesting and exhaustive history of polo-playing, by Casper W. Whitney, with a number of spirited illustrations by Frederic Remington.

DeKalb county people will remember the article in the COURIER a few years ago, in regard to the election of a U. S. senator from this state, by a majority of 1, that one being the representative from DeKalb and Steuben, and that member's election being secured by counting the vote of one DeKalb man, the father of E. R. and Horace Shoemaker. The U. S. senator so elected, was Ed. Hannegan, and this bit of history is called up, by the recent murder of his grandson, Ed. Hannegan, at Fortress Monroe. His murderer, Haines, was also of a prominent family being a grandson of Admiral Jenkins of the navy.

The Foster Furnature Co., at Fort Wayne, are the largest dealers in baby carriages in the state. They can save you from $2 to $10 on any carriage you have to purchase.

The temperance meeting on the public square was quite a success Sunday in spite of the great tendency to go to the negro campmeeting.

C. E. Delegrange now at Academie, in Allen county, sends for the COURIER. All old Auburnites want to hear from home, and they know the COURIER furnishes the most news.

Dr. Nusbaum says there has been a good deal of sickness among children lately—diseases naturally brought on by the peculiar conditions of the weather we have had this summer.

PIANO FOR SALE: A good square piano in good condition and on reasonable terms. Inquire of Dr. S. B. Johnston at his residence or dental office on North Main street, Auburn.

King & Franklin's great circus and Roman hippodrome will be here Saturday of next week, Aug. 15. See the big advertisement for particulars. It bids fair to be the best show we have had for a long time.

Charlie Casebeer returned to St. Louis Sunday night over the Wabash. He and his brother Ed. both have good positions there the latter being in a drug store, while Charlie is clerk for a heavy coal firm.

Northern Indiana seems to be having a regular season of burglarizing and sneak-theiving generally. Nearly every town along the line from Laporte to Auburn, has been laid under contribution by these marauders.

E. P. Dickinson and little daughter, Hattie, were in town Monday morning. He came to bring down Mrs. Cooper, wife of Conductor Cooper of the Jackson road. She wanted to take a look at the thriving city of Auburn.

Some of the recent and very noticeable improvements on the South Side, is a new barn, which has been erected by H. D. Weaver. It is a neatly, though not an overly expensively gotten up building and will do him valuable service.

You should remember that Thomas Bros. are "up-to-snuff" in the art of baking. They can satisfy the wants of every individual, from a common eater to an epicure. Give them a chance to test your appetite for good things. 32tf

John Morell was down from Wolcottville over Sunday. He says business up there is good and that their foundry is flourishing. He is one of the chief managers of the business, being the secretary and treasurer of the company.

The Press has a bright, brief, set of write-ups for every business in town, in its last week's issue. That is the way to do it. It costs some time, trouble and expense, but we believe in the long run, it pays the paper as well as the town.

The funeral of the late Stephen Girardot was held at the residence Friday, though it was but an informal one as Father Young was not able to be present. The interment was in the Catholic cemetery north of town. There was a large attendance from both town and country.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

Harper's Young People for July 28th contains a story by Lucy C. Lillie, entitled "Tumbled into a Fortune." J. Mcdonald Oxley's entertaining serial, "Dick of Diamond Rock," is concluded. "Flying Hill Farm," by Sophie Swett, increases in interest as the narrative progresses. There are also articles and stories by David Ker, Kate Cotheal Budd, H. C. Watson, and E. H. House.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Stamets had the sad misfortune to lose by death, their little child James Lester, aged 2 months, 16 days, Sunday morning. The funeral was at the residence Monday at two in the afternoon, and the little one was laid in its early grave in Evergreen cemetery. Mr. Wooton of the M. E. church conducted the services. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of our people. The cause of its death was cholera infantum.

Work in preparing for the fair goes right on. It always takes some care and expense to fit up all the buildings and the ground, to get them ready for the fair. This year, there is the new dining hall to build, but it will be ready, and good warm meals will be served to the people at all reasonable hours and at reasonable prices. Everyone can be fed, sheltered and made comfortable. The same can be said for stock; and all articles on exhibition will be properly cared for. Pains will be taken to secure competent judges in all classes. Everything indicates a grand success.

Justin Girardot has been appointed by the court, administrator of the estate of his brother, the late Stephen Girardot, killed in the runaway last week.

Concord letter a little too late. We are sorry we could not insert this week, as our correspondent there is so faithful. Quarterly meeting is held there Sunday.

A few dollars invested in screen doors will add greatly to your comfort during the hot months of summer. J. Beuret has them, and don't you forget it. 19tf

Mrs. J. L. Davis, Mrs. Kirby Davis and Mrs. Judge McClellan went up to Rome City Tuesday to remain the rest of the week. A number of the Chautauqua ladies went yesterday.

The New Process Vapor stove sold by Beuret is the latest invention in household labor saving stoves. The simplest, easiest and safest. Go and see it for yourselves, at Beuret's, Auburn.

Look out! Now is your time to buy a baby carriage cheaper than you will ever have a chance to get them again. Avail yourselves of the opportunity at The Fair, Garrett, Ind.

Grand Sabbath school picnic at Rehoboth Saturday, Aug. 15, to which all are invited. The Rehoboth mite society will furnish warm meals for 20 cents per meal. Proceeds for the benefit of the church.

The band halts naturally under the electric light at the Kiblinger corner, finding it so easy to form a circle in the shadow formed by the circular lamp shade. And when they get settled down to earnest work, we feel sure we never had a band that could play better.

Various property owners will be interested in a sidewalk ordinance that we publish this week. The board hopes everyone notified will cheerfully attend to this matter both in the interest of good, safe walks and for the uniformity and beauty of our town improvements.

John Shugers made a flying trip to Ashland and Wayne counties, O., on Wednesday of last week, in response to a telegram announcing the death of his oldest aunt, Mrs. Hanah Markle. Some of our people will remember her as a visitor in this section. Mr. S., returned on Friday.

Perry Romine residing on the Allen county line will have a sale of his personal property, Saturday, July 15. There will be sold horses, and other stock, all kinds of farm implements, harness, wagons, buggies, etc. Remember the place 3½ miles northwest of Leo and 2 miles east of Stirling's Corners.

A. J. Rummel, captain of George H. Cooper Camp No. 182, S. of V., at Hamilton, and Capt. Cooper, of the same place, made this office a pleasant call yesterday. They were in town on business connected with the picnic to be held at Cold Springs, Aug. 15. We extend them a cordial invitation to call again.

J. D. McAnnaly informs us he has still further perfected his sprayer, and also his preparations for killing the various insect pests. He has a separate medicine for cabbage worms, plum curculio, and potato bugs. He has associated W. C. Lockhart in the business, and they will make exhibits at all the fairs.

Elias Fisher, of Altona, one of DeKalb's pioneers, called up to see the editor Saturday. He has been in the county since 1846, and can tell some interesting stories concerning the days when locomotives did not take a rapid, headlong course across the continent. He left a liberal amount of the all-sufficient "dust" in our possession to entitle him to the COURIER till after the next president takes his seat in '92.

James Colgrove and wife of Chicago, have been visiting at Waterloo with his mother Mrs. Wallace, and on Saturday revisited Auburn after an absence of many years. He was a leading teacher in this county, and recollects having taught a year in a room in the old court house at $33 a month and states that there is little of the memory of pleasure. He has bought a ranch near Los Angeles and will engage in fruit raising.

At court, the Aldrich case is still going on. It is Jonas Aldrich vs Reub. Hubbard and another man, for civil damages for the assault made on Hubbard at Edgerton in March. Able legal talent will contest each inch of ground. It may last all next week. Aldrich's attorneys are Judge Bowersox of Bryan, Judge McClellan and W. L. Penfield. The defense have Judge Zollars of Ft. Wayne, A. J. Baxter of Butler, and John Baxter of this place.

If you lived in Fort Wayne you would purchase all your furniture and carpets of the Foster Furniture Co. Their goods are the handsomest, their assortment the largest and their prices the lowest. Because you live out of Ft. Wayne, is no reason why you should not have the advantages that accrue in that respect to the citizens of Ft. Wayne. The Foster Furniture Company in order to put you on the same basis as their home customers agree to deliver free to you, all goods purchased of them provided your bill amounts to $25 or more.

One of the saddest deaths we have recorded this year is that of the little child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borst, which died Monday morning about nine o'clock of spinal meningitis. It was one of the brightest and sweetest little boys we ever saw, and the grief stricken parents and grand parents have the deepest sympathy of all our people. Little Jay was a little boy of unusual promise, though but ten months old. The funeral was held at the residences of Mr. Borst and L. J. Miller yesterday, Wednesday, at 10 a. m. and the little one laid in its little grave filled with the sweetest of flowers in Woodlawn cemetery. Mr. Wooton conducted the services.

County teachers' institute convenes August 31. 32tf

Mrs. Hebel is repainting her residence greatly improving the appearance.

Dr. T. J. Bassett will preach the annual institute sermon.

Dr. Matheny is getting ready to put up a dwelling, on his home lot on South Main street.

Samuel Grosh of the South Side, has beautified his residence by putting down a cement sidewalk.

Part of the shed over Groscop's brick kiln northwest of town, burned last night, about one o'clock.

Mrs. Charley Wood has been ill at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Steele, but is reported better.

The new Shaffer Block has the frame work up at the front, the full two stories, and presents an imposing appearance.

Read carefully, the sidewalk ordinance. The town board is bound to keep the condition of the city at the highest point. That's right.

Dr. James Headly the distinguished lecturer and Samuel Phelps Leland the renowned traveler and lecturer will be the chief attractions in the institute lecture course. 32tf

Dr. T. J. Bassett, Dr. George Brown ex-president of the State Normal, and Sadie Tarney of the chair of methods and psychology in the state normal, will be the day instructors at the county institute. 32tf

Auburn and Butler Posts both had delegations at Detroit though only a part marched. Henry Wolf led the Auburn Drum Corps and they made a creditable appearance. We cannot just now recall all the names.

Foundation for the new store room for Boland, Brown & Culbertson's hardware store is well under way. That reminds us, that last week we omitted Mr. Boland's name from the new firm. They will make a strong team and expect to begin about Oct. 1.

E. L. Casebeer's house was entered by burglars last Thursday night. The carried off a pair of pants and three or four dollars in cash, but overlooked about $30 in bills. It is believed the family were chloroformed, as they did not wake, and felt plain symptoms of it in the morning.

The Sons of Veterans at Hamilton will give a picnic at that popular resort, on Saturday, Aug. 15, at the point known as "Cold Springs," where the fine springs rise from the ground. There will be boat rides, steamboat rides, fishing, ice cream. The visiting brethren will have ice cream free. Let everybody, far and near, turn out and have a day of pleasure with the boys at the lake.

Fatal Accident.

Daniel Anthony and family attempted to cross the Lake Shore road between Pleasant Lake and Angola, yesterday afternoon, when the south bound train that passes Auburn at 3:10, struck them, killing Mrs. Anthony and the horse. He was but slightly hurt, and the child was uninjured. He resides north of Waterloo.

Examination of Teachers.

That applicants for teacher's license, who wish to take the examination in August, may have a report of their work before the county institute convenes. Many of the trustees have requested that the examination be held Saturday August 15, instead of the usual last Saturday of the month. I have consented to comply with this request and trust that teachers and others interested in this examination will note the change from Saturday August 29, to Saturday, August 15.

AUCTIONEER.

J. C. Walters wishes to say to the people of Auburn and vicinity, that he is an experienced auctioneer, and offers his service to those who have sales, at any time when needed. Call on him at his home two miles east of Auburn or write to him here. tf

Is Beauty a Blessing?

Of the beautiful women I have known but few have attained superiority of any kind, says Anna Katharine Green in the Ladies' Home Journal. So much is expected by the woman accustomed to admiration, that she plays and palters with her fate till the crooked stick is all that is left her. This we see exemplified again and again. While the earnest, lofty, sweet smiling woman of the pale hair and doubtful line of nose, has, perhaps, one true lover whose worth she has time to recognize, an acknowledged beauty will find herself surrounded by a crowd of showy egotists whose admiration so dazes and bewilders her that she is sometimes tempted to bestow herself upon the most importunate one in order to end the unseemly struggle.

Then the incentive to education, and to the cultivation of one's special powers is lacking. Forgetting that the triumphs which have made a holiday of youth must lessen with the years, many a fair one neglects that training of the mind which gives to her who is poor in all else, an endless storehouse of treasures for her own delectation and that of those about her, long after the fitful bloom upon her handsome sister's cheek has faded with the roses of departed summer.

CERTAINLY whenever London bankers want gold they know where it can be had. Uncle Sam's boys have millions of it stuffed down in old stockings. The London bankers should keep their gold handy, however. Uncle Sam has a big crop on hand which will be sold only C. O. D.

THE utter stupidity of the New York law forbidding the newspapers to publish accounts of executions has been fully demonstrated. The only possible thing to do with such a law is to repeal it and repeal it promptly. Laws that are a dead letter are worse than no laws at all. It does not lie in the power of any legislature, State or National, to muzzle the American press.

WELL, it's a Pittsburgh girl who takes the blue-ribbon for downright, invincible, yard-wide, and indestructible affection and devotion. Carrie Duff, the daughter of a well-known attorney, stole $2,000 worth of diamonds to make good the shortage of her best young man. Both of them were arrested, and thus is love's young dream again rudely shattered.

JUDGE WILSON, who in Philadelphia sentenced Bardsley to fifteen years' imprisonment, showed remarkable strength of character. He had not only known the prisoner, but between the two there had long existed a warm friendship. If anyone thought of criticizing the Judge for allowing himself to sit in such a case, he, at least, cannot question the firmness, integrity and impartiality of the man.

IN an address which the Princess of Wales delivered at a girls' school at Sandringham that worthy lady said: "The ambition of my life has been to mind my own business." In view of the fact that she has minded it with so much success, it is really somewhat of a national calamity that her ambition is not broad enough to include her royal husband's business.

AMANDA BATEMAN, of Chicago, who was saved from drowning by the tenacity of the seat of A. T. Koehne's unmentionables, has had a novel, almost unique, experience. Amanda took long chances and so did Koehne when he attempted to rescue her, but the faithful pants, which, fast upon a nail, sustained both came out of the affair covered with glory and mud in excess of the other two parties.

THE broad thinking people of Louisinana are speaking out boldly against the lottery iniquity. They see the ruin it will work in the State in arraying itself against the sentiments of morality and civilization of the entire land, which it will antagonize. Nothing is surer than that the lottery iniquity has got to be stamped out. If the fair State of Louisiana chooses to sink with it it will be her own fault.

THE Hebrew Alliance of St. Louis, deserves high commendation for its movement toward the solution of the immigration problem. The Alliance has decided to take charge of all Hebrews of foreign birth who come to St. Louis, give them a thorough course as to the nature of the laws of the country, and make them, in every respect, thorough American citizens. This is a laudable example for other foreign-American societies to follow.

AUSTRALIA has a strip of territory lying across its center and ending on the coast of the Kimberley district of Western Australia, some 1,200 miles long and thirty wide. It is, in other words, about as big as the strip on our map which would be made by extending Pennsylvania and Virginia west to Nebraska. An expedition is just starting from the upper or Northern end of the group of lakes in South Australia, where this strip begins, and it is expected to take two years slowly passing over this unexplored tract from the central portion of the Northern territory of South Australia across into the Northern half of Western Australia, of which but little is known away from the coast. The expedition is under the leadership of David Lindsay, an old Australian explorer; it has fourteen men and camels, and it is only to cost $50,000, which seems an absurdly small sum for so large a party and so extensive a trip; but perhaps, like some other explorations, this is only a first estimate and the total will reach thrice this.

AN interesting report on the origin and ravages of the late influenza epidemic has been prepared by Dr. Parsons, an eminent English physician, and submitted to the House of Commons. Dr. Parsons arrives at quite a novel conclusion in his theory of the origin of the disease. The prevailing idea that influenza is caused by atmospheric conditions is vehemently denied by this English expert. He claims that the spread of influenza is caused by contagion; and he seeks to prove this by citing the fact that the epidemic, while at its height, was almost entirely confined to cities; rural communities being to a great degree exempted from its ravages. This can not be denied. But there is another cause why the epidemic was entirely confined to cities. The atmosphere of densely populated cities is far less pure than the clear, untainted air of the country. It may be said also that the people who live in the country, by reason of this atmospherical purity, are far less susceptible to disease than their brethren in the city.

Gray's "Elegy."

William Winter, himself a poet of high and noble impulse and always reverent and tender mood, has written of Thomas Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," these appreciative words: "What a gap there would be in the poetry of our language if this poem were absent from it! By that sublime and tender reverie upon the most important of all subjects that can engage the attention of the human mind Thomas Gray became one of the chief benefactors of his race. Those lines have been murmured by the lips of sorrowing affection beside many a shrine of buried love and hope, in many a churchyard all round the world. The sick have remembered them with comfort. The great soldier, going into battle, has said them for his solace and cheer. The dying statesman, closing his weary eyes upon this empty world, has spoken them with his last faltering accents and fallen asleep with her heavenly music in his heart. Well may we pause and ponder at the grave of this divine poet. Every noble mind is made nobler, every good heart is made better, for the experience of such a pilgrimage. In such places as these pride is rebuked, vanity is dispelled and the revolt of the passionate human heart is humbled into meekness and submission."

In Russia Women Gamble.

In no other part of the world has gambling developed to such an extent as in Russia. Like an epidemic it has seized upon the higher classes of society, chiefly the nobility and persons of leisure, who stake and lose large fortunes on games of chance, utterly regardless of consequences, which are often sad indeed. Every elegantly appointed home has its billiard and card rooms, and in the latter as many as fifteen tables may be found occupied at one time; and the play is frequently continued all through the night until daylight warns the excited people that it is time to cease.

Gambling in Russia is not confined to the male sex alone, for ladies constantly visit the clubs and are quite as reckless in their play as the father, husband, or brother, who accompanies them. During the excitement of gambling persons of both sexes indulge in cigarette smoking, and it is quite amusing to see how deftly ladies will prepare and roll the little comforters. The Lenten season is a particularly happy time for the indulgence of this pastime, as balls and many other forms of gayety are then prohibited. The tchinovniks (officials) of the Empire are inveterate gamblers, and in proportion to their means play for quite as high stakes as the nobility.—St. Louis Republic.

Correcting a Mistake.

One of the curiosities of the House of Commons, very rarely seen, was Erle Drax, for many years member of a Dorsetshire borough. Once, at a general election, on the day previous to the nomination, he put out the following address to his constituents: "Electors of Wareham! I understand that some evil-disposed person has been circulating a report that I wish my tenants, and other persons dependent upon me, to vote according to their conscience. This is a dastardly lie, calculated to injure me. I have no wish of the sort. I wish, and I intend, that these persons shall vote for me."

THEIR GAME BAULKED.

OUR QUININE MANUFACTURERS AND THEIR COMBINE.

They Wanted to Form a World's Quinine Trust—An Agent Sent to London—Failure of the Scheme—A World's Trust Impossible.

The protectionists are not willing to confess that the tariff tends to encourage trusts and combinations to control prices. Nothing, however, can be clearer than that the smaller a market the more easily it can be controlled. Prices can easily be manipulated in a single market where all producers have excellent means for finding out whether their rivals are living up to their "gentlemen's agreement." In such a narrow market meetings of manufacturers can be frequently held, and the offenders who sell below the combination's prices can be diciplined.

But when wide oceans separate manufacturers it becomes almost impossible to maintain prices through combination. An international trust is next to an impossibility. The most remarkable ventures of the kind, the two French syndicates to corner the market for copper and tin, ended most disastrously to those concerns.

A most interesting illustration of the principles here set forth is furnished in the case of our quinine manufacturers. Everybody remembers how the price of quinine has gone down since the duty was taken off in 1879. This was partly due to the abolition of the duty, but still more to the fact that the cinchona tree, from the bark of which quinine is made, is now cultivated largely in the British and Dutch East Indies.

The low price of quinine, brought about by these two causes, has not been a pleasant thing to our manufacturers; and when everybody was rushing to Congress last year to get higher duties in order to charge higher prices the quinine manufacturers—we have only three—put in an appearance to ask for a duty on quinine. One frank German among them, when asked by Mr. Carlisle whether a duty would not increase the price of quinine, bluntly and innocently replied, "We hope it would."

But the quinine men failed to get their duty, and so they cast about for other means to raise prices. A recent number of the London Chemist and Druggist reports that near the end of last year the quinine manufacturers contemplated forming a syndicate to corner the market and raise prices. "The first suggestion of these negotiations," says this paper, "proceeded from that great prolific race of 'bosses' begotten by greed out of monopoly."

The Chemist and Druggist goes on to speak of "an important-looking transatlantic visitor," who "haunted the druggists' headquarters in London for several days, the expositor of a scheme for setting at naught the laws of supply and demand." A representative of the paper quoted made efforts "to extract some drops of information from this grave seignior, but found the source of his knowedge hermetically sealed."

But this attempt to form an international quinine trust fell through, and the "grave seignior," it is reported, "recrossed the Atlantic an altogether unsuccessful negotiator."

Does anybody believe that our three quinine manufacturers would have cared a snap about this international trust if they had succeeded in getting a duty on quinine? They would have had the home market so completely under their thumbs that they would never have dreamed of sending this "grave seignior" to London to negotiate a world-wide quinine trust.

But a world trust is an impossibility; and our people will continue to buy cheap, untaxed quinine; for if our three manufacturers put up prices to an unreasonable point, foreign quinine will at once come in and bring them to their senses.

Foreign free goods mean death to home market trusts.

Senator Sherman and the Sugar Bounty.

Senator Sherman is quoted as saying that in twelve years we shall be making at least three-fourths of all the sugar we consume. If this prediction should be verified, how much will the people of this country have to pay in bounties? Our consumption of sugar last year was 1,522,000 tons, three-fourths of which would be 1,141,500 tons. The bounty of 2 cents a pound on sugar is equal to $44.80 a ton. If we were now producing three-fourths of our sugar, the yearly bounty would reach over $51,000,000.

But our consumption has been growing at the rate of over 5 per cent. a year, and if this rate of increase is maintained, we shall pay a bounty of over $90,000,000 in the year 1902. On the crop of the year 1894, the last crop on which the the McKinley bounty is to be paid, the bounty would amount to over $100,000,000.

If Senator Sherman is right it is going to be a costly business to hire people at public expense to grow sugar. If the sugar industry grows as he predicts, the total bounty to be paid on fourteen crops will amount to at least $650,000,000.

Higher Wool Prices in England.

It is a curious fact that while our growers of wool are selling their wool this year at lower prices than last year, English farmers, without any McKinley tariff to help them, are actually getting better prices. A recent number of the Kidderminster Shuttle, a leading organ of the British carpet trade, has this to say as to the market for domestic wool: "There is practically no alteration in the position of the raw material. The country fairs show that, as a rule, growers are expecting and in many instances obtaining better prices for their wool than spinners and manufacturers are able to give, the dealers having apparently more confidence in the future than manufacturers. Hence there is some speculation shown in the purchase of the new clip, which tends to keep prices decidedly firm, and in some cases a harder tone is shown."

Our protectionists are all the time assuring the farmers that "British free trade" has ruined the farmers in England; yet, it is in England, with her free trade, that farmers are getting higher prices for their wool; while in protected America, with its recently imposed McKinley wool duties, farmers have seen their wool sink in a most discouraging way.

Success of the "Whaleback."

There is general rejoicing over the successful trip of the American "whaleback" steamer Charles W. Wetmore from Detroit to Liverpool with a cargo of 95,000 bushels of wheat. As a result it is predicted that Chicago and other lake ports will at once develop a large foreign trade by direct shipment.

But there is one serious obstacle in the way. Owing to the McKinley wall a much smaller bulk of goods comes into this country than goes out. What will our "whalebacks" find to bring back to Chicago and Detroit? They cannot afford to cross the ocean with an outgoing freight if they can get no return cargo. That would make the freight charges on our wheat far too great. There must be a cargo both ways to enable the lake ports to trade profitably with Liverpool.

What shall the return cargoes be? Our farmers need woolen cloth, but McKinley has tried to prevent any coming in from Europe by imposing duties running, in many cases, above 100 per cent. The entire population of the West and Northwest would be glad to take window glass, but a duty averaging 109 per cent. or more makes it very expensive business to buy foreign glass, and the home-made glass is equally dear.

Tin-plate would certainly make good return cargoes for the "whalebacks," and is certainly needed for fruit and vegetable cans, as well as for roofing and household purposes, but McKinley slapped a duty equal to 76 per cent., in order to prevent future imports of tin-plate.

And so it runs through nearly the entire catalogue of commodities—the unreasonable and foolish attempt to break up foreign trade by high McKinley duties.

If McKinleyism were a true system, then Chicago and Duluth would never have been built on the lakes, where they are so exposed to the dangers of foreign trade; they would have been built off behind some mountain on a winter brook to escape foreign trade.

Why not use dynamite on that Welland Canal?

Bogus "McKinley Prices."

A protectionist organ points out that the price of calicoes has declined since the McKinley law took effect. It claims, for example, that the kind of calicoes known in the trade as "Eddystone fancy" fell from 6½ cents last year to 6 cents this year; and this the organ has the effrontery to claim as a "McKinley price."

It is nothing of the kind. The McKinley law left the duties on calicoes as they were under the old law, and it could therefore have had no effect on prices. But the price first quoted shows a fall of only 7.7 per cent., while cotton at the same time has fallen from 25 to 30 per cent.

	July 18, 1890.	July 18, 1891.
Price of cotton	12 3-16c	8 5-16c
Fall, per cent		31
Price of printing cloth for making calico	$3.37	$2.91
Fall, per cent		12
Cost of cotton in four yards of printing cloth, weighing one pound	12 3-16c	8 5-16c
Selling price of four yards, at above	$13.48	$11.64
Profits to capital and labor in making one pound of cloth	$1.30	$3.33
Increase, per cent		256

When an organ talks about the fall in the price of cotton goods—which is by no means general—and does not once mention the great fall in the price of cotton; when it labels the price of calicoes, "McKinley Prices," and suppresses the information that the McKinley law makes no change in the duty on the grades of cloth of which calico is made, the organ may be strengthening the faith of the weak and ignorant in the protectionist household. But men who know the facts will not be misled by the palpable falsehood.

In these hot dog-days the McKinleyites are cooking their figures with a desperation which beats their previous high record in the art of arithmetical jugglery.

How It Hits the Wrong Man.

One of the meanest things about a protective tariff is that when it stirs up retaliation in other nations this retaliation hits the wrong fellow. The men who are protected by the tariff go free, while others who have no interest whatever in protection have their foreign markets restricted by retaliatory tariffs.

France, it seems, is about to have some such retaliation administered to her as the fitting medicine for her high tariff law soon to go into operation. For some months France has been engaged in making a high tariff of the McKinley kind, laying very heavy duties on the products of Belgium and other neighboring nations. As the result of this Belgium now proposes to withhold copyright privileges from French authors. Thus the literary men of France will bear the burden of protecting French manufacturers.

In the same way, if the great Continental Customs Union of Europe carries out its reported purpose to retaliate upon us for the McKinley law by putting heavy duties on our grain, our farmers will suffer the loss of a part of their market in order to insure large profits to our manufacturers.

London Wool Prices.

The fall in the price of wool has brought out some curious explanations from the Republican press. The American Economist, the mouthpiece of the American Protective Tariff League, has put forth the most plausible explanation, and it is being used in the columns of the protectionist country papers for all it is worth.

The explanation of the Economist is that the large production of wool in Australia has caused the price of Australian wools to decline in the London market.

This is partly true in the statement but very false in the use made of it. Some Australian wools are lower in London this year than last, but not the kind that our manufacturers buy.

In speaking of purchases by American buyers at the recent sales in London, Wade's Fiber and Fabric, a journal published at Boston in the interests of our woolen manufacturing industry, says: "All accounts that we have seen, including a number of private letters, agree that for such light shrinkage foreign wools as American buyers can afford to bid for at last sales, figures, if not a slight advance, are fully sustained; but that for other heavy conditioned parcels, although equally good staple, prices are materially lower."

Cheap Sugar in Canada, Too.

Canada removed the duty on raw sugar several weeks ago, and already the Canucks are revelling in cheap sugar. The Montreal Trade Bulletin says: "Owing to cheaper sugar, people are putting down more than double the amount of preserves they have been accustomed to in former years, and the fact that we are now in the height of the preserving season helps to create an abnormally excessive inquiry. Never before in the history of the sugar trade of Canada has there been such a heavy demand as that now being experienced, and buyers would therefore do well to exercise a little patience until the large aggregation of orders at the refineries is worked off."

They are learning in Canada, too, that the removal of a tariff tax saves money to the consumers.

THE protectionist organs are jubilating over the prospect of France removing her restrictions upon American pork, and imposing a duty of $1.80 per 100 pounds instead. But why all this rejoicing, if it be true that the foreigner pays the tariff tax? Will not our farmers have to pay $1.80 on every 100 pounds of pork sent to France? That is the protectionist theory; let them stick to it now.

SINCE the McKinley law went into effect, a dealer in hardware has informed his customers that wire of which clock springs are made was taxed 3 cents per pound under the old tariff, but under the McKinley law the same is taxed $1.63 per pound, an advance over the old rate of 5,300 per cent. This is the biggest piece of McKinleyism yet reported.

IF a tariff does not raise prices, how does it protect? If it raises prices, how does it benefit the country?

THE love of other people's money is the root of the tariff evil.

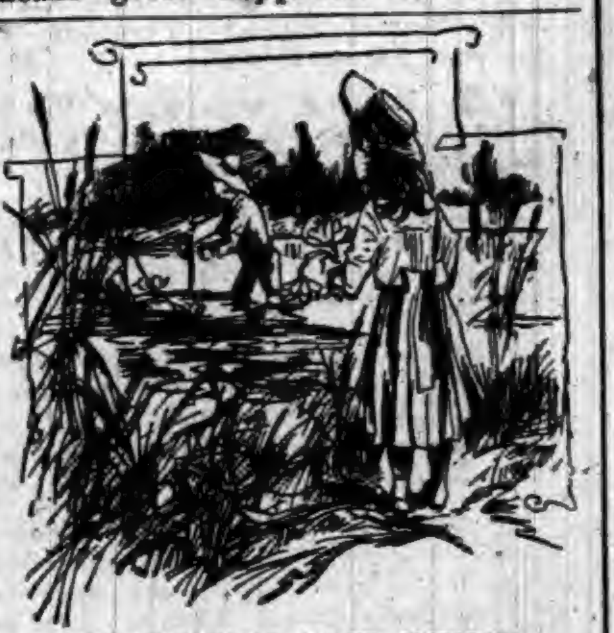
HELP FOR STREET ARABS

SENDING THE LITTLE WAIFS OF THE CITY TO THE COUNTRY.

How the Children of the Crowded Tenement Districts in Chicago Are Being Helped to Enjoy a Short Play-Spell in the Green Fields—Some Incidents of Their Visits.

[CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.]

An organization to give away fresh air, to hand around sunshine, to distribute glimpses of blue skies and whiffs of perfume from new-mown fields. That reads like superfluous kindness to people who live among such things these summer days, but it means great happiness to the thousands who would get the pure air and the sunshine no other way.



THE FIRST VISIT TO THE COUNTRY.

One of these dispensers of Nature's gifts is the "Country Week" instituted by a leading Chicago newspaper. Chicago has hundreds of thousands of poor children who know very little of the beauty of the country. Some of them don't know the difference between a saw-buck and a milking-stool. Thousands of them never saw blackberries growing, and a good many of them wouldn't know a blackberry if they saw it, so seldom do luxuries come to them.

Every summer, "Country Week" parties are sent out by the Fresh Air fund. Some of the excursionists have developed an ignorance of country life that would be amusing if it were not pathetic. One little fellow who was sent to a Michigan home for his visit saw a brood of chickens for the first time. The little arab had lost his father and mother when he was a baby, and had been adopted by neighbors. When he saw all the chicks following one mother it puzzled him. He watched them a long time, trying to figure out the problem. Finally his face lighted up, and he exclaimed, triumphantly, "Oh, I know now! She adopted them all!"

His solution was so full of meaning to the motherless wanderer that the kind woman who entertained him had not the heart to undeceive him, and that boy probably thinks to this day that the hen with the big family was scratching and clucking for charity's sake.

The list of such experiences is almost endless. Surrounded at home by poverty, shut in by city walls, and viewing the heavens through clouds of factory smoke, the children hardly know what to do with the seemingly inexhaustible riches of the country. To have all the room one wants; to walk on carpets of grass with no one to remonstrate; to see broad horizons of blue, bounded by leafy trees and green hills—that is the "country-weeker's" vacation. And the delight does not end there. The visit is an education, an initiation into the best of Nature's teachings, and afterwards a beautiful memory to be carried through a life of care and toil.

The plan of the "Country Week" is very simple. People who have country homes within 150 miles of Chicago volunteer to entertain the boys and girls or their mothers. Other people send money to the fresh air fund.

All the money that is contributed goes toward sending some youngster where he can be better and happier than he ever thought possible. It is a spot cash sympathy company, unlimited. The books are open to subscriptions for shares in any amount from one cent to a million dollars; there are no assessments, no losses, no officers, no anything but big dividends of happiness. And the great beauty of the plan is that the dividends begin the minute you subscribe.

Crushed Steel.

Crushed steel is said to be coming into use for cutting stone. It is made by quenching very high carbon steel in cold water from an excessively high temperature, such as would overheat steel for most purposes. This renders it not only hard, but rather brittle, so that it is possible to pulverize it. It is crushed in a stamp mill, and sifted closely to size. It is said to be not only cheaper, but much more effective than emery, giving a better polish and quicker, and lasting much longer.

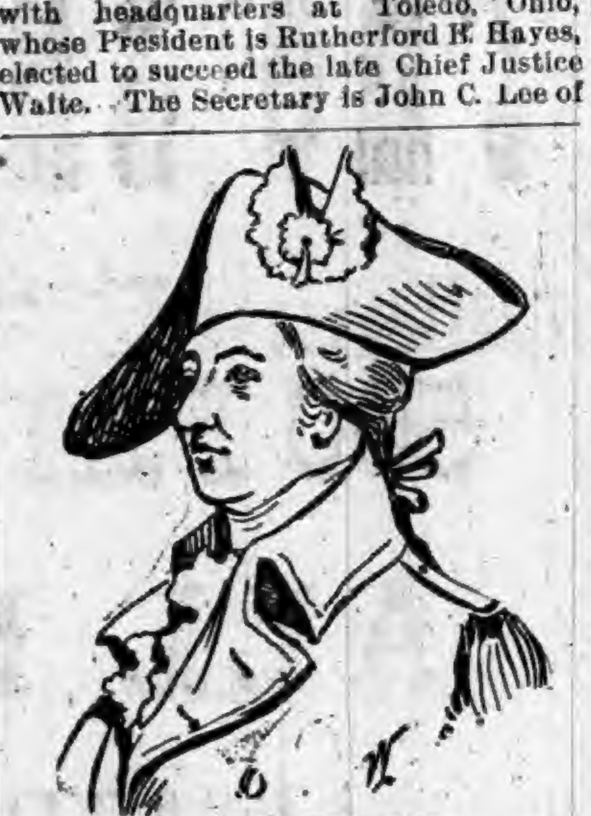
SOME HISTORIC SPOTS.

WHERE THE INDIANS FOUGHT TO HOLD THE NORTHWEST.

Battle Grounds of the Wars of Mad Anthony Wayne and William Henry Harrison—An Association to Erect Monuments Upon the Sites of the Old Forts in the Maumee Valley—Neglected Graves of the Heroes of Perry's Victory.

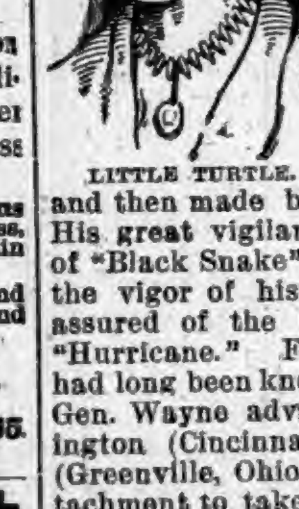
THE national movements to mark by appropriate monuments points of historical interest have suggested to the citizens of Northwestern Ohio and Northeastern Indiana the preservation of the sites of the battle fields and forts along the Maumee River rendered conspicuous in the early history of the Northwest Territory by the memorable campaign of Gen. Wayne against the Indians and the subsequent campaigns of the war of 1812. Some time ago, says a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, there was organized the Maumee Valley Monumental Association, an organization with headquarters at Toledo, Ohio, whose President is Rutherford B. Hayes, elected to succeed the late Chief Justice Waite. The Secretary is John C. Lee of Toledo. The Vice Presidents are R. S. Robertson, Fort Wayne, Ind.; S. H. Cately, Delta, Ohio; R. C. Lemmon, Toledo. R. B. Mitchell, Maumee, Ohio, is Treasurer. Other officers are Thomas Dunlap, Toledo; Daniel F. Cook, Maumee; J. Austin Scott, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Asher Cook, Perrysburg, Ohio; Samuel Young, Toledo; Reuben B. Mitchell, Maumee; Joel Foot, Tontogany, Ohio; F. B. Randall, Fort Wayne; and Foster R. Warren, Sylvania, Ohio.



GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE.

The association has been engaged for five years in efforts to secure possession of the most important historical points, such as forts and battle grounds in the Maumee Valley, and to have them marked by suitable monuments. It has been decided that the following are worthy of commemoration: Fort Industry, the site of Toledo: Fort Miami, near Maumee City; Fort Defiance, at Defiance; Fort Meigs, near Perrysburg; Fort Wayne, at Fort Wayne; the battlefield of Fallen Timbers, near Waterville; and the old burial-ground on Put-in-Bay Island, in Lake Erie.

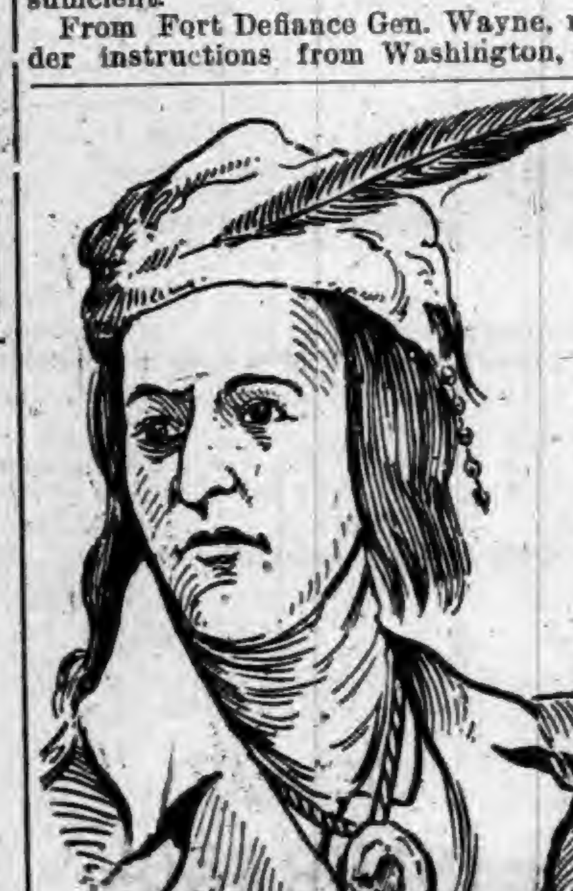
Of these forts Industry, Miami, Defiance, Meigs, and Wayne and the battlefield of Fallen Timbers were strategic points or points of defense or of offense in the victorious campaign of "Mad Anthony" Wayne against the Indians in 1794, and all figured conspicuously in the war of 1812. Their location is correctly indicated on the map above.



LITTLE TURTLE.

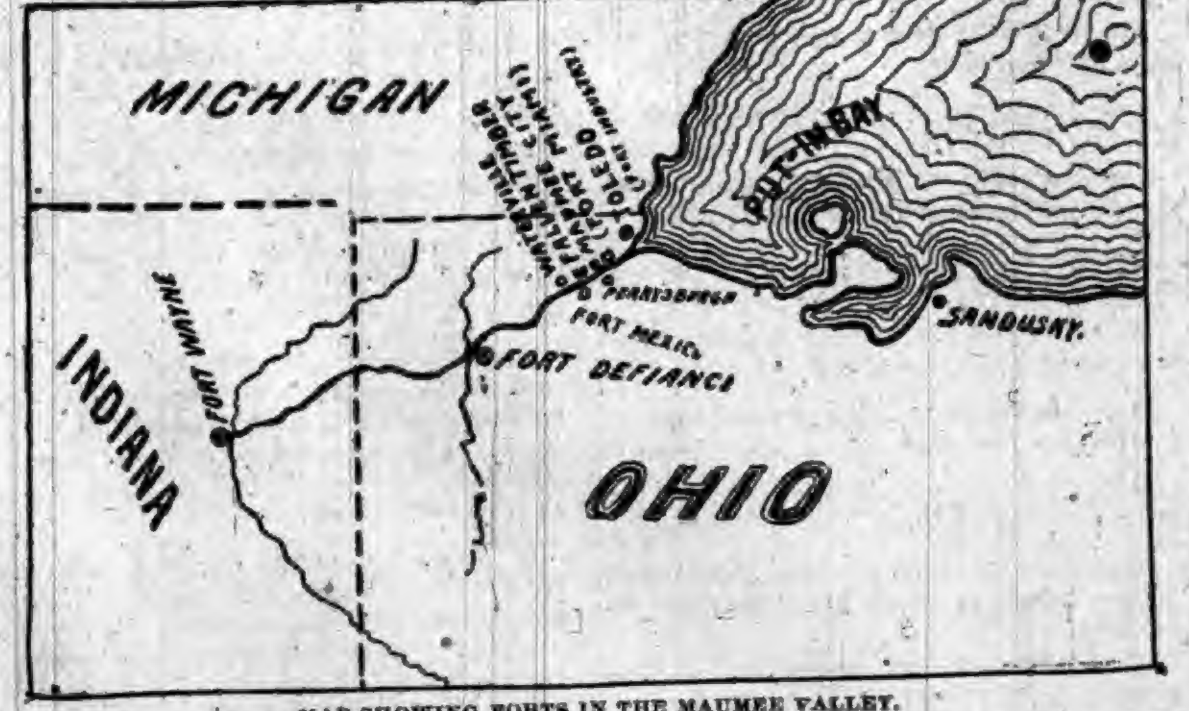
After the defeat of Gen. St. Clair, Nov. 4, 1790, the Indians, inflamed by hatred and encouraged by successes, committed the most outrageous depredations and the grossest barbarities on the settlers. Unsuccessful campaigns against the savages only stimulated their carnage, and in 1793 Gen. Anthony Wayne was charged with abating it. He was a cautious soldier who waited for advantage and then made bold dashes for victory. His great vigilance won him the name of "Black Snake" from the Indians, and the vigor of his fighting when he was assured of the advantage another of "Hurricane." For the same trait he had long been known as "Mad Anthony." Gen. Wayne advanced from Fort Washington (Cincinnati) to Fort Greenville (Greenville, Ohio), whence he sent a detachment to take possession of the position lost by St. Clair. This was accomplished and a fort built called Fort Recovery. Wayne then continued his advance against the village of the Miami tribe of Indians, and Aug. 8, 1794, reached the confluence of the Auglaize and the "Miami of the Lakes," now the Maumee River, where he erected Fort Defiance, giving it a name appropriate to the conditions of its building and destined to perpetuity in the name of the present city on the site.

The traces of this fort are still well defined. It is situated at the angle of the Maumee and Auglaize Rivers, and has been subject to some injury by the erosion of the waters, which have washed away portions of the northern and eastern salients, and the point is slowly receding, though many years will elapse before its destruction is complete. It is proposed to mark the spot by a granite monument with suitable inscription, for which it is estimated $5,000 will be sufficient.



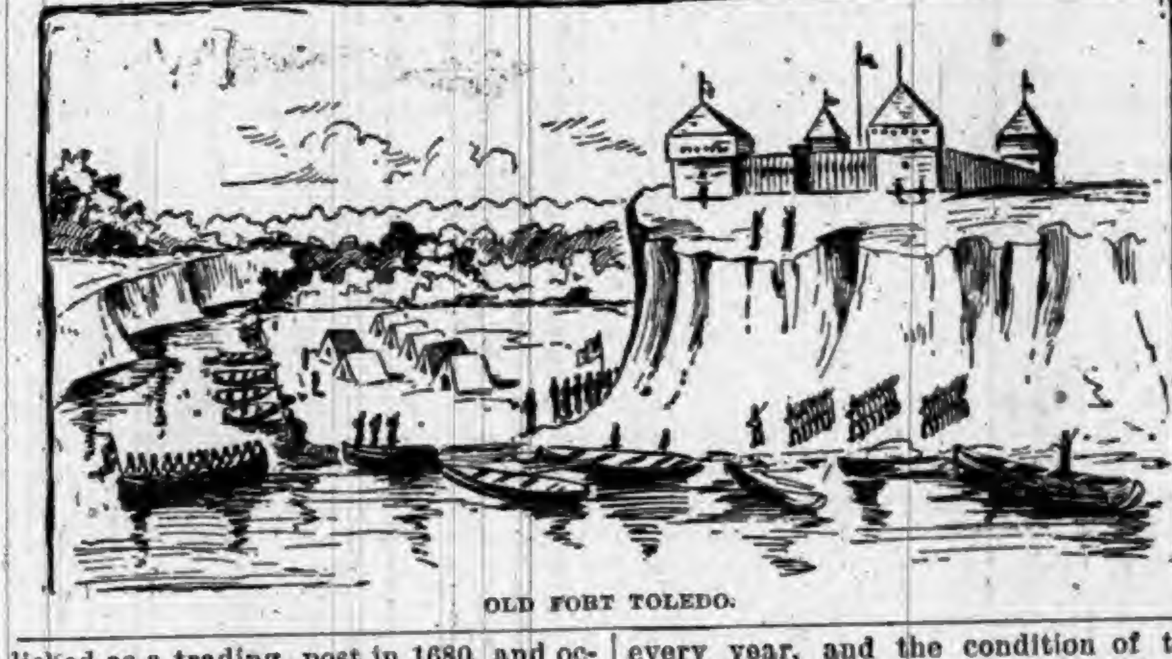
TECUMSEH.

From Fort Defiance Gen. Wayne, under instructions from Washington, offered the Indians peace. In a council of Indians Little Turtle, a chief who is said to have possessed a degree of statesmanship that would have won him fame in diplomatic circles of European courts, advised peace. His counsels were overthrown by the younger chiefs, who boasted of previous victories. Turtle cautioned them against the new warrior that the Father at Washington had sent against them, but they were obstinate and voted for war. Gen. Wayne advanced and pitched his camp near Waterville. The next day (Aug. 20, 1794,) he gave battle to the Indians, who were intrenched behind some trees that had been prostrated by a tornado, whence the name of the Battle of Fallen Timbers. Wayne came upon the savages like the wind that had laid low the forest, his soldiers partaking of his own irresistible courage. It was this battle that won for Wayne the cognomen of "Che-no-tin" or the Hurricane. This battlefield lies on the river and is cultivated for farming purposes. There are about twelve and one-third acres that it is proposed to purchase at an estimated cost of $100 per acre, and erect at a conspicuous point a granite monument, so as to bring the total cost within $5,000.



MAP SHOWING FORTS IN THE MAUMEE VALLEY.

Gen. Wayne pursued the Indians even under the guns of the British Fort Miami, but passed on down the river to the mouth of Swan Creek, where he constructed a military fort, which, owing to the industry of his army in its construction, he named Fort Industry. This fort Wayne garrisoned and it was occupied for a number of years. Its dimensions were about 200 by 150 feet, and its site is now the busiest part of the city of Toledo, at the intersection of Monroe street and Summit avenue. All trace of it was long ago obliterated, but the fact of its location at the point indicated is preserved in the designation of a block of buildings named Fort Industry Block. It is proposed to mark the spot by the erection of a granite monument with a suitable inscription. If the city will give the privilege of the use of the street corner for the purpose it is estimated the monument can be put in position for $5,000.

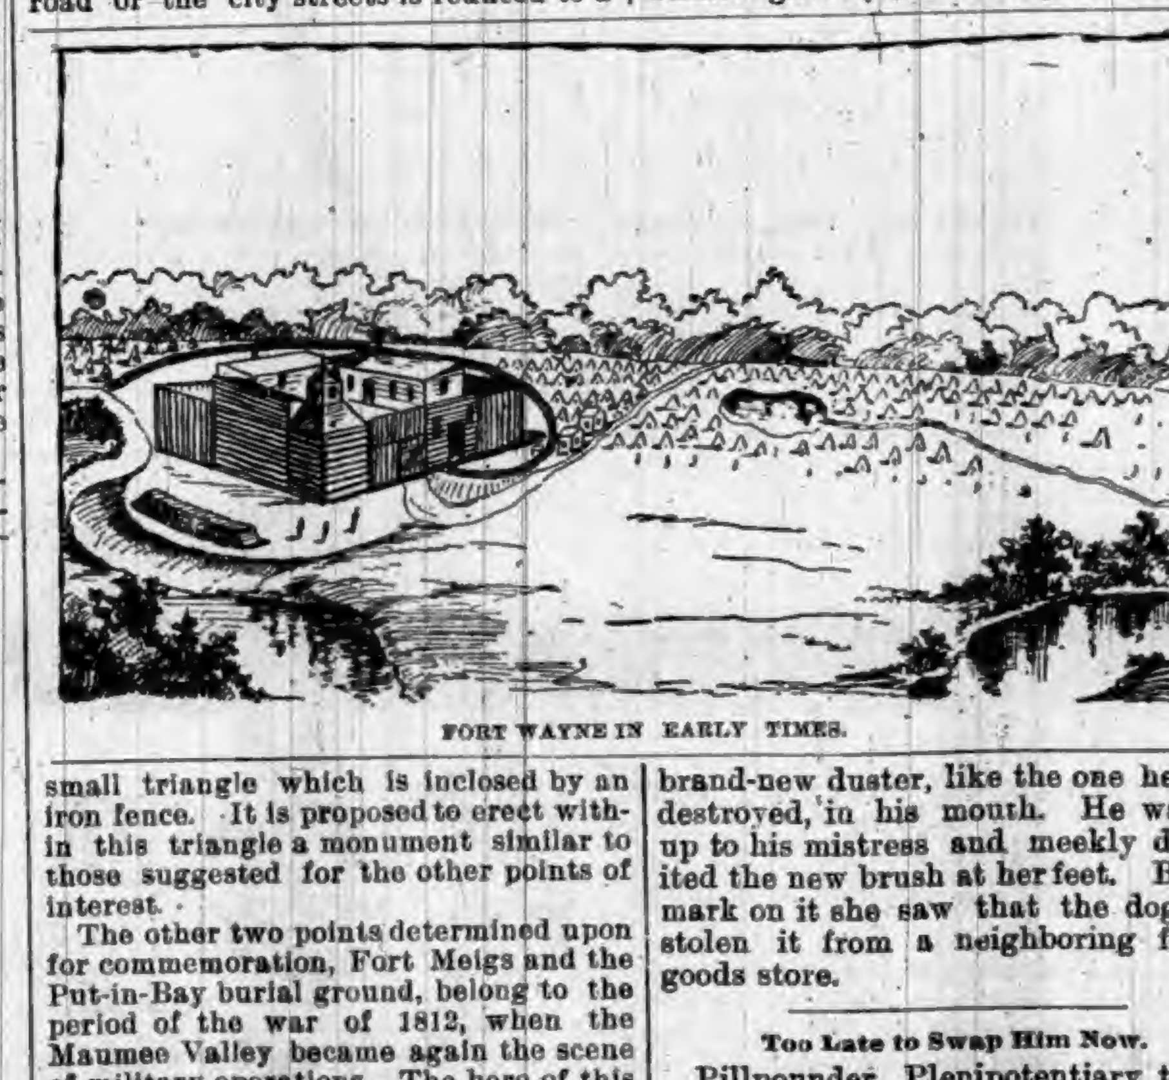


OLD FORT TOLEDO.

Fort Miami, which was first established as a trading post in 1680, and occupied for military purposes subsequently by the British, and abandoned by them after the treaty of 1795, is the oldest of all these historical points. The northeastern angle of the work and a portion of each adjoining curtain, together with the greater part of the demilune in advance of the northern front, are still in a fair state of preservation. The river front has been destroyed. The site is part of the plat of Maumee City, occupying about five and a half acres. Part of it is orchard. It is estimated that the site can be purchased for $2,500, and a $5,000 monument in granite will suffice to mark the location of the fort.

Upon the completion of Fort Industry General Wayne led his army back up the river to the village of the Miamis, and there, on Oct. 22, a fort having been completed, fifteen rounds of cannon were fired and the fort named Fort Wayne, and so the present city of Fort Wayne, Ind., was begun. The fort was located at the confluence of the St. Joe and St. Mary's Rivers, forming the Maumee on the highest land in the State of Indiana, and this has given the name of "Summit City" to the city now there. It overlooks the scene of Harmar's defeat in 1790. Wayne then returned to Greenville Ohio., where he represented the United States in the treaty negotiations of 1795.

A considerable part of the site of the old fort belongs to the city of Fort Wayne, the remainder being now occupied by the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad. Except the well no trace of the fort now exists, and the part of the site not occupied by the railroad or the city streets is reduced to a small triangle which is inclosed by an iron fence. It is proposed to erect within this triangle a monument similar to those suggested for the other points of interest.



FORT WAYNE IN EARLY TIMES.

The other two points determined upon for commemoration, Fort Meigs and the Put-in-Bay burial ground, belong to the period of the war of 1812, when the Maumee Valley became again the scene of military operations. The hero of this campaign was Gen. William Henry Harrison, who in February, 1813, erected and established Fort Meigs, ten miles from Fort Industry. While the work was in progress two unsuccessful attacks were made by Tecumseh. Gen. Harrison and Tecumseh had first met in arms at the battle of Fallen Timbers, and they met again here, each commanding. Tecumseh is described as "one of the most splendid specimens of his tribe, celebrated for their physical proportions and fine forms—tall, athletic and manly—dignified, graceful, the beau ideal of an Indian chief." The victory was with Gen. Harrison, and Tecumseh was killed during the war. The outlines and works of Fort Meigs are nearly all preserved, and no plow had been permitted to run over the graves of the dead. It is embraced in the farm of Michael and Timothy Hayes, who for the twenty years of their ownership have not permitted any desecration of the graves, of which there are several hundred, almost wholly unmarked. They contain the names of those who were killed in the battle, who died during its occupation, and those who were killed in the attack on the British batteries at Fort Miami, across the river.

The area of land necessary to include the fort and the graves is about fifty-five acres, valued at $100 an acre. The works themselves are in such a good state of preservation as to constitute their own best monument, and it is proposed only to purchase the land, erect one large monument in Fort Meigs to cost $10,000, and three others at $5,000 each to mark the burial places, making a total of $25,000. Fort Meigs was named in honor of General Meigs, but he selected for the village just east the name of Perrysburg, in commemoration of the hero of the naval victory on Lake Erie.

On the 10th of September, 1813, Commodore Perry, commanding the American fleet on Lake Erie, fought the British near the island of West Sister and captured the entire fleet, with all officers and men, but after a bloody fight and with much loss of men. He announced to Gen. Harrison, commanding the Army of the Northwest, "We have met the enemy and they are ours." He buried his dead on the Island of Put-in Bay, now one of the most important ports on Lake Erie. This burial-ground is about sixty feet from the shore of the lake, and in its center stands a willow tree, at the foot of which a rough block of stone is said to mark the exact location of the graves. Some years ago, by voluntary contribution, a circular enclosure of wooden posts connected by a chain was put up, but the posts have rotted and the enclosure is broken. Put-in Bay is visited by hundreds of thousands of people every year, and the condition of this burial ground is a reproach and shame to the care and generosity of the nation for which the dead there buried fought and gave up their lives. The burial ground is included in an area which was conveyed by Mr. J. De Rivera to the corporation in trust for the public. The nature of the conveyance is such as to assure the spot against obliteration, but no steps have been taken to specially mark it. It is proposed to inclose it with an iron chain fence of neat design and replace the rough block by a small granite shaft suitably inscribed. The improvement indicated would cost about $2,500.

To carry out all these plans of the association a bill was introduced into the United States Senate by Senator Sherman calling for an appropriation sufficient to preserve these old landmarks of the early history of the country as indicated above. The total cost would be $60,500. Recommendations in accord with the plans of the association have been made to the War Department by Bvt. Brig. Gen. Poe, Colonel of Engineers, and favorably indorsed by Brig. Gen. Casey, Chief of Engineers.

He Was a Wise Brute.

Mrs. F. W. Robinson, of New Haven, Conn., has a black spaniel that abstracted a feather duster from the sitting-room and took it out in the yard to play with. During his frolic the feathers were all torn out. Mrs. Robinson took the handle away and gave the dog a severe whipping, at the same time showing him the featherless handle. About an hour afterward the dog walked gravely into the yard with a brand-new duster, like the one he had destroyed, in his mouth. He walked up to his mistress and meekly deposited the new brush at her feet. By the mark on it she saw that the dog had stolen it from a neighboring fancy-goods store.

The Naughty Doll.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

My dolly is a dreadful care—
Her name is Miss Amandy;
I dress her up and curl her hair
And feed her taffy candy.
Yet, heedless of the pleading voice
Of her devoted mother,
She will not wed her mother's choice,
But says she'll wed another.

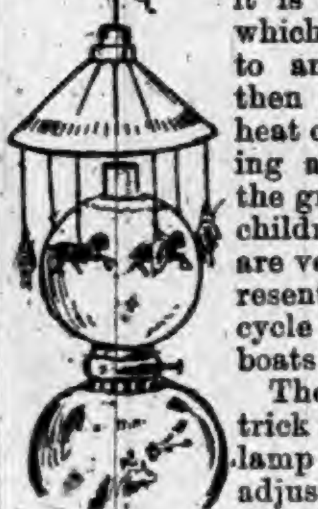
I'd have her wed the china vase—
There is no Dresden rarer;
You might go searching every place
And never find a fairer;
He is a gentle, pinkish youth—
Of that there's no denying—
Yet when I speak of him, forsooth,
Amandy falls to crying!

She loves the drum—that's very plain—
And scorns the vase so clever,
And weeping vows she will remain
A spinster doll forever!
The protestations of the drum
I am convinced are hollow:
When once distressing times should come,
How soon would ruin follow.

Yet all in vain the Dresden boy
From yonder mantel woos her—
A mania for that noisy toy,
The noisy drum, imbues her!
In vain I wheel her to and fro
And reason with her mildly;
Her waxen tears in torrents flow,
Her sawdust heart beats wildly.

I'm sure that when I'm big and tall
And wear long trailing dresses
I sha'n't encourage beaux at all
Till mamma acquiesces;
Our choice will be a suitor then
As pretty as the vase is—
Oh, how we'll hate the noisy men
With whiskers on their faces!

The "Flying Dutchman."



One of the most cunning novelties ever introduced abroad for the amusement of our little ones is that illustrated by our cut. It is a carousal, or "Flying Dutchman," as it is commonly called, which can be adjusted to any lamp, and is then propelled by the heat of the flame, turning around swiftly, to the great delight of the children. The figures are very handsome, representing horsemen, bicycle riders, pleasure boats and large ships.

The ingenious little trick is clamped to the lamp chimney, the flag adjusted, and the carousal fitted over the support in the center. The lamp must be lighted first and the flame turned down until the device has been adjusted. When the light is turned up the device will immediately go around the shade. When taken of the flame must again be lowered to allow it to cool off before removing it.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The above sign is prominently displayed over one of the desks in the office of the United States Express Company, at Fourth and Vine streets. A bright-eyed, well-dressed young shaver—he couldn't have been more than 6 years old—eyed it intently for a few minutes yesterday, spelling out the words in his unskilled, childish way. Their import gradually dawned upon him and he boldly approached the cashier.

"I want a money order," he said.

"How large a one, my boy?" the clerk inquired, benignantly.

"Well, let's see," pondered the little fellow. "I want to buy a hat, a drum, some candy for mamma, and some candy for myself. I guess $10 will be enough."

He fished through his pockets and triumphantly placed a nickel and three coppers before the astonished clerk. "Give it to me right away, won't you!"

It took ten minutes to convince the child that nothing less than $10.08 would buy $10 at that office. His disappointment was partially smothered by one of the gray-haired attaches of the office, who slipped some candy and an orange into the youthful financier's hands.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

How to Make Clear Coffee and Tea.

To make clear coffee, one must have a good pot, with a made filterer of a small piece of muslin, and fresh coffee.

Many people consider it too much trouble to filter their coffee; but I think, after using the filterer once, they will never be without it again.

First, have a thin ring, three-fourths of an inch deep, to fit the top of the coffee-pot. The ring must have perforations, one-half of an inch apart, by means of which the muslin filterer is attached. This filterer is a bag, made of medium-weight muslin, sloping to a point. It should be at least four inches deep. After sewing it firmly to the ring, put your fresh, ground coffee into the bag and pour boiling water over it, using the same amount of both water and coffee as when not using the bag. Do not use water that has been standing around, or that has boiled before, as it is stale, and to make good tea or coffee, fresh water should be boiled on a quick fire.

From three to four minutes is the time coffee should boil, not simmer. After removing from the fire, let it stand a few moments to settle.

If the above directions are closely followed, the result will be a delicious brown beverage. The same bag should not be used too long, as it takes but a few minutes to make one.

In making tea, many people make the mistake of letting it stand too long. Black tea should be boiled, and green tea drawn. As soon as the black tea bubbles up, it is done. Green tea should be made with very hot water, and allowed to simmer on the back of the stove. When the water is deeply colored, it is done. Do not use cold water, as the delicate flavor is lost while waiting to boil. If green and black tea are used mixed, it may be either boiled or drawn; but it is more often boiled.

A muslin filterer may also be used in making tea, as it keeps the leaves from forcing their way through the strainer into the cup.

Colored Mortality.

An Austin colored party named Jake was very late a few days ago, in getting down to the store. His employer, Col. Allspice, rebuked Jake in somewhat severe language.

"I want you to understand this trifling will never do. If you can't get down to your work in time, I'll hire somebody who can."

"Boss, don't be hard on me," and the Negro's eyes filled with tears.

"Why, what's the matter with you? Anybody sick?"

"Sic! I don't know which am gwinter die fust, my wife or my mudder."

"I am sorry I spoke so harshly as that. I didn't know it was as bad as that. We won't need you about the store to-day."

"Thank you, boss. Thank you kindly," and off he went.

Next morning Col. Allspice asked Jake what he meant by saying that his wife and mother were dying, when he had seen both on the street the day before?

"Dyin'," exclaimed Jake, opening his mouth wide enough to admit of a coffee mill being thrown into it, and elevating his eyebrows in amazement.

"Yes, dying. You said they were dying, and half an hour after you left your wife came here to see if you had drawn your wages for last month."

"I nebber said dey was dying. Ef you was ter see de way dey opens dar moufs and taks in chunks of bacon, you wouldn't 'spec dem ob dying. I bleeve I did say I didn't know which of 'em was gwinter die fust, and I don't know that yet; deys bofe got sich good appetites—I knows one ob 'em got ter die fust, but—"

Here Col. Allspice interrupted the orator with an ax helve, and the business relations heretofore existing between them have been severed.—Texas Siftings.

Woe to the Conquered.

The Romans cried "Væ Victis!" "Woe to the conquered!" at their triumphs. To-day many of us are being conquered—our peace, our rest and daily appetite wrested from us by that invader of the stomach, dyspepsia. Succor we sue for from a hundred sources. Temporary relief we sometimes obtain. But a hearty meal, the simplest indiscretion in diet, and the Protean imp returns with redoubled vigor to torment us. A persistent use of the great anti-dyspeptic and regulating tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is best calculated to drive into permanent banishment every form of indigestion, temporary or chronic. No less efficacious is it for malaria, biliousness, constipation, rheumatism, kidney and bladder ailments. This remedy of specific utility and many uses overcomes them all. 'Tis a safeguard, too, against the effects of temperature apt to revive an attack of "La Grippe."

Why Big Men Have Little Wives.

There is a very general and ancient impression that big men in choosing wives prefer small women. At first glance this would appear to be true, because the number of big men with little wives is certainly in an overwhelming majority as we see them. In the five years I have held my office I have learned a thing or two through the medium of the marriage license office, and it is my impression that it is not that big men prefer little women, but that little women prefer big men, and it is the experience of the world-wise that what a woman wants and starts out to get she generally captures.—Globe Democrat.

It was the property of Mrs. Kaler's grandmother, Mrs. Betsey Shibles, of Thomaston. Her mother was a sister to Daniel Webster. This dress was worn when she went to Gen. Knox's funeral.—Portland (Me.) Argus.

My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I ached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

Age comes to every man, but fate
Is kind to woman fair
For when she reaches twenty-eight
She stops right then and there.

How to Succeed.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck, but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nervine, discovered by the great specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits, and hysteria. Trial bottles and fine book of testimonials free at F. E. Davenport. 5

One of the rarest pleasures in the world is to hear a friend say something good about you when he does not know you are listening.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any throat, lung or chest trouble try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's 5

The first step often shakes and starts a man
When he would climb ambition's lofty stair;
But it never tries him like a last step does
When in the dark the last step isn't there.

A Splendid Horse Medicine.

Chamberlain's Immediate Relief has proven itself to be a great remedy for diseases among horses, and has been found especially effective in the treatment of colic. Read the following testimonial.

Millington, Ill., Feb. 6, 1888.

I have used the immediate Relief for horse medicine with great success, and have witnessed three horses die of colic simply for want of it

According to history Pocahontas did not believe in clubs. She prevented Capt. Smith from joining one.

A Fatal Mistake.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach, and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary, in his new book on "Heart Disease," which may be had free at F. E Davenport's, who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulders, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His restorative nervine cures headache, fits, etc. 5

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1852.

We grow old unconsciously.—Time's touches are gentle but durable, and they are accepted tranquilly, We are not alarmed when the hair gradually turns grey and our faculties become enfeebled and the reminiscinces of the aged know nothing of passing years.

We read the names of marriages in 1852 and fancy speeds backward and recalls early friends in their strong manhood and womanhood and poverty with content, when hand in hand, these people joined in the simple, solemn ceremony before the justice or minister and then quietly began the new life in the log cabin, devoid of ornament or convenience, but happily, the abode of faith, hope and happiness in a degree not excelled in these days of mechanical and artistic appliances and adornment.

There were no sewing machines, gasoline stoves, kerosine, lamps and organs, but there were spinning wheels, looms, fire-places, candles and dulcimers and melodeans.

There were home-spun clothes, home-carpets and in the court house wonderfully contrasting with the electric lights and natural gas of the present, the county officials were content with stove and candles. In 1852, John McCune, then county recorder presented his bill before the county commissioners and was allowed $2 81 for candles for his office. In the garrets, the old wheels are thick with cobwebs. Few like Shoudel, of Jackson, make a business of weaving rag carpets and the homes are few where the girls have no organ and the boys no buggy.

One cannot but observe how closely those early inter-marriages connected the families till all became, some nearly, some more distantly, related to each other, and the words "uncle, aunt, grandpap or grandma" heard on occasion of an old settlers' reunion are rightly bestowed.

We have spoken of the Methodist and Presbyterian societies which had become established in meeting houses and already made a creditable progress beyond the pioneer stage. In 1852, a third denomination was organized in Auburn and its founder still lives honored and respected by the community, to enjoy a full measure of his early enterprise.

The history of the Baptist church dates almost co-eval with the first settlement of Dekalb county. Pioneers together built the little log school house, where week days, school was kept and on the Sabbath, creeds were affirmed, convictions experienced and whence, to some convenient stream, converts were escorted to pass by the portal of immersion within the church.

Here and there in the township, log meeting houses were raised and long served their purpose, and later crumbled into ruins and passed into forgetfulness.

The first regular Baptist church organized in this county was known as the "Cedar Creek church." The house of worship was a log building located about one mile south of the present village of Corunna. The date of organization was in 1841 or '42. Deacon William Conly, who afterward became a minister was prominent among its early members.

Calvin Calkin, T. D. Daily and wife and several sons and daughters were other members of the society. The pastors of the church at various times were Elders P. H. Evans, William N. Welker, A. Town and others. This church prospered for a goodly number of years, but now has no visible existence.

The next church organized was within the bounds of Wilmington township and had its origin in the year 1844. Its formation was largely owing to the zealous efforts of Elders A. Town and R. Speer.

James R. Cooper donated land for a church site so long as it would be used for religious purposes. A log meeting house was raised having a capacity for fully three hundred people.

Among the first members of this church, are found the names of Richard and Dewitt Hicks, Harvey and William Haskins, Mrs. Haines and S. B. Ward and wife. Of others who connected themselves with the church soon after its organization were G. R. Baker and wife, S. Baker and wife, E. W. Fosdick and mother and two sisters, and S. B. Mead and wife. The last named was the first settled pastor of the church, his pastorate continuing about two years when he removed to Michigan and thence to Iowa.

Rev. S. B. Ward succeeded Rev. Meade in pastoral care of the church until he moved to Auburn in 1852. At this time Elders Baker and Whitehead held a series of meetings in Auburn and a Baptist church was organization in town. Owing to the fact that many members of the Wilmington church united to form this church in Auburn, that society practically dissolved. Occasionally meetings were held by Baptists in the log building and the Disciples for two years held regular services in it, under the preaching of Elders Randall Faurot and James Badsell. Finally in 1861, the house having served its purpose was abanded and torn down.

On August 13, 1852 the brethren met at the old court house to take into consideration the propriety of organizing a Baptist church in the town of Auburn.

At this meeting W. W. Welker was moderator and S. B. Ward clerk. The purport of the meeting was presented by Joseph Wolsey, as an initiatory step towards the forming of a church in Auburn.

An organization was effected on Sept. 15. Letters had been meantime obtained from the parent church and were presented by Joseph Wolsey, Jacob Hicks, John Thomas, Isaac Kelley, G. R Baker, Philo Sanford, Ann Thomas, Vesta M Ward, Hannah Baker, Sarah Kelley, Eliza Draggoo, Harriet Sanford, S. B. and Laura Ward, John Thomas Jr., Sophia Lumford. Eliza Ashleman and Sarah J. Housel, of Auburn.

These parties constituted the original membership of the first Baptist church in Auburn. At this meeting G. R. Baker was appointed deacon and S. B. Ward clerk.

Elder Ward became the first pastor and Elder A. Town was his successor for a short time, but then moved west taking with him a large number of members. This resulted in the suspension of church work and finally to the disbanding of the church.

Having no building of their own, the meetings had been held at the court house and at the Methodist and Presbyterian churches.

SECTION II.

And it is further ordered and ordained, by said Board of Trustees, that the sidewalks along the ends and sides of said lots above specified, shall be by the owners of said lots, excavated or filled, as the case may be, to within two inches of the established grade line (which is a direct line from one street crossing or alley crossing to another) to the width of——feet and that said planking or paving requird by this ordinance, shall be placed so that the surface thereof shall be on the true grade, and the inner side or edge thereof, one foot from the ends or sides of said lots, respectively, as the case may be, and be five feet wide. To plank said sidewalks there shall be used four stringers laid lengthwise, with said streets, of live oak timber, not less than five inches wide and three inches thick, to be set on edge, and the earth to be graded up the sides of the stringers so as to embed them therein. The plank must be of sound oak timber, not less than 1½ inches thick and not more than four inches wide, to be firmly nailed crosswise on said stringers with two tenpenny nails at each bearing on said stringers, and within 4 inches of each end of each plank, so that the end of no plank shall protrude more than two inches over the stringer.

SECTION III.

And it being the opinion of said Board of Trustees that the public convenience and safety requires that the said walks on the east end of said lot No. 54, in the original plat of said town owned by Emily Dills, and on west end of lot No. 110, in said plat, owned by Mr. and Mrs. John F. Aber should be paved by the construction of a cement or stone walk, instead of a plank walk, the same is so ordered to be done by the said owners, respectively, to the width of five feet, on the proper grade, as aforesaid, of the same material as is being used in the construction of other cement walks on Main street in said town.

SECTION IV.

All of said sidewalks shall be completed, in the manner aforesaid, by the 15th day of Septemper, A. D, 1891, and in case of the refusal or failure of any owner or owners of said lots to so complete said sidewalks within said time, the marshal of said town shall proceed to cause the same to be graded, paved and planked as by this ordinance required, and as authorized by sections 3,259 and 3,360, of the Revised Statutes of the state of Indiana, of 1881.

SECTION V.

And it is further ordered and ordained that this ordinance be published in one of the public newspapers in said town at once, and that it shall take effect ten days after such publication.

Passed and adopted by said Board, in regular session this 3d day of August, 1891.

ATTEST: T. G. MATHENY,
Pres't Town Board.

A PLEASING PICTURE.

Possibly she has just received the ten volumes of the latest revised

and is glancing over the vast storehouse of knowledge it opens up to her. Possibly she is a student and needs its pages to help her over many a difficult place. Possibly she is a member of a literary society and has a very interesting lesson to learn and have ready by the date of the next meeting. She is surprised and evidently pleased to find how easily, with the aid of the new Britannica, she masters the lesson. Everything is within easy reach and she does not have to hunt around for some book on a particular subject, only to find at last that has not got it. And she don't have to go off and borrow one. As it is valuable to her in her literary work, so it will prove with the minister, lawyer, teacher and all other students. We shall say more of this hereafter. A few more sets only, and on easy terms and at a low price, at this office.

Give Proper Credit.

During the years we have been in Auburn, we have heard several of our citizens criticised in rather an unfriendly way, when some of them did not in our opinion deserve it. Among those who got a share of this, were a number of our heaviest capitalists. People sometimes speak without thinking, and frequently without a full knowledge of the conditions they are criticising. A number of the most recently built business rooms in Auburn have called these things to mind. We have heard C. C. Shaffer criticized and fault found with him, but the fine block he is now building, and those he had built previous to that, are a sufficient answer. We wish there were more men as able and as willing. Give him full credit. James Draggoo is another. Look at the fine suite of rooms he has built south of the public square making with the Sheets room, the block full. Now he is extending his business room north of the square till it reaches back to Sixth street. It will be the longest room in town. Give him, too, credit, for his public spirit and enterprise. We presume all these business rooms were built, after all, just as soon as there was a positive demand for them, and had they been made sooner, our town might have shown some empty rooms,—a condition of things that does a town no good. Let us have more such men, and fewer critics.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES, AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

Two Men Killed on the Pittsburgh—Wrecked Yachts—Holding Wheat—An Infant Killed by a Horse.

Holding Wheat.

A dispatch from Topeka, Kan., says: Frank McGrath, President of the Farmers' Alliance, has returned from a trip through the State. He says there is a large amount of wheat being held by the farmers with the expectation that the prices will materially advance.

The lecturers of the State Alliance are all advising this, and farmers are now kept as thoroughly posted on the markets as the shrewdest speculators. President McGrath believes that the farmers that hold their wheat will profit largely by it and he says that they understand this, and will not sell a bushel more than absolutely necessary to supply immediate wants.

Suspected Poisoning.

Willis Lytle, an 18-year-old boy, supposed to have been slowly poisoned, died at Providence, Wash. The boy, up to within three months, has been healthy. About that time he was taken sick and has gradually wasted away. The parents refused to get medical aid and suspicion was raised that they were poisoning him to get property left to the boy by relatives. The authorities took hold of the case several weeks ago, but too late, and the boy died. A chemical analysis of the stomach will be made, and if poison is found the parents will be arrested.

August Condition of the Crops.

Washington special: The August returns to the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture make the condition of corn, 90.8; spring wheat, 95.5; spring rye, 89.6; oats, 89.5; barley, 93.8; buckwheat, 98.3; potatoes, 96.5; tobacco, 88.5; hay, 90.9. Corn has fallen off two points during the month, the decline being almost entirely in the States of the Ohio Valley and the Northwest. The decline was due to dry weather, approaching drought in portions of Indiana and Illinois and low temperature in all sections of the corn-surplus district.

The "City of Panama."

No information has as yet been received at the Department of State concerning the reported seizure of the Pacific mail steamship "City of Panama," at Laberta. The department has been advised, however, of the intention of the authorities of San Salvador to seize the vessel because she had left the port of San Salvador without properly clearing under the law. The department has telegraphed United States Minister Pacheco to examine into the facts immediately and make a report of the results of his investigation.

Wrecked Yachts.

The coast of Chequamegon Bay for seven miles north of Ashland, Wis., is strewn with the remains of pleasure yachts and fishing boats. It is impossible to state how many of these contained human lives that were lost in the late cyclone. All those that left Ashland have been accounted for. One sail boat was seen to capsize about a mile off Kaukaugan point. It is not known how many were in the boat, or where it was from. Three Ashland young men saved themselves by swimming 300 feet in the terrible sea.

Disastrous Storm at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis special: A most disastrous storm visited this county, doing incalculable damage to crops and property generally. The rain and wind were terrific. A church seven miles from here was split through the middle as if with a knife and lifted clear off its foundation. A farm residence near by was totally destroyed by the lightning and wind. In this city a business block was badly wrecked, telegraph poles knocked down and hundreds of shade trees destroyed.

Dragged Under the Train.

As the Lake Erie and Western passenger train was pulling up to the depot at Tipton, Ind., and as trains do not stop there a young lad named David Plake, who was stealing a ride from Cicero, attempted to get off, and in doing so, missed his footing on the platform and was dragged under the train; the wheels passing over his body, cutting both legs off and otherwise injuring him, from the effects of which he died.

Yacht Capsized.

The yacht Nellie C, with a party of four young men and six girls aboard, was caught in a sudden squall on Maumee Bay, Toledo. The girls crowded into the little cabin to escape a wetting. When the squall struck the boat she capsized. Three of the girls were extricated from the cabin, but the remaining three—Lena Sanberg, Ellen Feely and Clara Bowds—were drowned.

Killed Two Men.

As the west bound express No. 3, on the Fort Wayne road, was approaching the State line coaling station at East Palestine, Ohio, it ran into a gang of section men, just after rounding a sharp curve. Sullivan Petio, an Italian, was instantly killed, and Adam Hull, was fatally injured. A passing freight is supposed to have confused the men.

Emperor William's Health.

The alarming rumors of the Emperor's health are gaining currency in Berlin and other German centers. On the other hand, the Kisler-Zeitung says he is able to walk and goes up and down stairs without assistance. It is also said that bear speculators are spreading these rumors to depress the market.

An Infant Killed by a Horse.

A Chaplain Drops Dead.

C. A. Gale, a business man of Piqua, Ohio, and a prominent Odd Fellow, dropped dead while attending the funeral of Dr. J. E. Beamer at Fletcher, where he was officiating as chaplain.

Wreck on the Pittsburgh.

A railroad accident occurred near East Palestine, Ohio, on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad. Train No. 2, the vestibule train running east, ran into an open switch about fifty rods east of the depot and crashed into four heavy freight cars standing on the sidetrack. The front cars were thrown from the track and the engine and freight cars were totally wrecked. Engineer Ike Riche was seriously injured, his left leg being badly lacerated and he was injured about the back. The fireman, Wm. Carner, was badly injured, and Elmer Clupper, a resident of Palestine, who was on his way to work, was instantly killed. The passenger train returned to Alliance. None of the passengers were injured excepting a few bruises.

SLICK SWINDLERS.

But They Were Not So Sharp But That Uncle Sam's Officers Caught Them.

Chicago special: Alfred Downing, President, and N. H. Tollman, Vice President of the National Capital Savings and Building and Loan Association of North America, were arrested by Postoffice Inspector Stuart, charged with using the mails for fraudulent purposes. It is charged that the men who have been conducting this association have swindled thousands of people from every State in the Union and taken in from $200,000 to $350,000, giving nothing in return. Victims from Maine to California are numbered among rich and poor alike. There are still two men at liberty, they having disappeared several weeks ago. These two men that are missing it is believed got away with most of the funds. For six months and more letters have been received from all parts of the country by postoffice and city authorities protesting that the "National Capital Savings Building and Loan Association of North America" was collecting money and making no loans. Inspector Stuart has been working on the case four months. He found that the concern was gigantic in its reach, and had agents in every State in the Union who were selling $20,000,000 of the stock of the company. The scheme was advertised through these agents who sent circulars and documents, showing the association to be gilt-edged. Captain Stuart visited the company's office frequently, disguised as a letter carrier, in order to secure evidence. Inspector Stuart and District Attorney Milchrist went over the books of the concern and found that seventeen legitimate loans had been made in as many different States. These, it would seem were made to allure other investors. No record of any other loans could be found, although the books show that money has been received from hundreds of people from places where a single loan was placed. A rough estimate of the amount of money received is $175,000,000 in the year.

Boiled to Death.

Findlay (Ohio) special: Fleming Hardwell, employed at the Salem Wire Nail Mills, met with a terrible accident which resulted in his death. He was engaged in the wire-drawing department, and in some manner his feet slipped and he fell backward into a vat of boiling hot water and quick-lime. He was helped out of his horrible bath by his fellow-laborers as quickly as possible, but not before his entire body had been terribly scalded. He had been completely immersed, with the exception of his head. He was removed to a neighboring house, and as his clothes were taken off his cooked flesh fell off in great chunks. Everything possible was done for the injured man, but his condition was too serious to hope for any relief, and his sufferings were ended by death.

Plan to Rob the United States Treasury.

Washington special: The Secretary of the Treasury has been advised that a bold attempt will be made during the present month to rob the treasury by a strong and determined band of men, organized for that purpose. The plan is to start fires in various parts of the city for the purpose of diverting the attention of the police and then to overpower the treasury watchman and then loot the money vaults. The information was given in a letter signed by the "King of the Tramps," who explained his knowledge of the plot by the statement that he was the leader of the band. The letter was referred to the captain of the watch with instructions to give the visitors a proper reception.

All for Love.

Cincinnati special: An affair of love, disappointment and jealousy terminated in the murder of a girl by her rejected lover. The victim, Miss Ida Kipp, last September promised to marry Lewis Levi but afterward rejected him. Since then Levi has been inflamed with rage and wounded pride. Recently he saw Miss Kipp going with an escort and he followed her on Sixth to Fifth and John streets, near Fifth street garden. There he emptied three shots from his revolver in Miss Kipp's body, killing her on the spot. Levi was arrested. He had been working on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and is an applicant for appointment on the police force.

Dominion Soldiers Tear Down Our Flags.

A special from Detroit, dated the 10th inst., says: A riot occurred in Windsor, Ont., opposite this city last evening owing to the removal, by the Dominion soldiers, of flags and bunting used to decorate the city in honor of the G. A. R., encampment in this city. Three people were fatally injured.

A lot of G. A. R. vetrans who were in the city attempted to prevent the removal of the United States flags from the postoffice were also driven away at the point of the bayonet. It is said that the removal of flags, etc., was ordered by the Canadian Minister of War.

Another Slaughter.

A work train on the Shore Line Railway was run into at Hartford, Conn., by a light engine, which was proceeding east. The engine was running at a good rate of speed and struck the train, which was filled with Italian laborers, with terrific force. Three of the Italians were killed outright and thirteen injured, many of whom will probably die. The accident was due to a heavy fog, which prevented the engineer of the light engine from seeing the lights ahead. Engineer Benjamin and Fireman Shephard escaped by jumping. They were obliged to hide themselves in a tower of a neighboring mill to escape the wrath of the uninjured Italians.

A New Railroad.

The Board of Directors of the Toledo and Ohio Northern Railway Company, at a meeting held at Cleveland at the office of the Lake Shore Company, authorized the immediate prosecution of the work of building that road. The line will extend from Fayette, Fulton County, Ohio, to Shipshewana, Indiana, and will pass through Williams County, Ohio, and Steuben and Lagrange counties, Indiana, and will furnish a third road between Toledo and Elkhart. The road was formed in the interest of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Company, by which its bonds are to be guaranteed.

Lost Power of Speech.

George Mathews and his wife were walking down the street at Indianapolis, when he stopped and frantically clutched his throat. His wife questioned him regarding his strange actions, but he was unable to reply. He drew her aside and on the back of an envelope wrote: "My speech is gone." Again he wrote: "Mother has prayed that I might lose my speech, and it has now come upon me." He has walked constantly up and down the floor. His eyes are set and they shine with a peculiar light. His case puzzles the physicians, but his wife believes that he is in a trance.

Found His Remains.

A special from Leavenworth Kas., says: A cablegram has been sent to Buffalo Bill at Liverpool, telling him of the presumptive find of his father's body, for which a reward of $500 had been offered, in the old burying ground on Pilot Knob, west of this city. Quarrymen dug up an iron casket answering to the description of the one in which his father's remains were buried. There is a hole in one side of the casket and the water has run in, but the figure of a tall man with boots on can be seen.

Drought in Michigan.

Cheboygan (Mich.) special: The smoke from forest fires is almost unbearable here. Everything is parched up and burning. No rain to amount to anything has fallen for months. Trees and grass are dying and crops are ruined. Farmers will realize hardly enough on good farms to maintain their stock through winter. The fruit crop is badly damaged, especially the berry crops, which have dried up, and the crop is a total failure. The oldest inhabitants have never experimented such a drought in this section.

A Regular Riot.

Indianapolis special: A gang of hoodlums which has been terrorizing the northeast section of the city for several weeks engaged in a factional fight the other night. Half a hundred men were engaged. Stones, clubs and similar weapons were used, and a number were severely injured. Wm. Williams, one of the principals, was dangerously hurt. All the injured were secreted by their friends, and the police made but one arrest.

Was Hypnotized by Bunco Men.

David King, an Algona, Iowa, farmer who was buncoed out of $2,000 by a couple of sharpers and claims to have been hypnotized at the time he lost the money. Although commonly reputed to be sharp and shrewd, King was easily persuaded to draw $2,000 out of the bank and wager it on a three-card monte game. King asserts positively that some mysterious force was brought to bear upon him. The confidence men are under arrest at Algona and a full investigation of their method will be made.

A Frightful Fall.

A horrible accident occurred at Goslee's coal mines at Chandler station, Ind., by which George Graham, aged 22 years, whose home is in Terre Haute, lost his life. He had descended but a short distance when he was overcome by black damp, causing him to lose his hold and topple over. He fell to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of forty feet, alighting on his head and killing him almost instantly. He was not an employe of the mine, and had no occasion for entering the shaft.

Killed by the Game Warden.

Dayton (Ohio) special: State Deputy Game Warden L. K. Buntain, of this city, fatally shot David McIlvain, whom he caught with four others seining in Mad River, near Harshmanville, in violation of the game law. Buntain immediately gave himself up, but as he was a State official and did the shooting in self-defense, as admitted by the wounded man, no arrest was made, nor have the fisherman been arrested.

Wreck on the Grand Rapids.

A terrible wreck on the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad occurred at Briant, Ind. Fast express No. 5, south bound, ran into the rear end of a freight train which was pulling into a siding, completely wrecking the passenger and a number of freight cars. Daniel Dick, the engineer, Thomas Brown, the fireman, and James Hayes, the conductor of the express, were killed and a number of passengers injured.

Lynch's Villainy.

Charles Lynch, of Indianapolis, a young married man, separated from his wife one week ago, she returning to her father's home. The trouble arose over his jealousy. The other night he called her to her father's door and cut her throat with a razor, making a ghastly wound reaching from the ear to the larnyx, but missing the jugular vein. Lynch was intoxicated. He was arrested.

Wreck on the Wabash.

Danville (Ill.) special: The east-bound Wabash express train ran into the rear of a freight train standing on an open switch at Homer. The engine was smashed and thrown from the track. Engineer Frank Clark and a fireman were severely if not fatally scalded and a tramp was killed. Express Messenger Baumgardner, of Decatur, and three mail clerks were bruised. No passengers hurt.

Shot by a Brutal Husband.

At Chillicothe, O., George Duhlmeyer got drunk and returned home and began beating his wife. Policemen Hall and Von Kennel were called, and in attempting to arrest him both were shot by him. Hall's injuries are considered fatal while Von Kennel is but slightly hurt. The lator shot Duhlmeyer in the leg before he could subdue him.

A Terrible Death.

A special from Bedford, Penn., says: Jacob May, a prominent farmer, met with a terrible death. May was subject to fits. He went into his house with a lantern, was overtaken by a fit, and by falling to the floor the lantern exploded, setting fire to the house and burning the unfortunate man to a crisp with the house and all its contents.

Death of an Old Hoosier Politician.

One of Indiana's noted politicians and lawyers, Maj. W. W. Carter, died at his home at Brazil. Mr. Carter had been afflicted with brain trouble for over a year.

Lightning's Work.

Near Vinita, Kan., lightning struck and demolished a small house, belonging to Nat Skinner. Fox Bernard was instantly killed and five other men injured.

BOYS IN BLUE PARADE.

THOUSANDS OF MEN MARCH AT DETROIT.

A Magnificent Turn-Out of Grand Army Veterans—Illinois Posts Lead the Way—Elaborate Decorations Along the Route—Scenes and Incidents.

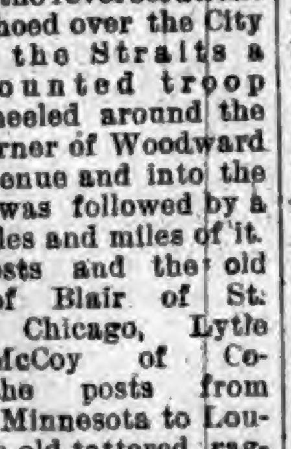
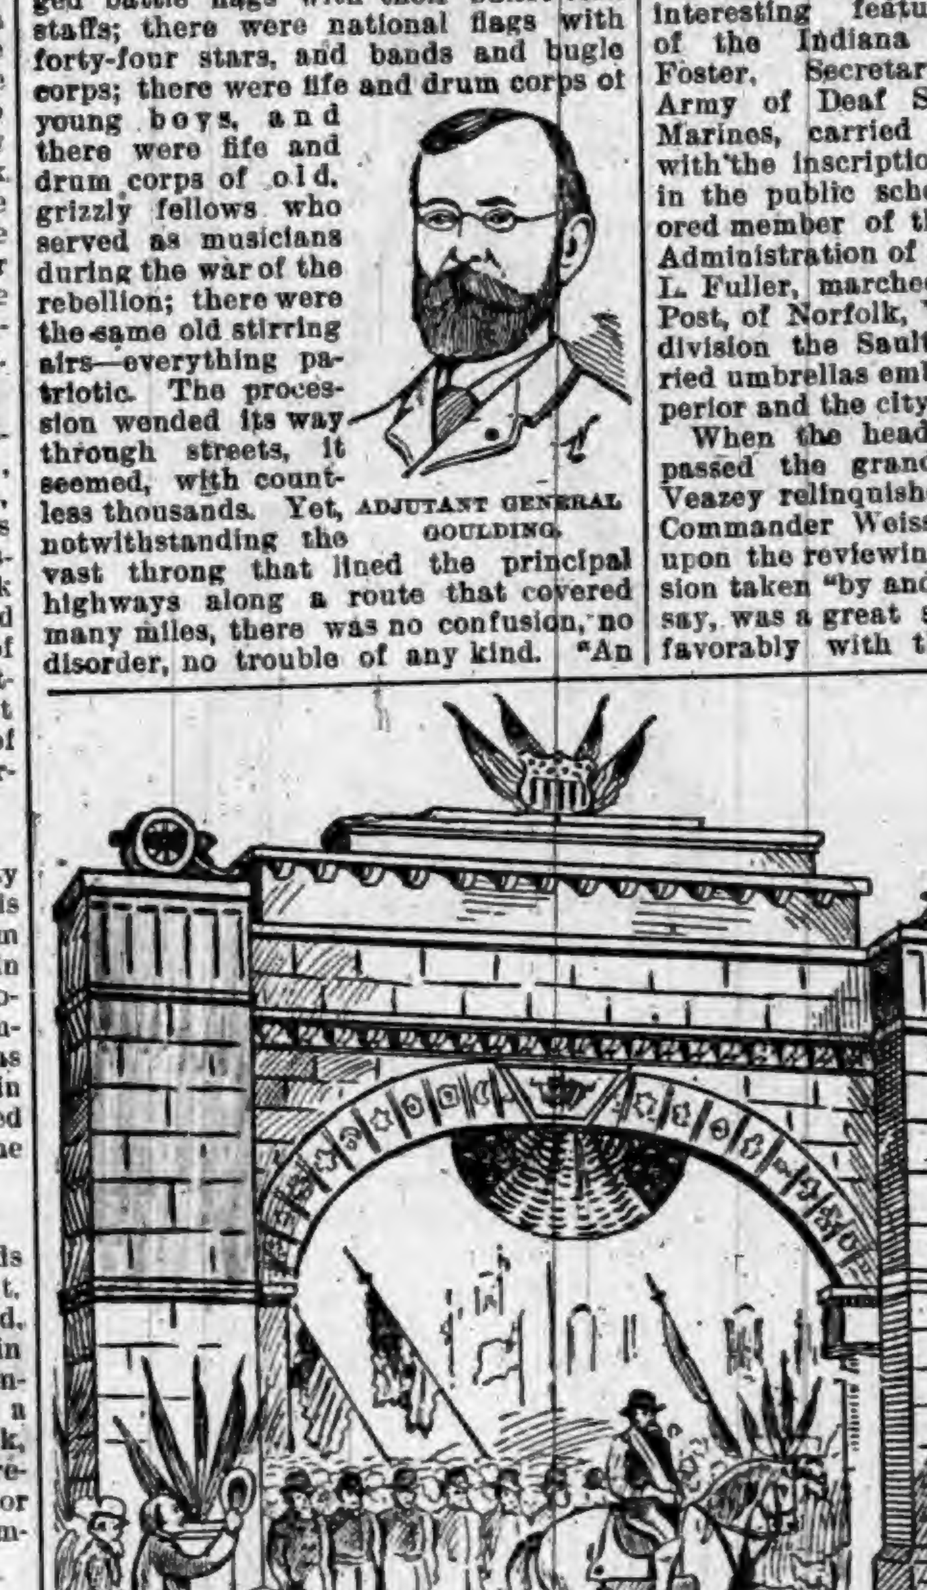
A sapper touched a light to a big cannon in the park, and as the reverberations echoed over the City of the Straits a mounted troop wheeled around the corner of Woodward avenue and into the Campus Martius. It was followed by a mighty procession, miles and miles of it. On came the old posts and the old familiar banners of Blair of St. Louis, Thomas of Chicago, Lytle of Cincinnati, McCoy of Columbus—yes, all the posts from ocean to ocean, from Minnesota to Louisiana; there were the old tattered, ragged battle flags with their bullet-torn staffs; there were national flags with forty-four stars, and bands and bugle corps; there were fife and drum corps of young boys, and there were fife and drum corps of old, grizzly fellows who served as musicians during the war of the rebellion; there were the same old stirring airs—everything patriotic. The procession wended its way through streets, it seemed, with countless thousands. Yet, notwithstanding the vast throng that lined the principal highways along a route that covered many miles, there was no confusion, no disorder, no trouble of any kind. "An ideal day, an ideal parade, an ideal concourse."



ADJUTANT GENERAL GOULDING.



PASSING THROUGH THE WOODWARD AVENUE ARCH.

GOD BLESS THE VETERANS WHO FOUGHT TO KEEP OUR COUNTRY UNITED.

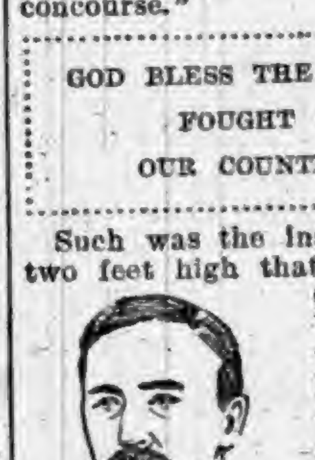
Such was the inscription in letters two feet high that greeted the eyes of Commander-in-chief Veazey as he gave the word for the head of the column to move from the rendezvous. The Commander-in-chief was surrounded by his staff and a special detail of 100 Massachusetts veterans mounted on magnificently caparisoned steeds. Two hundred Michigan veterans in black frock suits, black slouch hats and white bow ties, acted as rear escort to the staff.



INSPECTOR GENERAL BURST.

The next place of honor had been assigned to the veterans from Illinois, and as Post No. 1, of Rockford, with its big banner, came into view a salvo of cheers went from block to block. Department Commander Horace S. Clark, with Adjutant General P. L. McKinnie and James J. Healy, as chief of staff, led the way on horseback. Picturesque was the appearance presented by George H. Thomas Post, of Chicago, each man of which carried a tri-colored umbrella. They walked twelve abreast, from curb to curb, the umbrellas completely obscuring the identity of those that carried them from the people that looked down from above. Ex-Sheriff Matson marched solitary and alone in front of Ulysses S. Grant Post, and those that knew him pointed him out to open-mouthed spectators as the man who swung the anarchists into eternity. Still another feature of the Illinois Division was Phil Sheridan Post, while America Post, 706, in black relief uniform, presented an appearance that was rewarded by liberal applause.

That veteran of international fame, Lucius Fairchild, wearing lightly his sixty years and with his empty sleeve, marched in the front rank of the Wisconsin division. Vice Commander Weissert walked alongside the General. The spectators did not need to be told that the boys were from the Badger State, for Wolcott Post, which led the line, carried baldheaded old Abe, its mascot in the sixties, high in triumph, while alongside of the stuffed remains of the famous eagle was a big badger that once held high carnival in the woods around Green Bay. A young girl, typifying the Indian, with a costume of stars and stripes and carrying a liberty cap on a pole, led Robert Chivas Post. The Wisconsin contingent was large and made a creditable showing, as did the third section, composed of comrades from the Keystone State. Preceding this department were two miniature gun carriages drawn by white ponies and driven by two little boys. The Phadelphia and Pittsburg posts turned out in large numbers and the sight of the tattered battle-flags that they carried frequently drove the spectators into a frenzy of enthusiasm. The Allegheny School Band, composed largely of little fellows who had but recently got into knickerbockers, was another feature of the division that came in for general recognition.

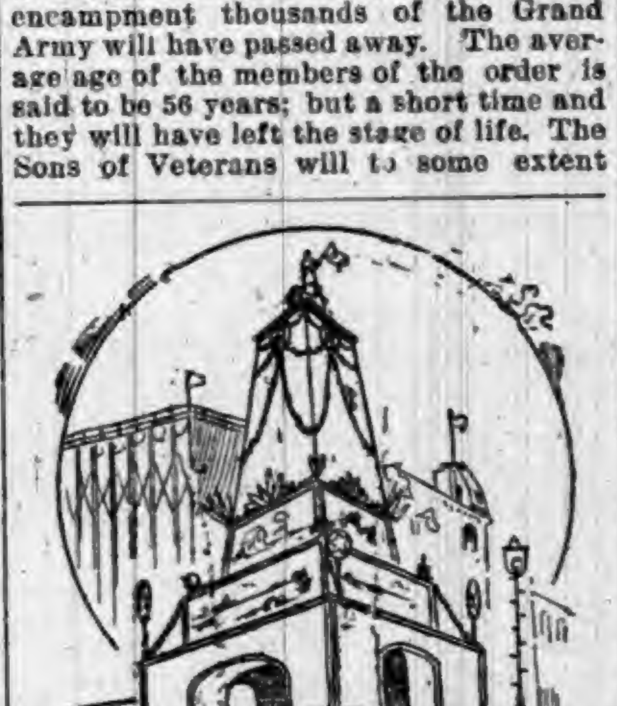
In the fourth division the boys from Ohio turned out over ten thousand strong. In many of the posts every man carried a flag. About every post from Hamilton County was represented, and the famous Old Guard of Dayton, the Memorial Post of Cleveland, and Logan Post of the same city marched in force. In the second rank of the Memorial old Comrade Ferrier, whose right leg was shot off from the hip at Gettysburg, hobbled along on crutches, and a colored brother who lost his nose in the Wilderness and the center of whose face was swathed in a linen bandage, kept him company. Lawrence Post, of Columbus, accompanied itself with a score of good-looking and well-formed young girls in military relief caps, white bodices, and blue skirts, who marched along like schooled veterans, looking neither to the right nor to the left in appreciation of the greeting that kept their cheeks tinted with the hot blood. West Post, of Columbus, sang a medley of popular songs from one end of the route to the other. Another ministerial-looking post was Toledo, No. 106, while as a set-off the volunteers of the same city came out in white helmets and waving miniature flags. In the Akron Post a huge frame of buckeyes, garlanded with flowers, was borne on the shoulders of four graybeards and many other of the posts displayed the buckeye in numerous devices.

There were forty-seven divisions in the parade, and it took just two and a third hours for the first four to pass a given spot. Estimates of men who galloped along the line and through the formation streets after the column had moved placed the men in line all the way from thirty-five to fifty thousand.

Every division was replete with interesting features. At the head of the Indiana delegation, Wallace Foster, Secretary of the Silent Army of Deaf Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines, carried an immense banner with the inscription, "Teach patriotism in the public schools." The only colored member of the National Council of Administration of the Grand Army, Jas. L. Fuller, marched ahead of Dahlgren Post, of Norfolk, Va. In the Michigan division the Sault Ste. Marie Post carried umbrellas emblematic of Lake Superior and the city of the Soo.

When the head of the column had passed the grand stand Commander Veazey relinquished command to Vice Commander Weissert and took his place upon the reviewing stand. The procession taken "by and large," as the sailors say, was a great success. It compared favorably with those of other years. True, the old comrades don't march as well as they did twenty years ago. Their joints are more rheumatic, and their limp more pronounced. Their boys occasionally march with them in the line now, "just to keep pap from stumbling." But they march just the same, and they march bravely, too, with their comrades and their old battle flags. They pass in review and salute their Commander-in-chief. No man with a spark of patriotism in his breast can see one of these parades without enthusing and howling himself hoarse. The sight of the flag and its defenders is enough to arouse the American breast.

Detroit never saw such a sight before, and never will again. Before the city is selected as the location of another encampment thousands of the Grand Army will have passed away. The average age of the members of the order is said to be 56 years; but a short time and they will have left the stage of life. The Sons of Veterans will to some extent take the places of their fathers, but not fully. The old fellows did the fighting.



ARCH ON JEFFERSON AVENUE.

He Was Fastidious.

A burglar broke into a house up in North Philadelphia and found his way into the parlor, where he struck a light and looked about him. Then he gave one long shriek and fell senseless to the floor. The family came down and found him there and revived him.

"Take me to jail! take me out! get me away from here! I am punished. God knows I have suffered. I have stood up against army rifles and toy pistols, bulldogs, brass knuckles, and electric mats; I have conquered spike fences and patent bolts, but, madame," to the serious, fat-looking woman, who stood by in a nightrobe, with a withered look on her face, grasping the neck of a cod liver oil bottle, "I'm a sensitive man, of tender sympathies, and would sooner go to jail than abuse my harmonious spirit with a further inspection of this abominable apartment. Put handcuffs on me and take me out, or I will die at the sight of those macrame lambrequins and green tidies."—The Upholsterer.

MATTHEW MARSHALL, of the New York Sun, has revised his figures as to the amount of money spent by American tourists who go to Europe. His original figures were $65,000,000 for each year. Now he raises them to $100,000,000, and this is not an overestimate, probably. It is all solid gold, too.

WHEN a man runs away it is usually from one of two motives: he is either running away with a woman or running away from one.

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY.

THEY HOLD A CONVENTION AT SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

A State Ticket Put in the Field—Full Text of the Platform Adopted—John Seitz, of Seneca County, Nominated for Governor.

The people's Party of Ohio met in convention at Springfield, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, John Seitz, of Seneca County; Lieutenant Governor, Frank L. Risk, of Hamilton County; Auditor, David N. Cooper, of Athens; Attorney General, Rial N. Smith, of Summit; Treasurer, Henry Wolf, of Cuyahoga; Supreme Judge, Albert S. Yapel, of Hamilton; School Commissioner, J. E. Peterson, of Green; Member of Board of Public Works, J. Borrer, of Franklin; Dairy and Food Commissioner, W. J. Weaver, of Portage.

At the People's Party Convention in Springfield, Ohio, the platform was reported as follows:

"We hold that labor is the basis of all wealth, happiness and progress, and must have equal protection by the law.

"In the organization of our party we know no North, South, East or West, and we are determined that the government of our country shall be so administered as to secure equal rights to all people. We demand that taxation—national, State or municipal—shall not be used to build up one interest or class at the expense of another. We demand the abolition of national banks as banks of issue. We demand that full legal-tender treasury notes be issued in sufficient volume to conduct the business of the country on a cash basis.

"We demand the payment of all bonds of the government instead of refunding them in such money as they were originally made payable in.

"We demand government ownership of all the means of transportation and communication between and by the people of the United States.

"We favor liberal pensions to all honorably discharged Union soldiers of the late civil war and generous care for their widows and orphans, and demand that the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks at the date of payment be made equal to gold, so as to place the soldier on the same footing as the bondholder has been."

A woman-suffrage plank is included in the platform. The platform favors Government loans directly to individuals, favors free coinage of silver, opposes alien ownership of land, and demands that Congress devise a means of obtaining all land already owned by foreign syndicates; demands that all lands held by railroads and other corporations in excess of what is actually needed be reclaimed by the Government and held for actual settlers only; and demands a graduated tax on incomes.

A BOLD THIEF

Robs a Bank at Columbus Grove, Ohio, After Wounding the Cashier and Killing a Farmer.

Lima special: A single man, armed with a pair of revolvers, committed the boldest robbery that has been perpetrated in this section of Ohio at a few minutes after 9 o'clock Saturday morning. The dare-devil's deed did not stop at robbery, as he committed murder as well, besides mortally wounding another man. The scene of the tragedy was the Exchange Bank, the only institution of its kind at Columbus Grove, a small village of about two thousand inhabitants, situated within fourteen miles of this city, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad. The affair was so bold and the murderer so cold-blooded that residents of the town and surrounding country have scarcely yet awakened to the full resolution of the double crime. Although several thoroughly organized bodies of armed men are scouring the surrounding country for miles in search of the murderer and thief, he has so far eluded his pursuers, and still retains his booty, which amounts to over $1,200.

The desperado entered the bank at the above time, with a revolver in each hand, and shouted "I am a second Jesse James. Give me your money, and be d—m quick." With that he opened fire with his two revolvers, shooting indiscriminately at all within the bank. He seriously wounded the cashier, Thomas J. Maple, in two places, and killed William Vandermark, an old farmer, who had just stepped into the bank to transact a little business. The thief then grabbed all the money on the cashier's desk, some $1,200, and flourishing his revolvers, made his escape in a corn field. A telephone message says that the Columbus Grove National Bank robber was caught in a clump of woods near that place and shot to death. The report has not been confirmed and is probably false.

Getting a Pointer.

A Macomb County farmer who was on the market with vegetables the other morning was accosted by a young man, who explained:

"I have a patent hay-fork which I am going to travel with this summer, and should like to get a few pointers from you to start on."

"P'inters, eh? Wall, what sort?"

"How shall I approach the average farmer?"

"Yes."

"Yes."

"He'll ask you up to the barn to talk it over."

"I see."

"But don't you go. Instead of that make a bee line for your buggy, climb in and scoot your hoss as fast as he kin go for the next six miles."

"But why?"

"Oh, nuthin' much. I only killed six myself last week, but you know it rained purty steady for two days and travel was light.—Free Press.

Dangerous Hat-Bands.

"Within two weeks," says a Buffalo (N. Y.) physician, "I have been called on to prescribe for seven men afflicted with raging headaches, due in every instance to poisonous coloring matter extracted by perspiration from the lining bands of their hat, absorbed through the open pores of their foreheads. What these noxious dyes are I have not had time to determine, but I would advise nobody to wear a hat which discolors the brow, especially if the discolorations be of a yellowish or brownish tint."

Fooled by a Trick.

A well-known clergyman of this city was asked to solve the following puzzle a few nights ago: If all the children that King Herod killed were buried in such a manner that only their arms from the elbows to the tips of their fingers were visible above the ground, how could you distinguish the arms of the boys from those of the girl? The reverend gentleman worked at it faithfully, but was obliged to give it up "For shame, doctor," cried the interrogator. "The idea that you should forget that the children that Herod killed were all boys."—Buffalo Commercial.

THE WAY THINGS' RUN

IN THE GREATEST OF GREAT STATES, INDIANA.

Things Which Have Lately Happened Within Its Borders—Some Pleasant and Some Sad Reading.

—The melon crop about Vincennes is unprecedentedly large.

—Seymour is to have the biggest canning factory in the country. Capital $30,000.

—The Indiana Bankers' Association will meet at West Baden Springs, August 23.

—Wesley Powell, who shot a man last April at Frankfort, has just been raked in at Fowler.

—Bicyclists are not allowed to ride on the sidewalks in New Albany by order of the chief of police.

—A man named Thompson, Clinton County Poor Farm, was badly horned by a bull, and will die.

—An epidemic of hog cholera is said to be prevailing in Lynn Township, two miles north of Mount Vernon.

—John Gains, working on a fifty-foot scaffold at Richmond, fell and broke his neck, living an hour before he died.

—The frog farmers along the Kankakee River have a big business this year. One man recently shipped 1,300 dozen in a day.

—James Moore, of Jeffersonville, went to sleep on a cross-tie and was knocked off by a passing train. His condition is critical.

—A committee of Pendleton citizens are negotiating with Dr. Gattling to secure the location of his gun factories at that place.

—Charles Kahler, a railway employe at Brazil, fell from his train and one leg was dismembered. His widowed mother resides in Greencastle.

—Harry Johnson, a freight conductor on the Ohio and Mississippi Railway, had his right thigh badly crushed while making a coupling at West Shoals.

—Benj. Wells was stabbed and killed by Amko Bruminger near LaPorte. They were scuffling and it ended in a fight. Bruminger has been arrested.

—In climbing on a freight train in the Vandalia yards, at Greencastle, Albert Bowman, aged 14 years, fell, and the wheels severed his head from his body.

—William Rape, aged 74 years, dropped dead at his home at Tipton, of heart failure. He was one of the pioneers, having been a resident of that county forty years.

—Mr. Hunter, a miner living at Knightstown, was seriously injured by falling slate at the Jumbo mine. The stone caught him on the back. He is paralyzed in the limbs.

—The onion crop raised by the farmers residing on the river bottom west of New Albany is said to be very large and fine this season. Four hundred barrels have already been shipped to Northern points.

—Chief of Police Cannon, of New Albany, has instructed the members of the police force to file complaints against the trainmen of any of the railroads running through the city when they allow their trains to be run at a greater speed than five miles per hour.

—Mrs. Harriet Dougherty, of Putnam County, ate a hearty breakfast the other morning, and before leaving her chair at the table fell to the floor a corpse. Her age was 93 years. Also, Mrs. Gilwick, mother of Special Pension Examiner Gilwick, died, aged 88 years.

—Margaret J. Briggs wants $10,000 from James McDonald, Logansport, for breach of promise. Mrs. Briggs had furnished a house and bought her wedding garments, and he went back on her. A woman who would buy the furniture and furnish the money for the marriage license should be given the damages asked.

—John Cline, of Adams, went to Greensburg, and bought some clothing, and filled up on "fire water." When he left the train at Adams, he took with him a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes belonging to a fellow passenger, who had gone into another car, and left the package in a seat. Thus Cline got a good supply of clothing, but he is now in jail.

—A fine maple tree, through which passes the power-wire used for conducting the current that operates the Highland Railway, at New Albany, has become thoroughly charged with electricity, on account of defective insulation, and has become a fairly powerful battery, capable of giving a plainly perceptible shock. The current has been sufficiently strong to kill the tree, which is about thirty-five feet high and ten inches in diameter.

—Mrs. Salvina Shipley and her son Isaac, who reside in Brown County, near Nashville, were scuffling for possession of a chair, when a little grandchild of Mrs. Shipley was accidently struck upon the head and knocked down. The little one was picked up by its mother in an unconscious condition, and has been in spasms since. Mrs. Shipley and son are almost crazed with grief on account of the accident. No hope is entertained for the recovery of the child.

—William Long, a Jeffersonville teamster, being attacked by two highwaymen, drew his knife and slashed them until they were glad to escape.

—The Indiana Fire Insurance Company, of Fort Wayne, was organized, with a capital stock of $200,000. J. H. Jacobs, of Fort Wayne, is President; C. E. Dark, of Indianapolis, Vice President, and A. B. White, of Fort Wayne, Secretary. A number of Indianapolis men are among the heaviest stockholders.

—While at work on Martin Hackendorff's residence, at Brownstown, Charles Hancock lost his footing, fell across a picket fence and was terribly torn about the stomach and bowels. He is a son of Contractor William F. Hancock.

—Two men were caught on a bridge at Milltown by an Air-line train. Finding they could not escape, they dropped and hung to the cross-ties until the train passed. The train was stopped, and the conductor and others rushed back and caught the men just as they were about to fall into the river below.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $5 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

CHAPTER X.

THE DANCING ACADEMY.

It was a chilly morning.

The summer heat was not sufficient to warm the earth.

The leaves were dropping in showers on the pavements of the city. The slightest tremor sent showers over the brick and stone pavements. They whirled into eddies round the trunks of the trees, to be swept up later by the servants.

The sparrows were twittering, flitting here and there; from street to housetop, from eave to eave.

Madame Dufaur's maid opened the door in the morning to look out, gave a little start, and uttered a cry as she beheld a girl sitting on the stone step.

The girl had such a woe-begone expression that the maid's heart was touched at once.

"My goodness! What are you doing there?"

The girl looked at her silently, but said nothing.

The maid stepped down, and looked at her closely.

"Why, your clothes are as damp! Have you—surely you haven't been here all night?"

"I don't know how long I've been here."

"Who are you? Where did you come from? What are you?"

Then the maid bethought herself. The girl could not answer so many questions at once.

"You look cold—and hungry. Are you hungry?"

"Yes."

"Why don't you go to somebody you know, then, and get warm—and something to eat?"

"I don't know anybody."

"You know somebody, surely," said the maid of all work.

The girl shook her head.

"Don't you know anybody? You know where you come from?"

"No, I don't."

The maid thought the girl was crazy.

She went into the house, and presently a lady with bright eyes—very bright eyes, and a beaming smile appeared at the entrance.

On seeing the girl she exclaimed, and threw up her pretty hands. Very fair, white hands they were.

"Mercy! What are you doing there, child!"

"I'm going, now."

"Going! Going where?"

"I don't know."

"You don't know! Why, you do not look like one who is—crazy."

"I'm not crazy," said the girl.

"And you don't know where you are going?"

"How can I."

"How strange she talks, Milly."

They both looked at the girl, whose face began to show a faint color.

"How came you here? Come, tell me all about it," said the lady.

"I came from—from the country."

"From the country—but the country is big."

"Is it? Well, I came from a farm."

"Why, there are only farms in the country. Only where there are woods."

"I—I—they said I was a thief, and I ran away. But I'm not a thief."

"No," said the lady, shortly; "you do not look like a thief. A thief would be better dressed—and more comfortable looking. Were you always on a farm?"

"No."

"Where were you before you went to the farm?"

"In the poorhouse."

"In a poorhouse! Poor child. And she is pretty—piquant. What eyes she has! And there is a air with her. She is dainty—very dainty. And how heathenish her hair! Horrible—horrible people to let her hair grow so."

All this in a low tone as the lady looked at the poor shivering girl.

"Why—you are shivering with cold. Take her to the kitchen, Milly, immediately. I will follow. No! Monsieur is is not in the dining-room—take her there at once."

And this was the manner in which poor Joe was introduced into the house of Monsieur Dufaur.

Monsieur Dufaur was an ornament to society. He cultivated the graces—in young people—and some who were not young, for a reasonable sum per quarter. Raw young men, bony, angular misses emerged from Monsieur and Madame Dufaur's hands with all the ease and confidence of well-bred men and women.

If Monsieur Dufaur was an ornament to society, Madame was a jewel—a brilliant of the first water.

There was nothing Madame Dufaur could not do, seemingly. All manner of difficult lace work; all styles of painting; everything that added to the sum of accomplishments, from crocheting to turning a verse—was not these at her finger ends? She was very clever, people said. And as her husband was very practical, they made a powerful partnership. Everybody liked them, and they—they took the world as they found it.

The house the Dufaurs occupied was very fine. They made money, they expended it wisely, and enjoyed but did not abuse the good things of this world.

A very wise, happily constituted couple were Monsieur and Madame Dufaur.

"Mon Dieu!" exclaimed Madame Dufaur, as she helped Joe to a plate of toast, heaped eggs and ham on her plate and poured her a second cup of coffee. "The child is almost famished. Eat! eat, child! You must not be afraid. I do believe she has not eaten a morsel in a week. You must eat, child!"

"I can't—indeed I can't eat any more," said Joe at last. And it was true. Madame Dufaur had made her eat a hearty meal.

"Now—tell me all about it, child. What is it. I will be a friend."

"I have nothing to tell."

"You—so young—and alone. How comes it?"

"I ran away. They wanted to send me to Bill Stubbs—and another man—I never saw him till he came to Barnesville Poorhouse."

"What was his name?"

"Wonder—Job Wonder. But don't tell him—don't tell anybody I'm here."

"No—don't fear child. Go on."

"His sister—and Mrs. Wonder scolded me—and Samantha said I was a—a thief."

Joe was in tears.

"Poor child. Don't cry, now. So you ran away. When was this?"

"I don't know."

"Child—you surely know the days."

"Oh, yes—only I forgot what day it was I left them. It was at night."

"And where have you been? Where did you sleep—where did you eat?"

"I slept in a farm house two nights, and—yes, I just eat three times."

"This is Saturday."

"I ran away Wednesday, then."

"Mercy, did you walk all night?"

"Yes. I was afraid they'd find me."

"Poor child," said Madame Dufaur. "What can you do?"

"Me?"

"Yes. Can you sew—can you make this?" holding up a piece of lace.

Joe shook her head.

"Can you cook? Can you cook steak? Sew your dress? Make a pie."

Joe shook her head.

"What a people! to let a girl grow up like that! It is monstrous. What can you do child?"

"Please ma'am," said Joe, with a sob, "I can't do anything. I never learned anything."

Madame Dufaur held up her hands in amazement.

"So this is the way they live in your poorhouse! Do you want to work? Do you want to learn?"

"O, yes, ma'am—only try me," said Joe, pitifully.

"Very well—I will see. You have no friends. Nobody in the whole world?"

"No."

"You are not deceiving me?"

"I do not tell stories," said Joe, sobbing.

She was weak, tired to death.

"This poorhouse—where is it? You call it how?"

"Barnesville."

"Why, child, that is a long way—Barnesville. I know it. I had two pupils from there. Barnesville, child, that is sixty miles or more from here."

"I am telling the truth."

"I believe you, child. What a shame. No father, no mother—nobody in the wide world. What a pity. Very well; I will try you."

She looked at Joe critically now. The examination pleased her. The look of despair on poor Joe's face made madame a fast friend.

"What was that bag you had?"

"That? That's my banjo—and 'cordion."

"Banjo! Accordion! How? You know how to play them?"

"A man in the poorhouse showed me a little. He's dead."

Madame smiled at the connection.

"Well—it won't kill me to teach you how to comb and put up your hair. How came you by these things?"

"They're mine—he gave them to me. When I ran away I went to my room and brought them along."

Madame looked at her in wonder.

"This child has spirit."

After a silence she called to the maid to bring in the instruments.

"Now play for me," she said.

Joe played the banjo with little spirit, but Madame smiled.

"There is melody there; yes. Now, the other."

When Joe began to play the wheezy accordion madame put her fingers over her shell-like ears.

"No, no. Stop, child!"

Then when Joe's mortification was betrayed in tears:

"It is not the execution, child. It is the horrid instrument. Come! I shall make something of you."

"Will you let me stay here?" said Joe.

"Certainly, if you are a good child and obey me; but you must obey me, and I will consult Monsieur Dufaur."

"Ah! Who have we here?"

Madame spoke to him in a low tone. He looked at Joe. Monsieur Dufaur was not sympathetic, but he was kind, and loved his wife. He shrugged his shoulders and said, "We shall see."

That meant Madame had her own way.

"There is a mine—a mine of talent—in the girl," said Madame Dufaur.

"We shall see."

"It costs us nothing to develop it. And she may live to do us honor one day."

"We shall see. I will do my share."

"That is all I ask."

"And you must make her presentable."

"A trifle will do that. I need buy nothing. I'll cut down my old dresses—it will be all she needs for the present."

"You must be the judge." And Monsieur Dufaur walked away.

That same evening, when he had leisure, he had Joe bring up her banjo and accordion, and listened to her with a grave face.

"She has talent," he said to his wife in French.

"Was it not fortunate I found the poor child at our door?" his wife asked.

They were childless, and both loved children.

"We shall see," said Monsieur Dufaur, who, as may be observed, very seldom committed himself.

CHAPTER XI.

THE OLD WOMAN'S STORY—SEARCHING FOR JOE.

At the end of a month, it was Monsieur Dufaur who was interested in Joe.

"What a crime to let that girl grow up like a weed," he said to his wife. "We must repair the mischief. You will teach her all you know. I will see she is at no loss in music or deportment. Between us——"

"We will make her a marvel," said Madame, smiling.

It was true. Monsieur Dufaur actually enjoyed teaching Joe. She was so apt; her spirits were so bright; her industry was marvelous.

"Mercy, child," said Madame Dufaur, "the world was not made in a day. By and by you shall know—I can't teach you how to knit, and make flowers, and paint, and sing in a day."

Then she would laugh.

It was at the end of the first month—think of it, only one month—that Monsieur Dufaur introduced to his lady pupils a girl plainly but neatly dressed, who could execute many steps with precision and a grace that was winning—charming to behold.

He also instructed Madame to make her an example in singing, for Joe was not at all backward when she was asked to sing. She opened her mouth and sang with the ease and freedom that reminded one of the woods and the orchestra the birds supply when Nature is at her best.

For three months Joe was in an earthly paradise. She had something to occupy her time from morning until night. When she was not learning something, she wanted to—persisted in helping the servants. There was nothing she did not try to do.

But all this was destined to come to a sudden, unexpected ending.

To explain how this came about, I must return to the farmhouse.

Job Wonder was remorseful. He blamed himself for Joe's flight. It was not Samantha's fault. He had promised to take care of Joe, and she had run away. He could hear no word of her, and he believed if she experienced misery, or her life would be ruined, it was his fault.

As days and weeks passed, the feeling of responsibility grew on him. Strange to say, Samantha shared in his disquiet. She felt guilty. Had it not been for her Joe would not have ran away. And Mrs. Wonder, who said nothing, felt in the wrong too.

"Tell you what I'm going to do," said Job Wonder; "Maria," here he hitched up his coat and trousers, "I'm going to put in an advertisement in the paper for Joe."

"And the County Commissioners will see it, and—"

"Don't care if they do. I'm going to do my duty."

And that night a letter with five dollars and an advertisement was sent to the leading paper in the city Job thought the center of "these United States."

The said "center" being New York City.

"'Taint in our State, but gosh! Everybody goes to New York sooner or later, and who knows—maybe Joe might be there."

No response was heard for a week or more. In the meantime Job journeyed, as opportunity offered, to neighboring towns on "goose chases," as he termed it. "Every time I get a water-haul—nary fish—nary Joe."

"It's all waste time and money," said his wife. "It's like hunting will-o'-the-wisps."

"'Zactly so. But I'm in the hunt—an' I'm going to keep it up till I find that gal."

Then the answers began to come to him. The mail brought him armfuls of letters.

"Gosh! Why who'd a thunk there was so many runaway gals in this country. Must be mor'n a million. Hy'ar I've got nigh on a hundred letters an' jest put a litttle advertisement in a newspaper."

But not one of the descriptions suited Joe. He had abandoned all hope of the advertisement helping him, when one day—six weeks or two months had elapsed—he received a letter in a strange hand. It was from New York; and read thus:

MR. JOB WONDER—I would like to meet you and compare notes. Think I know where girl you want is at the present time. If you care to compare notes, address, yours respectfully, JEREMIAH JENKS, Atty. at Law, No. —— street, New York.

"Wants to compare notes. Expects me to go to him. Couldn't come to me."

Job looked at the letter.

"Must think I'm a tarnal fool! Me go to him."

So he told his wife and his sister what a "tarnation fool in New York writ' him, and signed hisself 'Att'y at law'—didn't even know how to spell, and expect him to go to the city."

But the more he called the writer a fool the more he pondered, until he surprised them all by telling them to "look out for the farm a few days—I'm goin' to New York."

"Goodness, Job—on that fools' errend?" said his wife.

"Yes, I know I'm an old fool—you've kept me in mind of it. I couldn't forget it."

"You know I don't mean it, Job."

"You know I do mean it when I say I'm goin' to compare notes with that lawyer."

And he did.

He called at the poorhouse before he went to the great city, and informed Mr. Caper of his resolve.

"I don't think I'd go, if I were you," said Mr. Caper. "You've done your duty ten times over."

"But I might find her."

"Yes—and she might not come back with you. She'll give you the slip again."

"If she does, I can't help it."

"It's not my affair."

"It's is my affair, and I'll go if it costs a hundred dollars."

"That's all right—you can do just as you please with your own money, Mr. Wonder."

"I want to talk to some o' your folks hyar. Mebbe they'd kind o' put me onto a plan to find her myself if my letter don't help."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Hidden Danger.

That death lurks in so innocent-looking and palatable a thing as cream almonds would scarcely be believed, but their eating by a child recently almost caused her death. Dr. Heber Smith, residing at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue extended and Retreat street, in Clifton, came very near losing his little daughter, Lola, aged 4 years, a bright and interesting child, who had eaten two of these cream almonds.

He purchased some of the candy for her, and shortly before tea she was taken violently ill. Her lips swelled out to three times their natural size, her eyelids were bloated, her feet and knees swollen and paralyzed, her pulse weak and quick, and her respiration difficult. The little girl was on the very verge of death. Her distressed parents tried in many ways to arouse her from her stupor, but all to no purpose. Artificial respiration had to be resorted to. Dr. Smith administered an antidote composed of aromatic spirits of ammonia and salicylate of soda. He worked untiringly for several hours before his little daughter showed signs of recovery.

Several days before this Lola ate one of the cream almonds while playing with one of her little friends. She then showed symptoms almost similar, but of a very mild character. Dr. Smith, while laboring to save his daughter, detected on her breath the scent of hydrocyanic acid, or prussic acid. He made a partial chemical analysis of a number of the cream almonds, which led him to the conviction that they contained hydrocyanic or prussic acid—a deadly poison.

The kernel in the candy, he said, was not that of the almond, but a peach kernel, and the deadly poison came by chemical process, from the enveloping of the kernel by the sugar, or candy coating. A man, he said, might eat a dozen of them without danger to himself, but two or three, containing as much acid as those consumed by his daughter, would be sufficient to kill a child of tender years. His daughter has completely recovered. Dr. Smith will make a thorough analysis of the candy shortly.—Baltimore American.

Poor Joan Done For.

And now they say that, instead of being a heroine, Joan of Arc belongs to that peculiar class known at the present time as cranks; that the voices she heard in the woods of Domremy were the hallucinations of a disordered intellect. Her visit to Governor Boudricourt so annoyed him that he passed her on to the court of the dauphin for the mere purpose of getting rid of her, where in turn the dauphin dressed her up in armor for the amusement of the court. The iconoclasts go so far as to assert that the consecrated sword which was found, per Joan's direction, buried in the Church of St. Catherine at Fierbois, and which was presented to her by the dauphin, had been planted there by hands of ordinary flesh and blood. They further assert that she did not lead the army to the relief of Orleans, but merely went along like a vivandiere. They scoff at the story that the soldiers who tied this abused lady to the stake in the market place at Rouen were struck dead.

So the indications are that the great French heroine will have to get down off of her pedestal and follow William Tell, Quintius Curtius, et al. Mediæval history is rapidly losing its brightest stars through the irreverent investigations of the modern quidnunc. It now looks like it was a mere matter of time until American history is attacked in the same way, and these individuals will be prepared to prove that Patrick Henry never made a speech, that no cherries grew at the Washington homestead, and that the John Smith-Pocahontas story was due to the fertile imagination of some special correspondent.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A Bad Precedent.

Mrs. Motherhood—Why is it I have such a time finding a nurse-girl for my children?

Employment Agent—Well, you see, mum, some time ago a lady had a baby die, and she thought so much of that baby that after it was dead she kept the baby's nurse right along at the old wages, with nothing to do but walk in park, pretending she's got the baby with her. Since then I can't get a nurse-girl to go into a family where the baby looks healthy.—New York Weekly.

How Lightning Makes Glass.

When a bolt of lightning strikes a bed of sand it plunges downward into the sand for a distance less or greater, transforming simultaneously into glass the silicia in the material through which it passes. Thus, by its great heat, it forms at once a glass tube of precisely its own size. Now and then such a tube, known as a fulgurite, is found and dug up. Fulgurites have been followed into the sand by excavation for nearly thirty feet; they vary in size of a quill to three inches or more, according to the bore of the flash. But fulgurites are not alone produced in sand; they are found in solid rock, though very naturally of slight depth and frequently existing merely as a thin, glassy coating on the surface. Such fulgurites occur in astonishing abundance on the summit of little Ararat in Armenia. The rock is soft and so porus that blocks a foot long can be obtained, perforated in all directions by little tubes filled with bottle-green glass formed from the fused rock.

Recently President Harrison made him a rear admiral and he has charge of the squadron now watching the coast of Chili. He was a member of the 91st New York and served actively from Sept. 16, 1861 to the close, being severely wounded at the last great battle, that of Five Forks, just before Lee surrendered. The choice is considered an excellent one. Some trouble was had about negro members is southern states, some believing they should be in separate posts and departments, but no change was made. The next annual meeting is at the City of Washington. The next, that of 93, will undoubtedly be at Chicago, so they can at the same time visit the world's fair. A peculiar feature of the Detroit meeting was the refusal of the veterans of the Seventh Michigan to recognize the claims of Robert H. Hendershott, who has been claiming to be the "Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock." He was called on, and showed letters from Lincoln, Grant, Greely, Burnside, and others, but could not himself tell a straight story. Then members of the Seventh got up and said that the drummer boy who crossed the river with them in that battle, was John T. Spillane, now a policeman in Detroit.

Tried to Burgle.

The partly successful attempt to burglarize E. L. Casebeer's residence last week, seems to have set the night-prowling gentry to work in earnest. Sunday night they made efforts to get in at several dwellings. About midnight George Allen, who has rooms at Mrs. Little's, not feeling well, had risen and was sitting by the open window, as the night was very warm, he noticed a tree near by, that seemed to be shaken more violently than the wind would shake it just then, and as he watched it, noticed a hand reaching out toward the roof. At once he thought it might be some one who was trying to get onto that part of the roof, and then into the second story window. He called out to the prowler, who suddenly dropped down and ran off. A little later, Walter Hartman, on South Main street, was awakened by a noise at the window. A dark head, and shoulders of some one, were being pushed into the room through the partly raised window. He reached for his revolver which was near by, and the motion alarmed the burglar, who dropped down so as to stand on the ground, with his body concealed by the window shutter. But a part of his coat skirt stuck out in sight, and reaching his hand out of the window Walter fired in that direction. A lively tearing up the gravel along that side proved the fellow was badly scared, and a couple of shots after him, warned him of the wrath to come. Yet so determined was he to get in, that he soon after made an attempt to open the rear kitchen door, but was again scared off. The first shots had alarmed Mr. Hartman himself, and Mabel, and they had joined him in the skirmish. Many neighbors heard the shots, and among them was James Hoffman, who was at his fathers' D. Z. Hoffman's. As he lay awake for awhile, wondering what the trouble could be, he heard some one making an attempt to enter the house. But it took only a little to frighten them off this time, as their bad luck so far must have been discouraging. These chaps will strike the right place some night and be very properly killed.

Married.

It was a quiet affair that happened at Henry Sherlock's Monday, Aug. 10, when John D. Lahnum and Miss Clara Buss were united in marriage. But a few of the most intimate friends of the young couple were present, and few knew the happy event was so near at hand. But none the less a large circle of the acquaintances of both gladly send them good wishes and hopes for their future happiness and prosperity. Mr. Lahunm is well known here as one of the bright young business men. Since the fire by which his grocery was destroyed, he has been on the road, traveling for different firms. He is now under contract to travel next year for Bowers & Co., of Chicago at a good salary. He goes up to the city to-day to begin work August 15. The bride is no less favorably known in Auburn, where both have always been popular. The Courier adds its heartiest good wishes for them both. The ceremony was performed by Rev. B. Ruf, pastor of the German Reformed church in Auburn.

Wholesale Swindling.

Mr. A. Frank Richardson, of New York, in his recent address in St. Paul, Minn., before the National Editorial Association, called attention to the fact that druggists all over the country are continually defrauding their customers by offering them imitations or substitutes for various patent medicines who have created the demand by extensive advertising. This practice of substitution by the druggists has grown to such an extent that Mr. Richardson invokes the aid of the newspapers in its exposure and defeat. But no one should allow themselves to be thus swindled, especially in the purchase of Simmons Liver Regulator, the great remedy for indigestion and all liver troubles. The genuine article is stamped with a large red Z on the face of the package. Take no other. Any substitute for this is a fraud upon the purchaser who invariably pays the penalty in not securing the relief to be had from taking the genuine article.

In Memoriam.

Miss Nettie Kelley was born at the home in Smithfield township, DeKalb county, Ind., June 12, 1868, and died at the same place August 10, 1891, at the age of 23 years, 1 month and 18 days. Deceased was a daughter of the late J. D. Kelley, and a young lady whose life had developed many amiable traits of character. She had been for several years remaining at the old home as housekeeper for her brother Douglas Kelley, who has the home farm. Last winter she made a trip to California, going in the party that went with Dr. Ford, as she had an uncle there. During her trip she had an attack of the grip, and it appears to have turned into consumption or some such disease. An additional shade of sadness is given to her early death by the fact that she was to have been married on her birthday, June 12, to a worthy young man, Albert Smith, who had a nice home all waiting for them where he lives in Michigan. On Wednesday morning her remains were brought to Auburn so her mother, Mrs. Dr. Adams could see her, as the latter has been confined to her bed some weeks. It was a sad scene. The funeral was held at the home in Smithfield, that same forenoon at ten o'clock, the services being conducted by Rev. Mr. Crary, of Hicksville. The interment was in the beautiful cemetery at Waterloo.

Another Accident.

It seems that this summer has made for itself a great record on the pages of history as relates to accidents. For a number of years the quietness of our city was disturbed but very little on account of runaways, and accidents so common to such occurrences. But this year, people have been suddenly called from their homes and places of business by the startling announcement of a terrible runaway, on several occasions. A few of them resulted with little injury to life, while others brought death, and at all events, suffering to fellow beings.

The last sad affair of this kind which we are called upon to chronicle, is the misfortune that befell Mrs. Kessler and daughter on Thursday evening, August 6. They were driving across the Wabash railway, on South Jackson street, when the horse became unmanageable and tumbled buggy, horse and occupants down the embankment between the highway and the railroad. Kind friends soon came to their assistance. They were taken to the Kessler home on North VanBuren street, where medical aid was given. At last reports the young lady was doing very well, but with her mother, the matter is more serious. Her skull bone was fractured, thus making her condition more critical. It is hoped however, that both may experience a complete recovery from their injuries. The daughter, Mrs. Clink is married and lives in St. Louis. She is here on a visit.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain.

M. E. Blair M. D. D. D. S. of Mansfield, O., formerly of the Western Reserve Medical University, Cleveland, O., will be at Auburn, Friday August 21st to 22nd for the purpose of extracting teeth without pain or sleep. The Doctor is the patentee of this process and will positively appear in person. Remember the date, Aug. 21 and 22, at the Swineford House.

TESTIMONIALS

Dr. Blair extracted a number of teeth for us without pain, and we cheerfully recommend him to the confidence of the public. Mr. Walter Miller, Mrs. Chas. Bange, Mr. Dexter Teffs, Mr. B. F. Blair, Mr. G. C. Lahnum, (22 teeth.)

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our heart-felt thanks to those good people who so nobly came to the rescue of Mrs. Kessler, and daughter on the evening of August 6, 1891, when they were placed in such a perilous position by the frightening of the horse which they were driving near the Wabash railway, on South Jackson street. We cannot fully manifest the debt of gratitude we owe, but hope our demonstrations at this hour will be fully understood. Very Respectfully,

Kessler Family.

B. & O. to Sandusky.

The B. & O. will sell excursion tickets on Sunday, Aug. 16, from Auburn to Sandusky and return at a rate of $2.25 for the round trip. Tickets will be valid for return passage only on date of sale. Ample time will be given to spend the day on the Lake, Put in Bay and Cedar Point, and in order to accommodate those wishing to visit the Soldiers' Home it has been arranged to run a special train out to the Soldiers' Home and return without extra fare being charge.

Notice to Builders.

I will receive sealed proposals at my residence in Smithfield township DeKalb county, Ind., until noon of

Saturday August 22, 1891

for the erection of a brick school house in District No. 7, in said township. Plans and specifications can be seen by calling on me. I reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SPENCERVILLE.

Will Erick and wife went Albion on Friday.

The festival given by the M. E. church Saturday evening was a success.

P. Bishop and wife returned from a visit to friends in Michigan Friday.

David Dove donated $30 to the driver on the Ft. Wayne route. The driver skipped.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller, of Toledo, Ohio, parents of Mrs. J. W. Beams, attended the funeral.

Married:—At the residence of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Murray, Thursday evening by Rev. J. S. Neison, assisted by Rev. J. J. Fred and E. W. Erick, William Erick to Miss Mabel Murray.

A sad accident happened to the family of J. W. Beams Tuesday evening. Their daughter in attempting to descend the stairs with the baby in her arms, tripped and fell to the bottom of the stairs injuring the child so badly that it died Wednesday morning. Kind friends did all they could for the little sufferer, but could not save it.

CONCORD.
LAST WEEK.

C. Keller is doing Detroit this week.

Sue Miller, of Auburn, is here for a few days stay.

Wayne Scott and wife were at Waterloo Monday.

Ira Bone and wife, of Auburn, were here over Sunday.

G. W. Morr has Job's affliction on his head at the present writing.

Master Fred Draggo, of St. Joe, was visiting his grandparents last Friday.

Mrs. J. R. Shilling, of Auburn, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Showalter.

Mrs. Will Sheldon, of Garrett, was in attendance at the picnic Saturday.

Rev. Hootman, of Newville preached to an attentive audience at Fairview last Sunday.

J. B. Draggoo had their family group taken last Saturday. They only numbered 14.

G. W. Reed has one of the finest saddle horses in the county. His "Maud" took the ring Saturday as marshal's horse at the picnic.

Mrs. Morrison, of Chicago, is spending a few days with her many relatives, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Johnson, of Auburn.

The picnic was a success in every way. They cleared over $100, and through the Courier we tender our thanks to our many friends for their liberal patronage.

On July 30, Master Walter Cosper found on the Auburn road, a pair of gold framed spectacles in case. The same can be had by calling on his father, Eugene Cosper.

CONCORD.

Miss Belle Milton is at the Junction this week.

Miss Louise Plottner went to Auburn Monday to work.

The thermometor stood 100 in the shade last Sunday.

Henry Baker entertained friends from Jackson last Sunday.

The Sunday school of this place will attend the Rehoboth picnic Saturday.

Ask Maggie who made the mash on Kidwater of Michigan, Saturday evening, her or her sister Carrie.

John Coots bid his family and friends good by Monday and left for Muncie, where he hopes to obtain a situation as an engineer. His friends wish him success.

Mrs. Bertha Timmerman, who for the past month, on account of poor health, has been staying with her mother, has so far recovered her health as to be able to return home Sunday, and now Bert is the happiest man in Concord.

If it isn't too late to offer a suggestion, we'd advise those Rehoboth picnic folks to take Florence Buchanan along to Ft. Wayne to help buy their produce for the picnic, as he can get the "mostest melons for the leastest money" of any one in town.

Little Cretia Layman, who has been visiting at her uncle Phil Layman's since last fall, in company with her sister Lulu started for their home in Blue Creek, Neb., on last Thursday. Cretia is a nice little girl and leaves many dear friends here who will miss her.

Miss Vill Draggoo, of St Joe, was noticed on our streets about nine o'clock last Thursday evening practicing horse back riding. You know Vill is to be marshal next Saturday at the picnic and we'll bet she was afraid the pony would throw her off, so she practices after dark.

BUTLER.

The water works election went 200 for water works and 18 against.

Chas. Coffrin has so far from recovered from his injuries as to be able to be about town.

Last Sunday was the hottest day of the year, compelling nearly every one to remain indoors.

About all the G. A. R. men have returned from Detroit and report a very enjoyable occasion.

A. Mrs. Click from Auburn, visiting the family of Jacob Click here, has been seriously ill and is confined to her bed at the latter place.

Ben. Stiefel is not only adding one story to his building but breaking the record and adding two, making it the only three story building in town.

Rev. Woolpert, Presiding Elder of the Goshen district, filled the pulpit of the M. E. church Sunday. The house was fairly well filled considering the high temperature of the day.

Ben. Stiefel received an unfriendly slug from a saloon bummer, Saturday. He was arrested and let go by the friendly constable who had an eye to the costs he and others were not going to get.

A very sad accident is reported from the vicinity of Pleasant Lake. Daniel Anthony, wife and child, were returning from Angola, and as they approached the second railroad crossing, and as the horse got upon the track, it was struck by the engine of the passenger train and killed. Mrs. Anthony, who was formerly Fanny Mease, was instantly killed. Mr Anthony was very seriously injured, and at latest accounts was not expected to survive his injuries. The child was not injured, and when the train men got back to where the accident occurred, was crying over the dead body of her mother, and was with difficulty pacified to tell her name and where she lived. Mrs. A. was buried Friday.

Shultz & Oberlin are busily engaged in the completion of the plant for their new cider mill and jell factory, which, when in working order will be one of the best in northeastern Indiana. They expect to be able to squeeze the juice from the luscious fruit about the first of next week.

G. A. Mader's House Burned.

About four o'clock Sunday afternoon, the alarm of fire was sounded out by the big fire bell, and every body started out. It proved to be Ade. Mader's new residence north of town, and east of Mr. Latson's on the Morning Star road. Our fire department went up to a point where they could see it was too late, and then returned, as the building was already consumed, for the great distance made it a long time for word to reach town. Mr. Mader had just started for town when the building was found to be on fire. It had probably caught from the kitchen stove, and had got such a start that but little could be saved except the furniture, etc., in the parlor, There is some insurance, but the loss will still be very heavy. It is a great misfortune for a hard wording and worthy man.

Encyclopedia Britanica.

We were obliged by an unusual amount of advertising, to discontinue for a time, our notices of this valuable and important work. Besides, a good part of our stock has been disposed of, though we had not even called on the people at Garrett and Butler. Now, we have only a few sets left, and will not likely get more, so it will be an object to all who intend to purchase a set soon, to call on us, as we have the exclusive sale in this section of the county. You will never be able to get them as cheap as now, and the chance will soon be gone. Good terms for payments, or good discount for cash. Teachers, members of literary societies, parents who have children in school, clergymen and lawyers who have as yet no encyclopedia in their libraries, have now the best opportunity they will ever have, and should remember that the supply is limited, and getting smaller. Call at our office for terms, or write to us at an early date. 33-35

The Webster Bridge

The commissioners met here Monday to enter into a written contract with the parties who secured the job of building the new bridge over the St. Joe river at Webster's mill in Stafford township. The successful bids were made by A. Wheelock of this place and the King Iron Bridge Company of Cleveland. The abutments are to be of Berea sandstone, and the contract for this was given to A. Wheelock. He goes about the work at once and looked for twenty car loads of stone to reach Butler Tuesday. He will have the work done about Sept. 15. The bridge itself is to be of iron, and the King Company got the job for $2,750. They will be ready to put the bridge right up as soon as the abutments are ready. The cost of abutments cannot be given as yet, for that is done by the cubic yard. But a large bridge should be built of stone and iron, and then it will last a life time and more.

Examination of Teachers.

That applicants for teacher's license, who wish to take the examination in August, may have a report of their work before the county institute convenes. Many of the trustees have requested that the examination be held Saturday August 15, instead of the usual last Saturday of the month. I have consented to comply with this request and trust that teachers and others interested in this examination will note the change from Saturday August 29, to Saturday, August 15

Obituary.

Jane Scott was born in Columbiana county, O., Feb. 28, 1811, and died at Waterloo, Ind., Aug. 9, 1891, aged 80 yrs. 5 months, 11 days. She was married to Jeremiah Plum December 26, 1832, by Rev. C. L. Vallandingham. She moved to DeKalb Co. in 1851, where she resided until her death. She was the mother of seven children, 4 boys and 3 girls, all of whom with her aged husband, 26 grand children, 5 great grand children, 6 brothers, 1 sister and many other relatives mourn her loss. She lived a ripe old age and went as ripe grain ready to be gathered into the garner of her Lord. In her early life she united with the Lutheran church, but in later years there being no church of her choice, she united with the United Brethren church, and remained a faithful and consistent member till death. Although a great sufferer for a long time she bore it patiently, her faith in God never wavering and died in the triumphant faith of her Savior. The funeral was from the U. B. church Tuesday at 10-30 and she was buried in the Waterloo cemetery, Rev. Klotz officiating.

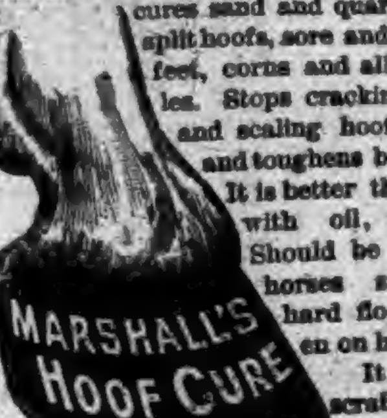
The creamery company has bought a piece of ground north of town near where the Grosoup sawmill formerly stood, and will locate their establishment at that point. It will be a desirable location especially as so many of the stockholders reside in that direction.

Treasurer Sawvel went up on Friday to attend the funeral of his aunt, Mrs. Daniel Anthony who was killed in the railway accident between Angola and Pleasant Lake, as stated in the Courier last week. She was found unconscious her head crushed on a stone. It is supposed the child's life was saved by the efforts the mother made when thrown out. Mr. Anthony is himself badly hurt, but there were hopes of hopes of his recovery, at the latest accounts we have from him. It seems they were coming south from Angola, and the wagon road crosses the railroad at a very sharp angle, so that the train could strike the buggy almost in the rear. It was completely smashed up, and the horse instantly killed. Mr. Sawvel informs us they have had several accidents in the Anthony family. The oldest brother lost his life about forty-five years ago, in Stark county, Ohio, by being thrown on a pitchfork. Later, another brother was killed while getting off the cars at Canton. A third who resides in this county, fell from a shed not over four feet high, and was in some way so badly hurt that he died soon after the injury.

Competition, the Life of Business.

This expression is not original, but is very suggestive. Just now, three trustees of DeKalb county, are building school houses, four houses in all, and having been interviewed by several school desk agents, at the suggestion of Co. Supt. Merica and perhaps of the trustees themselves, they concluded to appoint a day when all could meet and show goods, and thus save time for themselves and for the trustees as well. They set August 18, at which date they will meet the trustees with the county superintendent in Auburn. Already several desks have been received at the express office, and more are expected daily. It now appears certain that by the day named, which is next Tuesday, not less than seventeen school desks, shown by as many agents representing different houses will be on hand ready for the contest. With such a chance, the trustees will be able to get a good desk at a fair price, no doubt. The trustees most directly interested are J. J. Walter of Jackson, one school house; James O. Blake of Smithfield, one; and Wm. Whetsell of Franklin, who builds two houses.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE



cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

Toledo, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

Frank Powers, in Ensley's Addition has just completed a good dwelling, and will hereafter live in a home of his own. John Shoudel, close by him, is putting up a house also. We are pleased to see them prospering.

Mrs. Dr. Adams is still confined to her bed, as she has been since the surgical operation of a few weeks ago, and was not able to attend the funeral of her daughter, Nettie, yesterday. But it is hoped she will eventually regain her health.

The Concord correspondent of the St. Joe News, says that Uncle Sammy Wasson recently walked to Ft Wayne and after visiting a few days, he walked back. Mr. Wasson is the earliest living settler in our county, and is still jolly and hearty, carrying his eighty years with the tease of middle age.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Patterson and son Ralph were in town over Sunday, guests of A. B. Richards and the Courier folks. They formerly lived in Waterloo, though they now reside in Galesburg, Ill. Their oldest son, Roy, is also out here, being still in Waterloo, and their friends over the county will be pleased to know they are prospering.

The familiar face of John Leasure, is missed from the Kiblinger establishment, where he has so many years been a familiar figure. He resigned about two weeks ago, for the purpose, as we suppose, of going into business, somewhere, for himself. His long experience and business ability will insure his success wherever he may be. We have not learned as to his future intentions, but an active man like him will not remain idle.

A letter dated August 7, from Celina, Ohio, and written by Levi Seiler, was received this week. Now the fact is, his subscription to the Courier expired that day, and he promptly sent a draft for next year. We were surprised to hear from him there, as his home is in Kansas, but we like his style of doing business. He is at Celina now, visiting his aged brother who resides there, and expects to remain until the middle of September, when he will return to his home. We trust his visit in the old Buckeye state may be a pleasant one.

Mr. E. D. Beadle, the new head salesman in the Kiblinger hardware establishment, is a gentleman of ability and long experience in this business. He had been a salesman in Hicksville some years ago, and later was a member of the firm of Beadle & McCurdy in the hardware business in Butler. When Mr. McCurdy went out the business was continued by the firm of Beadle & Hamilton. Later, Mr. Beadle went to Adrian, Mich., to accept a good position in the great Maxwell Hardware Company. Here he has been engaged since until recently, when Mr. Kiblinger found himself in need of an experienced head salesman to take Mr. Leasure's place. Monday Mr. Beadle began here and is now actively at work, getting used to the new surroundings. He comes to our town with a good reputation, and we believe will be a valuable and acceptable citizen. He will move his family here as soon as he can secure a suitable dwelling, and we feel sure our people will welcome them to Auburn, its society and its business.

The Richland township Sunday school, convention meets on Saturday of this week, and they will no doubt have their usual splendid time. This office has printed a number of lovely banners for the various schools of the township, to be used on that occasion.

Our room being nearly completed, we will have a selected stock of goods on hand in a very few days, and we send greeting to all our former patrons and the public in general. We will be better equipped than ever to satisfy the many wants of our customers. Watch for our grand opening.

Thomas Bros.

J. N. Wilson, was down here this week on some business. They have purchased the Justin Girardot residence on North Main street we are told. It is a very desirable property Mr. W. is located at Fayette, where he is pastor of the Christian church. He believes the new Air Line road through that section will surely be constructed.

There has been quite a fatality among children lately. Little Paul Jay Potter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Will Potter, died Friday of last week, and was buried on Saturday afternoon. The services were by Mr. Wooton, of the M. E. church. The little one's age was 2 months, and 15 days. The afflicted parents have the sympathy of our people in their day of sorrow.

The entry books of the Auburn fair are now open and the secretary will be in his office in the Nicky & Gandy Hall, over the Boston Clothing store, every day for the transaction of any business connected with the fair. Make your selections now and make your entries early. This will be the first and largest fair of the season and the officers desire everything to move along smoothly and hum as they go. Remember the date Sept. 7 to 11.

Sam. VanZile at Collingwood is getting his cider mill ready to run, and will open business in that line on Saturday, August 15. After that date he will make cider only Tuesdays and Thursdays during August. Beginning Sept. 1, he will make cider every day during the season. Customers should make a note of this. He also grinds chop feed, and keeps it for sale. He keeps the best grade of flour made at the Empire Mills at Fort Wayne, which he will exchange for wheat. Call on him at Collingwood.

T. P. Scott was at Montpelier over Sunday to see his mother who has been quite sick. She is somewhat better. A strange accident occurred there on Saturday. A farmer and his son were bringing in a load of wheat, the boy driving the load, and the father being just behind in a buggy. The bridge over the river suddenly broke, letting the lad and team into the water, but the father saw it in time to stop. The lad would have drowned, but a piece of timber struck him senseless so he could not breathe to take in water.

Geo. Kehrer, the popular Butler druggist made this office a pleasant visit while waiting here to hold up his right hand and swear something in the Aldrich case. He is one of the best business men in the county, and we always welcome him.

You should remember that Thomas Bros. are "up-to-snuff" in the art of baking. They can satisfy the wants of every individual, from a common eater to an epicure. Give them a chance to test your appetite for good things. 32tf

Heat, lots of it. It began to settle down to business the middle of last week, and by Sunday, it was terrible, and the dry weather made it worse. Tuesday morning there was a slight thunder shower followed by clouds that relieved us some, though it was still warm.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

Mrs. W. E. Rush has the finest sunflower stalk. It stands eleven feet high, and has over fifty flowers of all sizes in bloom. The largest measure more than eighteen inches across. If it is still in condition when the fair begins it should be taken over and put with the other vegetable productions.

Little Harry Buck Losh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Losh, died last Thursday, Aug 6, and the funeral was held Saturday afternoon at the house, Mr. Wooton officiating. He was born Dec. 12, 1890. This is their second bereavement and everyone feels a deep sympathy for them.

The Standard's, a base ball club of Auburn played the Waterloos, a similar club from that town, at the ball grounds here last Saturday. The result was rather one sided, for the score at the seventh inning stood 22 to 7 in favor of Auburn. Then the Waterloo lads became discouraged and lit out for home.

It is reported that the most beautiful geranium in the county, is at the Husselman home just south of "Mud school house" in Grant township. If we are not mistaken this is the home of our friends Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Husselman, and we think everyone who can raise beautiful flowers should have a kind word. This specimen is said to show a grand pyramid of bright red flowers.

The professional men of Auburn will play the business men at the ball grounds, Friday. The batteries are, for professionals, Dr. Buchtel and Josiah Teeters; for the business men, H. F. Richey and Mr. Steury. Admission 10 cents, stand 10 cents. Ladies free to all Proceeds go to the benefit of the Reading Room. All are cordially invited. Game called at 2:30 sharp.

The Courier was the only paper in DeKalb county, although there are nearly a dozen of them, that published last week an account of the sad accident by which Mrs. Daniel Anthony lost her life. Readers of other papers will get the same item eight days old, and a part of them will get it re-written from the Courier without credit. The Courier office bugle is in good trim and may now and then be heard without putting your ear to the ground.

J. A. Potter and wife went over into Ohio last week to visit some of Mrs. Potter's relatives. They went with a team, starting from here on Thursday morning at four o'clock. They visiting at Van Wert and Convoy, returning home Monday evening. They saw worlds of fine corn on the heavy lands that were once the low parts of Van Wert and Paulding counties and the old reservoir. They also had the good fortune to see a fawn cross the road ahead of them, a sight that will soon be among the things of the past, as the deer are almost entirely gone from even that section.

There will be boat rides, steamboat rides, fishing, ice cream. The visiting brethren will have ice cream free. Let everybody, far and near, turn out and have a day of pleasure with the boys at the lake.

To Subscribers.

The last year or so, has been a bad one financially. In fact it has been "hard times," and knowing this, we have said but little to subscribers to the Courier about paying up, although we could not help seeing that many who had always paid promptly, were getting behind and that others who were already behind, were falling back still more. But we said, "It is hard times. We will try and dig along, and give our friends as good a chance as possible." But now we believe we must ask for a little help. Let everyone who possibly can do so, chip in a year, or two years, or so, on his subscription now due, and make as earnest an effort to give us a little help, as we have made to give them easy terms. If all who can do this without inconvenience, will set about it and make the effort, it will be a great accommodation to us, and but the proper thing for them. Now, boys, what do you say? Shall we all help a little? Let us see all try and then if you can make up a year or two, we shall be satisfied by knowing you have done the best you could.

Next Saturday Night.

After six o'clock, or any day or night this week, you can buy at F. E. Davenport's a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup for your cough. This medidicine is guaranteed to cure any cough or cold and all lung or throat troubles. For bronchial diseases it has no superior and many cases of bronchitis have been entirely cured by its use. Do not hesitate to try this great, meritorious remedy and be convinced of its curative powers. You can buy this medicine for 25c. to give it a trial of F. E. Davenport.

Barn Burned.

Charlie Rugman was in town yesterday morning and brought news of the burning of Alex. Baltz' barn in Butler township on Monday forenoon. Mr. B. was absent at Auburn that day, receiving treatment from Dr. Nusbaum, as he has been in poor health for some time. It is not known how the fire occurred, but his loss is very heavy, as all his crop of hay and grain went with the building. Mr. Baltz' misfortunes are all coming on together.

Card of Thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Borst desire to express through these columns, their heartfelt thanks for the kindness and sympathy shown by all the neighbors and friends, on the occasion of their late bereavement, the death of their little boy. And especially, they wish to speak of the thoughtful kindness shown by the closing that day of the great Kiblinger factory. All these things will forever be bright spots in the memory of those sad days.

She Suffered for Fifteen Years.

My wife has suffered for fifteen years from congestion and painful menstruation. After using three bottles of Bradfield's Female Regulator she is now able to do her house work and go where she pleases. J. W. Davis, Moravian Falls, N. C.

Most of the other girls in Sara's profession, however, are still sticking to the time-tried custom of giving their flowers to the usher and letting him reverentially pass them over the footlights.

IT has been definitely ascertained that the water in the Colorado Desert Lake comes from the Colorado River. We should like to see the picture of the correspondent cotemporary who telegraphed that it was all the work of an earthquake, and that he saw the everlasting mountains cleft asunder to let in the ocean. Great is "fake" enterprise.

THE richest man in Akron, Ohio, whose wealth is estimated at $4,000,000, is being sued because he returned for taxation only a gold watch and two buggies. There are too many of his ilk in the world, men who dodge the tax gatherer without regard to religion, principle, common honesty or common sense. They should be pinched and pinched tightly until they disgorge legally what is due.

IT does a man good occasionally to tell him that he has an active enemy. It is like giving a dose of medicine for an inactive liver. It is bitter to the taste, but the result is activity instead of sluggishness, and an ambition to keep up in the race. If you have a friend you love, don't tell him that every one in the world loves him. To tell a man that has the effect of putting all his ambition to sleep.

AN Indiana judge who did not believe that women were curious has changed his mind since the ladies at his hotel locked him in his room and refused to release him until he gave them the judgment he intended to give in a divorce case which he had taken under advisement. But then it would be unfair to judge the whole sex by the Indiana woman, and we hope the Judge will not become a disbeliever altogether.

RAILROAD managers hitherto attempted many difficult things. But when a Wabash superintendent issues an order that brakemen and conductors must announce the next station so as to be understood by passengers, he shows that the Wabash is undertaking the impossible. The utmost that can be hoped for is that the next station will be as it always has been, "Y-E-A-uioiuO!" and anybody who does not know enough to get out can be sent back.

NO GIRL likes to be talked to as if she were a baby or a coquet, but a great many men think that this is the only way to talk to girls. They like to be treated as if they had some sense, and babies and flirts have none. A sensible girl is always better pleased to be talked to as if she knew something than to be told that she is pretty. If you want to be popular with the women, treat them as if you thought they knew as much as you do. The chances are good that they know more.

UNIVERSITIES whose locks against women students have resisted time and logic will gradually fall before ridicule. Miss Coit "knew she would not be admitted to Yale, but passed the examination to show how easy it is for women." Yale clings to the absurd superstition that women have not intelligence enough for higher intellectual pursuits. It will be fine irony if women in that part of the country shall yet decline to cross its opened portals, alleging as a reason that its standards are too low for him.

IT begins to look as if the entente cordiale would be preserved between this country and Australia by means of the efforts of those two justly famous diplomats, the Hon. Frank Slavin and the Hon. John Lawrence Sullivan. Hon. Slavin has said that Hon. Sullivan is a bloviating bully and Hon. Sullivan has said that he can lick any man on earth, so it looks as if these two distinguished representatives of their respective countries are approaching a state of friendliness which must impel them to come together and shake hands.

THERE is always a secret enjoyment in a neighborhood when a scold marries a scold. The relatives of both parties are glad that they will be avenged, and the pair is watched with as close interest as a couple of prize fighters. It is not a common event. If you ever noticed, it is usually the grumbling man who marries the meek woman, or the long-tonged woman who marries a frightened, nervous-looking man. When you hear that a scold has married a scold, don't be sorry. You should be glad. Each will receive punishment for the trouble he or she has made for others.

THE Naval Annual, an English publication compiled by Lord Brassey, shows this year that the United States and Spain lead all other nations in the swiftness of their war vessels, and that we rank first with England and Italy in the strength of vessel armors. England leads in tonage and in ships building, and France in the number of vessels available for war. The United States stands third in tonage and ranks second with France and Italy in the number of ships under construction. On the whole, therefore, the outcome of the year shows remarkable progress made by this country towards the building up and strengthening of its navy.

Imperfect Vision.

A girl, some 16 years of age, had all her life been the victim of a blemish in her eye that hindered perfect vision. At last a surgical operation was agreed upon and successfully made.

The girl was kept within the house till her eyes gathered full strength, and was permitted gradually and sparingly to go out of doors. It so happened that some time elapsed after her recovery before she went into the open air after nightfall. One evening she rushed into the parlor with her face aglow with excitement. The joy of a great discovery illumined every feature.

"Oh, come!" she exclaimed: "come out quickly to the lawn and see what beautiful things have appeared in the sky!"

Her friends hastily followed her out of doors, wondering what might have occurred. They saw nothing.

"What do you mean?" they asked her.

"Look!" she said, pointing eagerly heavenward, "don't you see those bright things up there? There they are—and there—sparkling all over the sky!"

"My dear child," said one who loved her, "those are the stars."

Yes, the stars, which she had not seen before. Friends could hardly realize the fact that for all the years of her life the dear child had been moving through God's world with a limited vision, seeing only what lay close around her, utterly oblivious that there were stars, hosts of stars, all over the sky, and all so very beautiful! How strange it all seemed!

Yet how many there are who go through life with imperfect vision of the best things that lie along their pathway, comments the Ram's Horn. The best of love, truth, sympathy and goodness is unknown to them, just because they will not open their eyes to behold. Let none imagine he perceives or understands all of divinity or of divine truth in the world till his eyes have been opened by the truth that points to and makes plain the highest in knowledge and happiness.

French System.

The town of Carcassone in France was recently condemned by the Civil Tribunal to pay indemnities of 100 francs and 50 francs to two of its inhabitants in respect of damages they had sustained by illness caused by eating mushrooms purchased in the public market. The grounds of the decision were that persons buying mushrooms had to right to expect that their innocuous quality had been verified by the inspector of markets before they were publicly exposed for sale, and that this official having neglected his duty, the municipality was liable for the consequences of such neglect. They certainly do manage some things better in France than in some other countries, where caveat emptor is the "custom of the trade" in nearly everything relating to food and drink.—British Medical Journal.

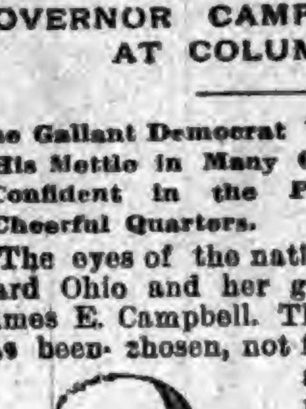
Out of His Line.

Were one to take the patents which have been proved commercially unpractical, and trace them to the source from which they originate, it will be found—almost without exception—that the inventor was a man who had stepped out of his own business and invented some wonderful thing in a line with which he was unfamiliar.—Journal of Useful Inventions.

OHIO'S CHIEF AT HOME.

GOVERNOR CAMPBELL'S LIFE AT COLUMBUS.

The Gallant Democrat Who Has Shown His Mettle in Many Campaigns and Is Confident in the Present One—His Cheerful Quarters.



GOVERNOR CAMPBELL.

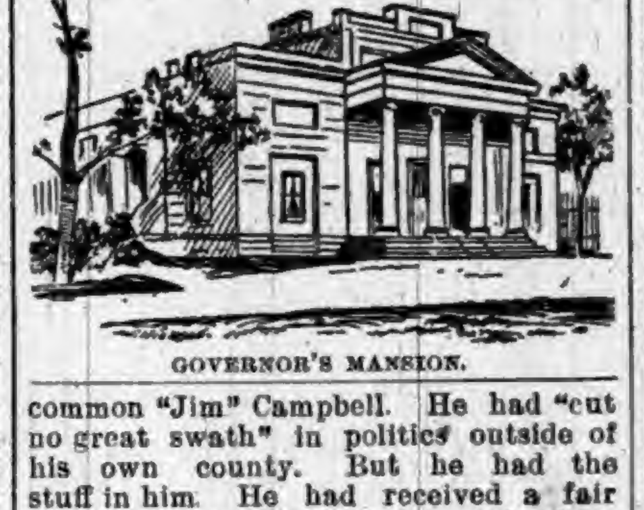
The eyes of the nation are turned toward Ohio and her gallant Governor, James E. Campbell. The Buckeye State has been chosen, not for the first time, as the ground for the preliminary skirmish of a national campaign. Governor Campbell, as the champion of Democracy, has taken up the tariff gauntlet, tossed into the arena by that knight errant, William McKinley, Jr., and an exciting and interesting contest is assured. There are odds in favor of McKinley and his "tin-plate" advocates, says the New York Herald. This State will be flooded with money by the manufacturers of the country, who draw immense profits from an "iniquitous system of taxation," for with the defeat of Champion McKinley high protective tariff will meet an ignominious death.

Despite all this Ohio's gallant Governor, after having put to rout the malcontents of his own party, enters the fight with confidence and determination to win. He feels that the eyes of the nation are upon him; that a great political trust is imposed, which, if he cannot ultimately carry out his efforts, must at least redound to his credit.

Governor Campbell has the reputation of being a vigorous campaigner, and it is evident that he is thoroughly alive to the situation. He is just now in the full strength of manhood. Forty-eight years have tinged his hair with gray, but he possesses a wonderful amount of energy, which has carried him over many a rough place. He comes from good stock—good fighting stock, as his enemies in Ohio can bear witness. One of his ancestors was Capt. John Parker, who commanded the colonial troops at the battle of Lexington, and another was with Montgomery at the assault on Quebec.

Both his grandfathers were soldiers in the war of 1812. His father, Andrew Campbell, was a physician of prominence in Middleton, Butler County, Ohio, where, on July 7, 1843, the future Governor was ushered into the world. His uncle, too, Lewis D. Campbell, was a statesman of note.

Ten years ago the "Butler County Mascot," as he is familiarly known, was common "Jim" Campbell. He had "cut no great swath" in politics outside of his own county. But he had the stuff in him. He had received a fair education and had taught school at eighteen. Before he had reached his majority he joined the navy and served on the Mississippi and its tributaries, taking part in naval engagements at Fort De Russey, Tunica Bend, and other places. He was discharged for disability, much against his own wish, and sent home. After he recovered he began the study of law, and at twenty-four he hung out his shingle in the quiet little town of Hamilton.



GOVERNOR'S MANSION.

Young Campbell was successful in his law practice, and soon became popular and widely known by his agreeable social qualities. His first venture of note in politics was in 1877, when he was elected Prosecuting Attorney, serving until 1880. He was a candidate for the State Senate in 1879, and only lacked twelve votes of being elected. Mr. Campbell had demonstrated his popularity and his ability as a campaigner, however, and his friends successfully urged his nomination as candidate for member of Congress. Notwithstanding there was a large Republican majority in his district, he came out of the contest a good winner.

He was re elected in 1884, and again in 1886, his last victory being on the meager plurality of two votes. Butler County Democrats had begun to look upon him now as a mascot, and great things were predicted for him in the future.

Mr. Campbell's career in Congress was marked by close application to the interest of his constituents, and he made a wide reputation by championing the cause of the ex-soldiers and by his interest in measures for the welfare of the wage earners.

Mr. Campbell's reputation as a mascot now brought him forward as a candidate for Governor, he being the unanimous choice of the Democratic State convention in 1889. His campaign was one brilliant series of aggressive movements that worried and finally dumfounded his political opponents. He came out of the fight with flying colors, having received the largest vote ever cast in the State for any candidate for Governor, and 46,218 votes more than the Democratic candidate of the preceding gubernatorial election.

Gov. Campbell's record as chief executive of the State is too well known to require repetition. He has been noted for an inflexible adherence to that which he believed to be right, which was most forcibly illustrated by his bold stroke at the political corruption in Hamilton County. Even his most sanguine friends doubted his ability to beat down the storm of wrath and indignation, but his generalship carried him through, and his renomination was a complete and signal victory.

Governor Campbell is a hard worker. He always reaches his office at the capitol in the morning before his clerks, and by the time they arrive, shaking off their prolonged slumbers, he is busy opening his mail and making things lively all around. He is usually the last to leave the office, too, at meal hours and at night.

The Governor is domestic in his habits, and an attendant upon the Presbyterian Church, besides being a member of the G. A. R., Elks, Masons and Knights of Pythias.

"A Rather Slight Exaggeration."

The New York Press, the high-tariff organ, had a beautiful picture in its issue of July 29, declaring that hatters in France earn only $5.50 per week, whereas in the United States hatters earn $30 per week. Concerning this statement, a hatter of Danbury, Conn., himself a believer in a high tariff, writes to the Press as follows: "I see in today's Press in the 'Tariff Pictures' a rather slight exaggeration in regard to the wages of hatters. There are a good many hatters in France who make more, say from 50 to 60 francs ($10 to $12) a week. Of course they are first-class men, and get wages accordingly. Now, let us look at the American hatter. The average wages of a silk hatter in New York or elsewhere are $15 a week. Some weeks, it is true, they make $25 to $30. But how often does that happen? Maybe ten to fifteen times a year, and then they have week after week when they have nothing to do at all. The same with the felt hatter. The maker, or hat sizer, if he averages $12 a week, year in and year out, is doing well. Now, the next to him, the man who presses, or does what is called "finishing," in our trade parlance, if he averages $15 a week, he also can say that he has done well. Next is the curler, who, years ago, made very large wages. He, too, has come down to the same level as the above named fellow-tradesmen."

A "rather slight exaggeration," to be sure, but the Press doesn't believe in telling big ones.

A COMPLICATED DUTY.

Some of the Absurdities of the American Tariff Upon Lead Ores.

It was complained of one Roman Emperor that he caused the laws to be written in exceedingly small characters and hung high upon the pillars of publication, so that the short-legged and the short-sighted could learn the Emperor's will only through the courtesy of tall and far-sighted friends. Whether or not the Emperor had a grudge against little and weak-eyed men this story does not say, but his evil design was to make it difficult for citizens to know the law, and betray them into crime in order that he might enjoy the spectacle of their punishment.

Curiously enough, among modern nations, the free republic of the United States is one of several to emulate the practice of this Roman Emperor. It requires an expert to know what are the tariff laws of this country, and private citizens are deterred from importing foreign goods because it is so easy for the importer to break the law. The lead ore tariff is an admirable illustration of this very point. Ores of the precious metals are, and have always been admitted to the United States free of duty. But ores of lead pay a duty. Now, it happens that most of the silver now produced is found in combination with lead. Mexico sends us a great deal of such ore. This being the case, it became necessary to determine what portion of the doubly laden ore should come in free and what portion should pay duty on the lead contained. In 1880, says a Washington correspondent, the Treasury Department decided, in a special case, that a silver-iron ore was entitled to free entry as silver ore, in which the value of the silver was "largely in excess of the value of the iron." The principle involved in this decision was twice reaffirmed six years later in the case of ores containing silver and lead; the Senate Judiciary Committee also, in 1888, reported in favor of the classification of such mixed ores according to the metal which predominated in value.

Bearing in mind the technical distinction between a silver ore and an ore of baser metal, even though the latter may have a modicum of silver in it, and that lead ores, and the lead contained in silver ores, pay a duty of one and one-half cents a pound, it is very important to find out, when a load of ore containing both silver and lead comes into this country from Mexico, whether it is technically silver ore or lead ore; for, in the one case, duty must be paid on the whole bulk, while in the other it is paid on a part only.

Within a few days a Treasury circular came out announcing that "in determining the value of lead contained in Mexican ores, such values will be computed at the latest known price of bar lead in the New York market, less 1½ cents per pound."

This means that there has been a fresh onslaught by the owners of American smelting works to procure a change in the valuation established a year ago, namely, the New York price of bar lead less 1 cent a pound. These men have been anxious to get the deduction from the New York price increased to 2 cents, while the few owners of American mines which produce silver-lead ores that can be used in fluxing have worked hard to keep the old rate intact. The cent-and-a-half basis is the result of a compromise between the two conflicting interests.

One and one-half cents duty on a pound of lead ore means $30 a ton—a tax which operates as an absolute prohibition.

Now, how is the question of classification settled? Specimens of the ore as it reaches the American port of entry are taken out of the cargo and assayed. The amount of silver in weight to the ton, is estimated from this assay, and also the amount of lead. The Collector then ascertains the New York price of silver, according to the latest available advices, and deducts 5 per cent. from that—supposed to be about equivalent to the cost of transportation across the United States, and thus to represent fairly the difference between the value of silver at the Mexican border and in the metropolitan market. By multiplying this equalized price by the weight of silver to the ton of ore as shown by the assay, the silver valuation of the ore is determined. A like process is gone through with the lead in the ore, except that a specific sum per pound, instead of a percentage, is deducted from the New York price. If, on comparing the two results, it is found that the value of the silver in a ton of the ore would be greater than the value of the lead in the same ton, the ore is treated as a silver ore, and admitted on payment of the duty of 1½ cents per pound on the lead which could be extracted from the ore.

This Mexican ore business illustrates the charm of our protective tariff system as few other things can.

Suppose a shrewd Mexican shipper to have discovered a loose joint here and there in the method of handling ores preparatory to the assay, and to avail himself of this discovery by arranging his shipments so that only high-grade samples shall fall into the hands of the assayer, while low-grade ores are really in the majority. It is not reasonable to expect that, with tens of thousands of tons of ore crossing the Mexican border every year, the utmost care can be exercised by the inferior customs force employed there. Moreover, the incentives to corruption under the present regime are very great, and an unscrupulous mine-owner could well afford to smooth the path of his low-grade ores into this country if he could find the right men on this side of the frontier to help him by picking their specimens knowingly.

But, even supposing the matter to be honestly conducted, it has taken several days, let us say, for the shipper to get his ore from the mines to the border. When it left the mines, the price of silver was one dollar and two cents an ounce in New York, but, by the sudden unloading of speculators, it has dropped to ninety-five cents before the assayer gets a chance to pass upon the specimens; or lead, which has been three and a half cents a pound for some time, has mounted to five cents. Either of these things is liable to happen at any time; indeed, both might happen at once. Either accident would of itself be enough, in many cases, to change a silver ore into a lead ore during the mere process of transporting a train-load of the stuff from mines to market.

WILLETTS & GRAY, in discussing the price of sugar, say: "The average of daily quotations from Jan. 1 to April 1 was 5.645 cents per pound for 96 degrees centrifugals and 6.301 cents per pound for granulated. The average daily prices from April 1 to July 1 was 3.381 cents per pound net for 96 degrees centrifugals and 4.215 cents per pound net for granulated." And the American Economist adds: "Here was a fall of 2.264 cents a pound on the first-mentioned grade and of 2.086 cents on the other, both directly caused by the McKinley law. Consumers will no doubt appreciate these, the real McKinley prices." There is nothing like making a man hanker for more as to give him only a taste of a good thing.

OPPRESSING THE POOR.

Some Facts About the Increased Duty on Corduroy Cloth.

Cheap corduroy is used for clothing by many thousands of workingmen, and a finer quality is used to some extent by the well-to-do. It was to have been expected that in making any change in the tariff on corduroy even the framers of the McKinley bill would have taken care that the increase should be no greater on the cheap than on the more expensive article. The contrary, however, is the fact. The truth is that the increase on the finer goods is comparatively light while that on the poor is about 33⅓ per cent. Here are some eloquent figures furnished by a correspondent of the New York Evening Post:

	Cheap grade.	Dearer grade.
Cost per yard in England	17c	50c
Cost in the U. S., duty free	21½c	60c
Cost in the U. S., under old tariff (35 per cent. ad valorem)	25½c	70c
Cost in the U. S., under McKinley tariff (14c per sq. yd. plus 20 per ct. ad valorem)	36c	82c
Change in tariff increases cost	10½c or 41 per ct.	3c or 4 per ct.
McKinley tariff adds to duty-free cost	66 per ct.	36 per ct.

This, however, does not tell the whole story. When the duty was increased no corduroy was made in the United States. The owners of the Crompton Mills at Providence, R. I., however, wished to make corduroys, and after the duty had been increased in the original bill, it was still further increased in conference committee on the very night before the measure was passed. Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island is credited with having brought about this second increase of duty. Since the law went into effect the Crompton Mills Company has been experimenting with corduroy. The company professes to be able to supply all that is needed, but dealers deny this and importers affirm that the importations of corduroy have fallen off enormously because the poor are no longer able to buy at the enhanced price. They must substitute some other and less satisfactory material, because the Government of the United States has consented to discourage the importation of cheap corduroys in the interest of a single company of manufacturers.

Josiah H. Fithian & Co., of New York, are agents of the Crompton Company, and when a reporter of the Evening Post asked Mr. Fithian about corduroys here is what he said: "I have always found that 'the still pig gets the most swill.' And it is 'swill' that I am after, not the dissemination of information. Therefore—to your question—no."

It would have been well for Mr. Fithian had he contented himself with this porcine reply, but for some curious reason he went on to say these things of the McKinley bill and protection:

"I don't know what was the aim of it. I don't know that the framers of the tariff had any aim. I sometimes think they hadn't. What aim, for instance, could they have had in requiring that every imported article should be stamped with the country of its origin? I hear they acted on the theory that Americans were so patriotic that, on seeing a thing was foreign, they would buy something domestic. But would not sensible men know that Americans have sufficient human nature to buy what is the best value for their money, no matter where it comes from? For my part, whenever I go to buy things for my personal use and goods are shown me, and I am told that they are of domestic manufacture, I nearly always pass them by, because experience has taught me that almost invariably the foreign-made article is more substantial and the better bargain. In fact, I am by nature a free-trader—one on the broad principle of Henry Ward Beecher, that all the world is one kindred, and that no kinsman has a right to set up barriers against the others. The Crompton Mills did not need so high a duty on corduroy; they would succeed better without it."

"Do you mean if they had no higher tariff than the old?"

"No: I mean without any tariff at all—with absolute free trade. True, wages would be reduced, but the purchasing power of money would so increase that the equalization would be perfect."

The McKinley Tariff and Profits.

The Press, the junior organ of McKinleyism of New York, lets out the truth now and then. On July 21, in a short editorial on the French tariff, it declared: "No one will pretend that the industries of France are in their infancy. They are venerable, even as compared with British manufactures, and if ever established they are established now. But the French, who are among the shrewdest people on earth, recognize that protection is not a matter only of fostering industries to the point of vigorous existence, but that it is needed, also, to keep them profitable."

To make profits big is, as the Press says, the keynote of high-tariffism. It uses the keynote of the McKinley tariff which raised the duties on imports to an average of 60 per cent., or quite the prohibitive point. This enables the big trusts and combinations to water their capitalization, and make profits not only on the real capital but also on the water.

Brilliant examples of this are the window-glass combination, the plate-glass combine, the flint-glass monopoly, in which a profit of 40 per cent. is to be considered low. Laws enacted by the same men who made the McKinley tariff are construed by its beneficiaries to enable these combines to import contract laborers, as in the case of the glass workers, thus giving them free trade in labor. At the same time, protected by high duties, they charge consumers here all that the tariff allows, and sell their surplus abroad at low prices. The farmer and the laborer are thus made to pay the fiddler. The Press could not have told the truth in a plainer way had it declared of the McKinley tariff that it was an "act to increase the profits of trusts and monopolies out of the wages and earnings of laborers and farmers."

RECIPROCITY doesn't seem to be crowding Great Britain out of the Brazilian market. The imports from England for the first four months of 1891 show a general increase of cotton goods from $3,700,000 in 1890 to $7,600,000 in 1891, with a decided increase in linen and woolen stuffs and railroad material. Reciprocity doesn't decrease the selling price of American goods or increase the price of British wares. The cheapest vender takes the market. There is no sentiment in trade.

THE State of New Jersey with the markets of two of the foremost cities of the country on her borders, and, therefore, ideally situated in accordance with the "home market" theory, has no less than 313 deserted and abandoned farms. Will the high tariff jugglers please explain to the farmers how soon farming is to be made prosperous under the system which enables trusts and monopolies to pocket the farmers' profits?

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 20, 1891.
Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.
After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause.
Respectfully,

Vigorous Exercise.

A stroll for mental relaxation, or for pure air, or for pleasant companionship, valuable as this is, is far from accomplishing the full object of physical exercise. Of course, such exercise is meant mainly for brain workers, for the sedentary, for those who do not find it in their employment.

Now vigorous exercise—and exercise only when it is sufficiently vigorous—equalizes the circulation. It brings it to the surface and carries it strongly to the furthest extremities. It relieves undue pressure on the brain, and checks the tendency to congest in the vital organs. It enables the blood to pass freely through the almost invisible network (the capillaries) which it must all traverse in its passage from the arteries to the veins, and thence to the heart and lungs, with its load of accumulated impurities. It arouses to more vigorous action those millions of tiny workers (the cells) by which all the tissues of muscle, nerve, membrane, bone, etc., are perpetually renewed.

Such exercise also quickens the eliminating organs—those by which the body gets rid of its waste matter. One need not take poison to die of poison. Once at least every year the entire body passes off as dead matter, and each particle is as much poison as if drank from an infected well.

Now the lungs, with their deeper and fuller inspiration induced by vigorous exercise, throw off more effectively the deadly carbon, and take in larger draughts of life-giving oxygen; and the heart sends a purer blood with a fuller flow through the system. The huge liver, through which must pass for still further purification all the blood of the body, is especially liable to congestion. It cannot hasten the blood, as does the heart by its own contraction, nor as do the lungs by the aid of the muscles of the chest and diaphragm.

It is now known that the successive collapse and inflation of the lungs greatly aid the circulation of the blood through the liver, and that this circulation is especially helped by the deep breathing caused by vigorous exercise, let your walk be brisk with a full swing of the arms, and if possible let it include more or less of "uphill."—Youth's Companion.

Preserving Property, if Not Propriety.

A rather good story is told of an occurrence at a swell society residence in one of the fashionable quarters of Washington, a few evenings ago. A lady of the house was showing a visitor of her own sex—herself a leader of the upper-crust—some very handsome photographs. While engaged in this way a fresh caller arrived, and the hostess asked the lady who was admiring the pictures to excuse her.

"Oh, don't mind me," said the other, "I will stay here and finish examining the photos."

"No, you won't," said the fair entertainer, "I've lost too many that way already," and gathering up her treasures in haste, she moved away.—Washington Post.

IN A SHIP'S STEERAGE.

ACROSS THE OCEAN ON A SECOND-CLASS TICKET.

Experience of a Passenger Who Tried It from Curiosity—Huddled Like Cattle—Emigrants Roughly Treated—Sidelights on a Dark Subject.

I HAVE spent twelve days in the steerage of an emigrant ship, and I am still alive.

The steerage of an emigrant vessel—even though it be on an Atlantic liner—is a by no means palatial abode, and the consorting together of comparative strangers for days in a confined space must be productive of many incidents of both humor and pathos. Therefore, I determined to make my return trip to America, after five weeks' holiday in Europe, a means of observation and profit—I cannot now say, pleasure.

Consigning my baggage to the care of a friend who traveled by the saloon, I content myself with the roughest suit of clothes I can find, and armed with a huge bundle, consisting of a mattress, a heavy rug, a brush and comb, towel and soap, tin cup, two tin plates, and knife, fork and spoon, I embark upon the tender at Prince's Landing, Liverpool, England, and amidst an uncomfortable crowd of people and baggage, I find myself on my way to "the ship that's to carry me over."

At last we reach her, and I mount to the upper deck, having my bundle thrown up after me in a very unceremonious manner.

I already begin to realize that I am not feeling very happy—I grasp my bundle and look around. "Down-stairs," says a gruff voice, and another unceremonious shove brings me opposite a rickety-looking ladder, down which I have to climb. My incumbrance causes me rather to fall than walk down, and when I reach the lower deck, I sit on the bundle and sigh.

I haven't been sitting there a minute before I get another ungentle shove, and a gruffer voice exclaims, "Down-stairs!"

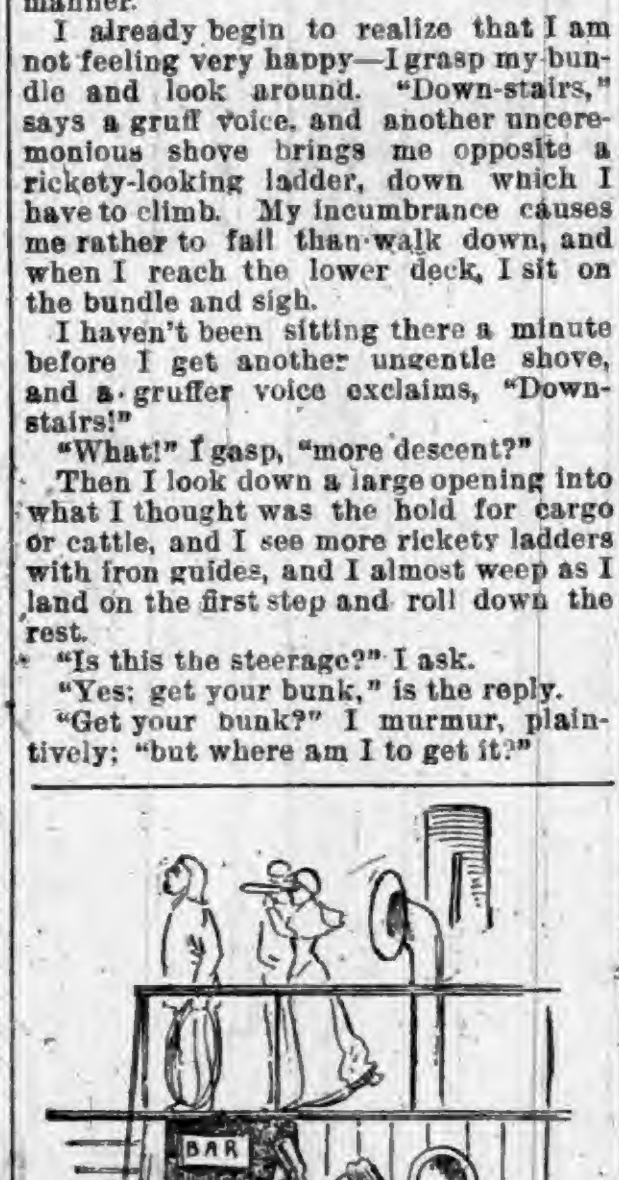
"What!" I gasp, "more descent?"

Then I look down a large opening into what I thought was the hold for cargo or cattle, and I see more rickety ladders with iron guides, and I almost weep as I land on the first step and roll down the rest.

"Is this the steerage?" I ask.

"Yes; get your bunk," is the reply.

"Get your bunk?" I murmur, plaintively; "but where am I to get it?"



THE STEERAGE BAR.

"Over there," I am told, and as the information is accompanied by no further direction, I prefer the request:

"Won't you please show me where it is?"

"Over there, I told yer!" yells the gentleman in brass buttons, and he shoves me toward a narrow doorway.

I begin to wonder whether this shoving is customary all through the voyage. Alas! I speedily find out that it is a very general practice.

However, I go through the door, and, after many struggles, manage to squeeze my bundle through the aperture, and there I see two long rows, on each side, of what appear to me to be shelves. A young fellow in shirt sleeves is arranging something on one of the shelves, and I timidly venture to ask:

"Which is my bunk, please?"

"Any bloody one yer like," he says; "fust come, fust served." Then seeing me perplexed, he kindly adds, "Yere, shove yer things up yere next to mine." and he lifts my bundle and throws it on to one of the top shelves.

Then the horrible truth dawns upon me. This is to be my bed-room, that my bunk, and the slight partitions, two inches high, are all that will separate dozens of us during our forthcoming slumbers.

We're off! Shortly we have our first meal—bread, butter and tea. That is, such names apply to similar-looking articles on shore, but the present condiments look suspicious, and as I fortified myself with a powerful meal before I embarked I refuse the allurements of this repast, and content myself with looking around, and studying my fellow-emigrants.

We number in all—I am speaking only of the steerage—three hundred and twenty-six persons, two hundred and six of these being males and the remainder women and children. Our nationalities comprise Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, Russians, Fins, Polish Jews, Polaks, Russian Jews (in families of three and four, and amounting to about fifty in all), about ten Britishers, fully fifty Irishmen and frisksome colleens, one Scotchmen, one colored man, and one American (my unfortunate self).

The elaborate tea being over, my fellow voyagers troop up onto the upper deck, look around as if they felt lost, then sit or lie about the deck (steerage passengers have no forms or benches to sit upon). The men smoke their pipes and the women look sad, as if they were wondering how long it would be before they were seasick. But the women haven't much time to enjoy the fresh air to-night, for punctually at dusk down stairs they must go and keep sacredly and solely to the quarters provided for single women and married couples.

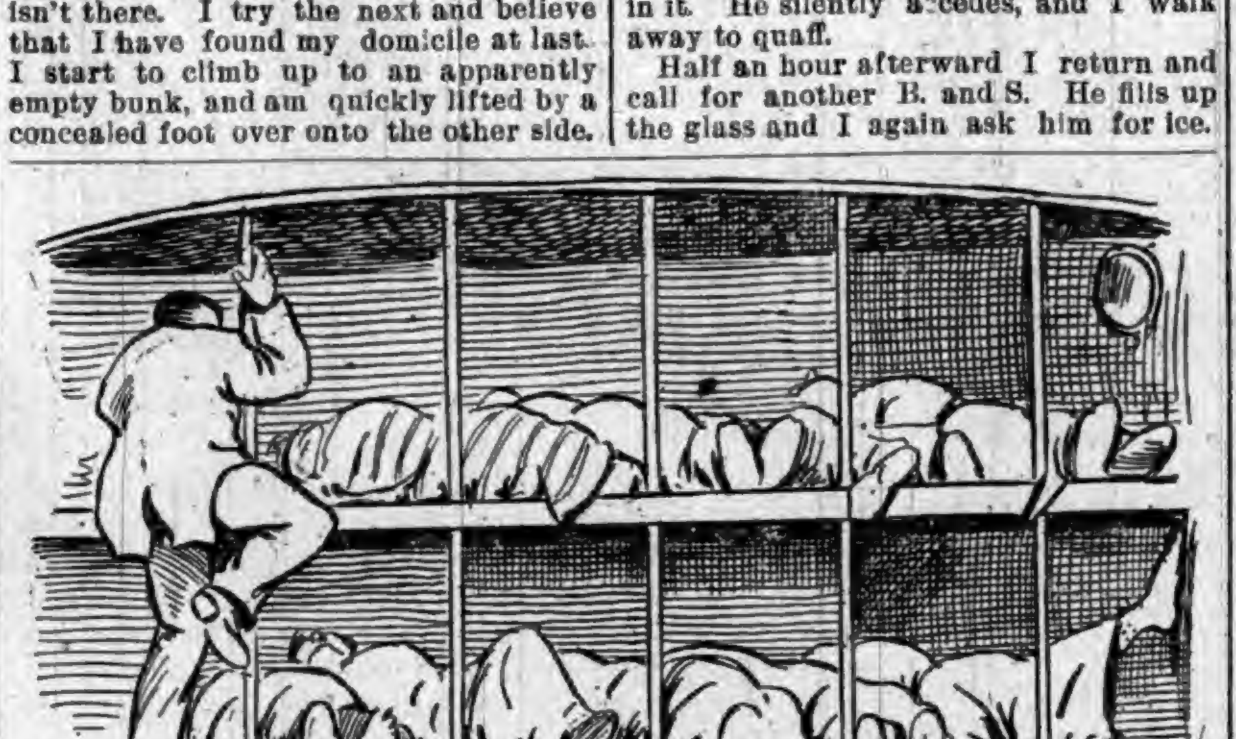
I determine to retire, so I wend my way down the ladder into the apartment largely labeled, "Single Men."

Here a new difficulty presents itself. I have been so accustomed to hotel rooms with numbered doors that I have neglected to note that here are only doorways, and there are many of them, and they are all alike, what shall I do? I daren't ask again "which is my bunk?" I sadly remember the last reply I received to that question. The only thing I can do is to explore them all.

I am standing in a long corridor-like place which runs from for'ard to 'midships. There is very little room to move, for all possible vacant space is occupied by long, bare, rough pine slabs down the center, which serve as tables, with some narrower slabs either side of them for seating accommodation.

All around me are what appear to be innumerable canvas shades, seven feet wide, two covering the space between roof and floor. At intervals between these shades are seven doorways, each representing the entrance to a compartment, and each compartment containing a double tier of bunks on either side, with a three-foot passage down the center. These seven compartments are arranged to hold two hundred and twenty human beings—one hundred and fourteen on the starboard—but only one hundred and eight on the port side, the remaining space here being occupied by the steerage stewards.

I grope my way into the center compartment on the port side. Already sonorous music has begun, and I wonder if I shall have to endure these sounds night after night. Luckily my bunk isn't there. I try the next and believe that I have found my domicile at last. I start to climb up to an apparently empty bunk, and am quickly lifted by a concealed foot over onto the other side.



THE STEERAGE BUNKS.

This isn't pleasant. I scramble down and out and determine not to stay there even if I have the right.

I try a third, and this time success rewards me. I start to undress, and wonder where I shall hang my clothes. No nails, no hooks, no space for anything but my aching form. I am compelled to double up my coat and vest and use them as a pillow, keeping on the rest of my clothes until I have time to watch how the others manage. Oh, for a soft board in a precinct cell in preference to this!

I toss about in agony, and so tire myself by turnings and twistings that I am almost dozing when two hilarious beings enter shouting a London comic song with a refrain of "Hi-tiddlety-hi-ti! I'm all right!"

I venture to disagree with their opinions of themselves, and come very near getting my head punched, but luckily one of the enthusiasts is my neighbor, Louis. He pacifies matters by crawling all over me, and goes off to sleep after telling his life history to himself in a maudlin tone. Then I do manage to indulge in a few fitful slumbers, and gladly arise at 6 o'clock to prepare for breakfast.

Armed with my soap and towel I mount the ladder, walk about thirty yards, and join five others who are washing at an iron tank filled with water from taps. Perfect ablution is out of the question. I am crowded away the moment I touch the water, and the bell rings for breakfast before I am properly dry.

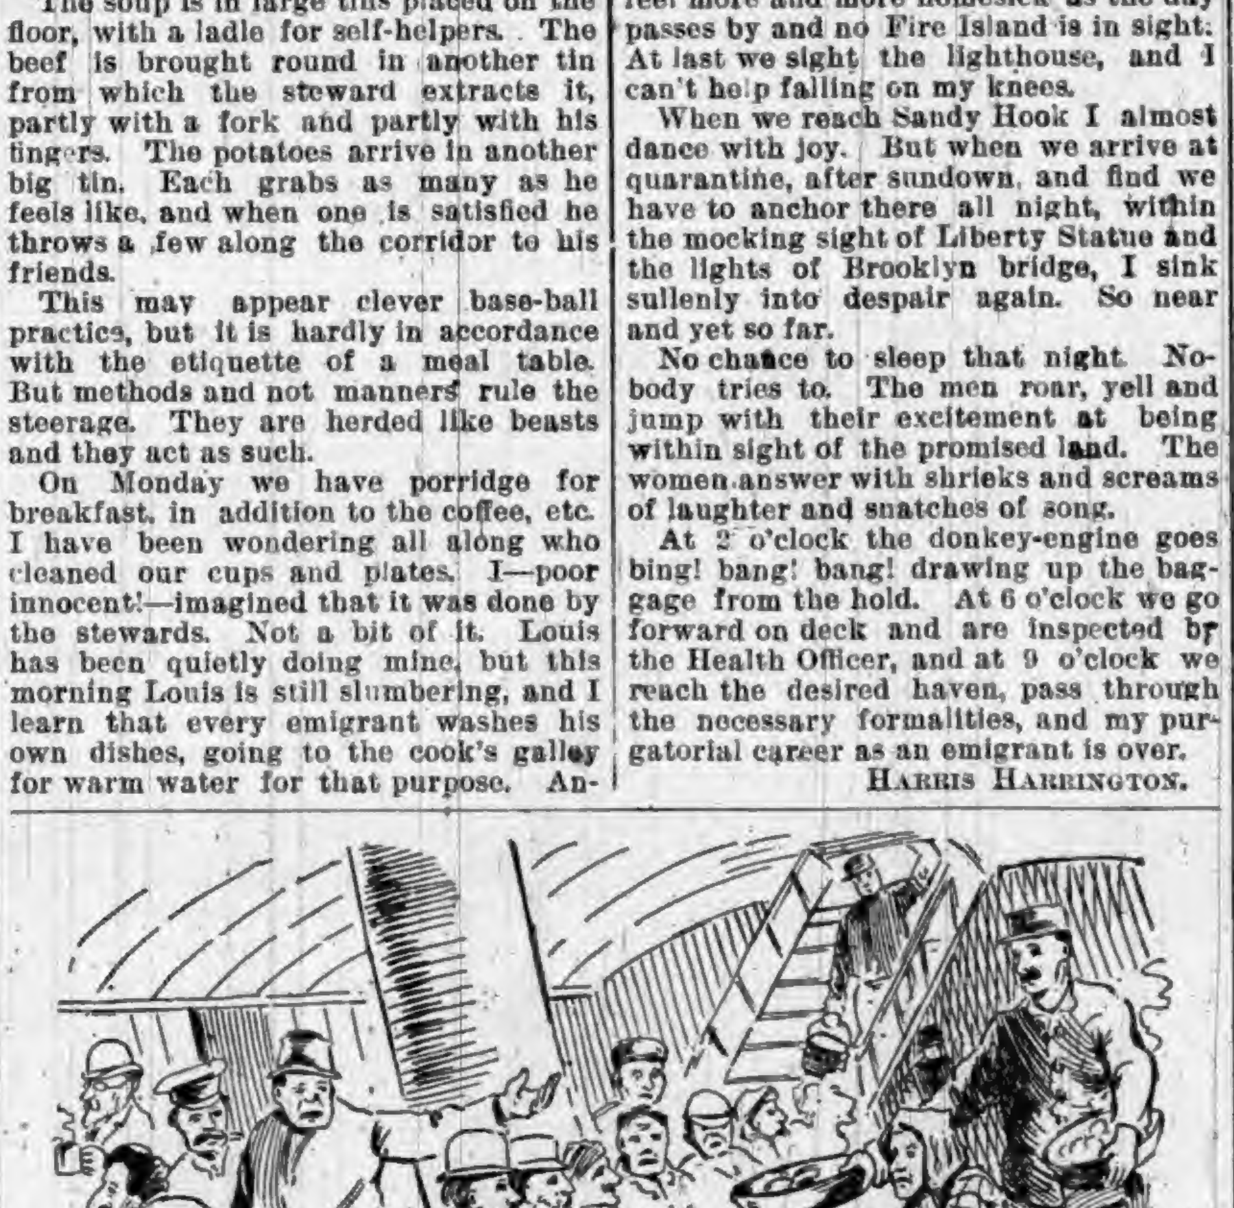
Our Sunday breakfast consists of bread, butter, and coffee. The bread and butter (same old axle-grease) is in tins on the table, the coffee, ready milked (condensed milk and water, with a preponderance of the latter) and sugared, is brought round by the stewards in spouted cans and poured into our tin mugs as we hold them out. Here, again, it is a case of shove, and if you don't shove forward pretty hard you are liable to get left.

At 12:30 we are rung to our Sunday dinner. This consists of soup, boiled beef (from which the previous soup has evidently been made, for there is not the slighest nutriment in the meat), potatoes in their jackets, and plum (?) pudding. Here again it is manifest that quantity gives full place to quality. It is also evident that we must scramble for our food.

The soup is in large tins placed on the floor, with a ladle for self-helpers. The beef is brought round in another tin from which the steward extracts it, partly with a fork and partly with his fingers. The potatoes arrive in another big tin. Each grabs as many as he feels like, and when one is satisfied he throws a few along the corridor to his friends.

This may appear clever base-ball practice, but it is hardly in accordance with the etiquette of a meal table. But methods and not manners rule the steerage. They are herded like beasts and they act as such.

On Monday we have porridge for breakfast, in addition to the coffee, etc. I have been wondering all along who cleaned our cups and plates. I—poor innocent!—imagined that it was done by the stewards. Not a bit of it. Louis has been quietly doing mine, but this morning Louis is still slumbering, and I learn that every emigrant washes his own dishes, going to the cook's galley for warm water for that purpose. Another bit of ignominy for me, but I have to take it in with the rest.



DINNER IN THE STEERAGE.

Every morning after breakfast all steerage passengers must get upon deck while the doctor makes an inspection of the compartments.

A self-opinionated little fellow is this doctor, who seems to imagine that he is placed there for no other purpose than to keep his mustache in order and full view. I ask him for some cod-liver oil.

"Why don't you bring your own cod-liver oil?" he replies.

I venture to suggest that I don't keep a drug store.

"Neither do I. Passengers bring their own."

Ah! At last I am a "passenger" at any rate. I had begun to think I was only a thing.

Later on I remarked that a seidlitz powder would be useful, at which intimation he slammed the door in my face.

I find that the matron of the steerage daily gives the doctor a tongue-lashing, and that everybody on board hates him. However, after dinner to-day he has a chance to show his brutality.

We are all mustered down-stairs, and those who are vaccinated receive tickets, "VACCINATED! RETAIN THIS."

Those who are not vaccinated have to pass under this brutal scalpel's hands. He just gives them a dig or two roughly with the knife, and shoves them on to make way for the next.

Our dinner to-day consists of soup, corned beef, and potatoes. This is the menu for Monday, Thursday and Saturday, while soup, salt cod and potatoes serve for Tuesday and Friday. Wednesday has a specialty to itself in soup, hot boiled beef and potatoes. All very thriving, if it were not thrown at us.

Every afternoon the women bring out their own tea and go to the galley for hot water in their tea-pots. Then they have a feast, after which they sit inside just over the engine boilers and warm themselves and dry their clothes at the same time.

I get a great idea of the Englishman's ignorance of mixed drinks when I go to the bartender for a brandy and soda. I astonish him by asking for a piece of ice in it. He silently accedes, and I walk away to quaff.

Half an hour afterward I return and call for another B. and S. He fills up the glass and I again ask him for ice. He stares at me and says:

"Why, where is the piece of ice you had just now?"

Things run very much the same until our second Sunday night, then the bar being closed for a very long time, the whole gang of Irishmen assemble in front of it, and form themselves into a Come-all-ye choir. The tunes are very quaint but the verses seem interminable, and the vigor of the vocalists rather repels than attracts.

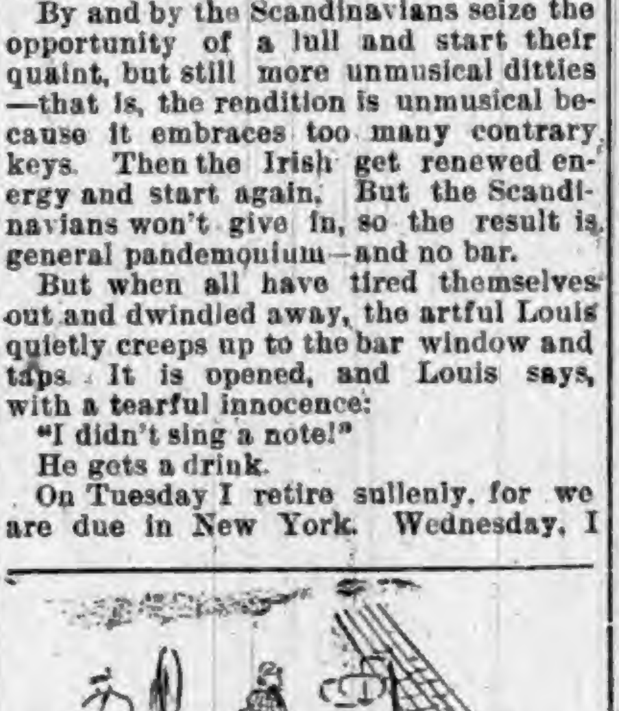
By and by the Scandinavians seize the opportunity of a lull and start their quaint, but still more unmusical ditties—that is, the rendition is unmusical because it embraces too many contrary keys. Then the Irish get renewed energy and start again. But the Scandinavians won't give in, so the result is general pandemonium—and no bar.

But when all have tired themselves out and dwindled away, the artful Louis quietly creeps up to the bar window and taps. It is opened, and Louis says, with a tearful innocence:

"I didn't sing a note!"

He gets a drink.

On Tuesday I retire sullenly, for we are due in New York. Wednesday, I feel more and more homesick as the day passes by and no Fire Island is in sight. At last we sight the lighthouse, and I can't help falling on my knees.



WASHING DISHES.

When we reach Sandy Hook I almost dance with joy. But when we arrive at quarantine, after sundown, and find we have to anchor there all night, within the mocking sight of Liberty Statue and the lights of Brooklyn bridge, I sink sullenly into despair again. So near and yet so far.

No chance to sleep that night. Nobody tries to. The men roar, yell and jump with their excitement at being within sight of the promised land. The women answer with shrieks and screams of laughter and snatches of song.

At 2 o'clock the donkey-engine goes bing! bang! bang! drawing up the baggage from the hold. At 6 o'clock we go forward on deck and are inspected by the Health Officer, and at 9 o'clock we reach the desired haven, pass through the necessary formalities, and my purgatorial career as an emigrant is over.

HARRIS HARRINGTON.

His Own Funeral.

Capt. Ben Wakefield, of Biddeford, who lost his life Monday, once attended his own funeral, being one of the few men who have had that privilege, says the Bangor (Me.) Commercial. He had gone on a fishing trip down on the Grand Banks and had been away from home a good while without his family hearing from him. The same season had proved very disastrous to a number of other fishermen who went out from thereabouts, and the vessel Capt. Ben was in had her share of hard luck, and the report reached home that she, with her crew, was lost. Time passed and Capt. Ben did not return, until at last his family gave up all hope that he had been saved and a day was set for the memorial services. The services were held in the church at Cape Porpoise. The minister had offered prayer for the absent fisherman who was supposed to have found his grave in the sea, and was just beginning his sermon when Capt. Ben walked into the church.

THE evidence thus far adduced indicates that Sir William Gordon-Cumming married the pick of the Garner family and that she isn't likely to be spoiled by being taken into the "best" society.

A Tale of the Crimea.

There was one Russian fellow who had a sand-pit all of his own, right in front of our trenches. I never saw anybody so persevering as that man was. Early in the morning he'd be popping away, and there he'd stay until nightfall, taking his food with him into the pit. He seemed to take a real pleasure in it, and, as he was a very fine shot and never let us get much of a chance at him, he was not a popular character in the advanced trenches. Many a good fellow he sent to glory. It got such a nuisance that we dropped shells at him now and again but he minded them no more than if they had been so many oranges. One day I was down in the trenches when Col. Mancor, of the Forty-eighth—a splendid shot and a great man for sport—came along. A party with a sergeant were at work, and just as the Colonel came up one of them dropped a ball through his head. "Deuced good shot? Who fired that?" says the Colonel, putting on his eyeglass. "Man in the rifle-pit to the left, sir," answers the Sergeant. "Never saw a neater shot," says the Colonel. "He only showed for a moment, and wouldn't have shown then only that the edge of the trench is a bit worn away. Does he often shoot like that?" "Terribly dangerous man," replied the Sergeant; "kills more than all the guns in the Redan." "Now, Major," says the Colonel, turning to another officer who was with him, "what's the odds against my picking him off?" "In how long?" "Within ten minutes." "Two to one in ponies, I'll give you," says the Major. "Say three, and its a bargain." "Three to one in ponies," answered the Major, and the bet was made. He was a great man for measuring his powder was the Colonel, and always emptied out a cartridge and then filled it up again, according to his taste. He took about half his time getting the Sergeant's gun loaded to please him. At last he got it right, and the glass screwed well into his eye. "Now, my lads," said he, "just push poor Smith here up over the trench. He's dead enough and another wound will make little difference to him." The men began to hoist the body up, and the Colonel stood, may be twenty yards off, peering over the edge with eyes like a lynx. As soon as the top of Smith's shako appeared we saw the barrel of the gun come slowly out of the sand-pit, and when his poor dead face looks over the edge, whiz comes a bullet right through the forehead. The Russian, he peeps out of the pit to see the effects of his shot, and he never looks at anything again until he sees the everlasting river. The Colonel fired with a sort of a chuckle, and the rifleman sprang up in the air and ran a matter of ten or twelve paces toward us and then down on his face as dead as a door-nail. "Double or quits on the man in the pit to the right," says the Colonel, loading up his gun again, but I think the Major had dropped money enough for one day over his shooting, for he wouldn't hear of another try. By the way, the money was handed over to Smith's widow, for he was a free-handed gentleman was the Colonel.—All the Year Round.

A Great Mexican Farm.

"On one farm in Mexico I saw enough of the luxuries of life produced to make any man happy," remarked C. E. Wood, of El Paso, Texas, the other day, to a reporter for the Kansas City Times. "The farm was not large as some farms go in Mexico, but it was, to use a slang phrase, a 'stunner.' I don't think the mind of man could imagine a vegetable product that could not be produced on that farm. At any rate, I saw growing coffee, sugar, rice, potatoes, rye, wheat, oats, corn, berries, cabbage, tomatoes, apples, bananas, cocoa, figs, cochineal, and a dozen other products. On the upper end of this farm you could find gold, silver, sapphires, onyx and other precious stones. Some of these articles were not produced in quantities large enough to pay to market them, but they were all found there and at the service of the owner of the land. Oh, I suppose the farm contained 10,000 or 20,000 acres of land, but it extended through all temperatures and all elevations."

How's Your Liver?

A very unnecessary question to ask a man whose skin and eyeballs are saffron-tinted. Of course his tongue, too, is furred, bowels constipated, head bothered with aches, right rib region plagued with constant uneasy sensations. These you may take for granted, although he may not particularize them, because they are among the invariable accompaniments of liver trouble. Are they chronic? If so, you may be sure he does not, as he ought to do, take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the leading regulator of livers that are out of order. Commend it to him as highly as you please, you can't say a word too much in its behalf. Sick headaches, constipation, nausea, dyspepsia, and the yellow hue of the skin speedily depart when this reliable corrective is resorted to. Malaria, rheumatism and la grippe are also among maladies which it remedies and prevents. A wineglassful three times a day confers appetite and digestion.

A Mountain of Silicates.

A mineral discovery of unusual value is reported from Kamouraska, in Lower Canada. A Quebec correspondent states that an entire mountain has been found composed of silicates, otherwise known as vitrifiable stone of a purity certified by the Provincial Engineer to average 98 per cent. This material is used for the manufacture of the finest glass, and is believed to exist nowhere else on the American continent in such purity. The Provincial Government has been asked by a deputation to guarantee 4 per cent. interest for ten years on £20,000 if a local company subscribes that amount to develop the new industry, and has promised to consider the request if the principal municipality concerned is prepared to take a fair share of the risk.—London Times.

At the head of all blood-purifiers is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. But it's different from all of them. Whatever is claimed for this, it's guaranteed to do. The money is refunded in every case where it fails to benefit or cure. It's because it is different that it can be sold so. All diseases originating from a torpid liver or impure blood yield to it. It cleanses and purifies the system, freeing it from all manner of blood-poisons, no matter from what cause they have arisen. For Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofula, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, or any blood-taint or disorder, it is an unequaled remedy. Nothing else can take its place.

"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol to inebriate, and no syrup or sugar to derange digestion.

It's a concentrated vegetable extract; put up in large bottles; pleasant to the taste, and equally good for adults or children; works equally well all the year round.

Light at Last.

The good old scholastic question whether a thousand angels can dance on the point of a needle, appears to receive a sidelight from the scientific statement that certain bacteria are small enough for 1,000 of them to march abreast through a hole pricked by a fine needle in a piece of paper. The mysteries seem to be clearing up, one by one.—New York Evening Sun.

But It Can't Be.

The great majority of the people of this country would be glad to see every workingman receive $3 per day for his labor, but as wages are regulated by the law of supply and demand the wishes of the masses have nothing to do with it. Public sympathy can, however, be depended on to up to that line where the public itself is put to cost and inconvenience. Beyond that it favors nobody but itself.

THERE are ailments that rob young women of both health and beauty and make them prematurely old. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore both if taken in time.

Cultivation of Flowers.

From the earliest times, and whenever any considerable progress has been made in civilization plants have been cultivated for the sake of their beautiful or fragrant flowers. Flowers are used everywhere for the adornment of the person and of houses, particularly on festive occasions, and also in many countries in connection with religious rites. Flower markets existed in ancient Athens, as in the richest capitals of the modern world. India, China, and Mexico have been famous for the cultivation of flowers, from the earliest periods to which their history can be traced.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

A New Temple.

In this day and age of the world, motives, powers and principles, are built up and strengthened through the influence of organization,—unison of interests and puposes for the benefit of those organized. The origin of secret orders dates back as far as the earliest epochs of American history. Time was, when even the thought of the noble women of America, being bound together by the sacred ties of secret organization was repulsive, inconsistent and out-of place. The nineteenth century, however, recognizes advancement in an enlightened age, when credits are put where they belong, and the world takes a broader and a better view of its existence, and our women can with perfect propriety and a sense of pure American pride organize themselves into secret bodies for the inculcation of purer motives and better principles in the doing of good to one another. On Monday evening, Aug. 10, 1891, an order of the Pythian Sisters, known as the Red Cross Temple, No. 47, was instituted in the K. of P. Lodge room, at this place, under the direction of Mrs. Dr. C. W. Maskey, of Portland, Indiana, who very ably conducted the ceremonies. Twenty-seven of our popular ladies and five gentlemen started as charter members. The principles of this Order, purity, love, equality and fidelity, give it a standard of consideration that will ere long bring Red Cross Temple to the front rank in the best society circles of this city. Its success is assured.

Fatal Accident at Spencerville.

The St. Joe News of August 7, says: A peculiarly sad and fatal accident befell the family of John W. Beams at Spencerville this week, which has caused a feeling of gloom to pervade in that village. The circumstances surrounding the sad affair are as follows: The baby, a chubby little boy almost a year old, had been sleeping up stairs during the afternoon, and about seven o'clock Nettie, a young miss of perhaps fourteen years, took him up and started to go down stairs. In going, a nail in the heel of her shoe caught in the carpet, causing her and the child to fall headlong down the entire length of the stairs. Help was soon summoned, and while Miss Nettie was badly bruised, it was found that she had sustained no serious injury. The baby never seemed to recover consciousness after the fall; it lingered through the weary hours of the night, moaning and sighing occasionally, but in spite of all that loving hands could do, the flickering spark of remaining life left the body at six o'clock Wednesday morning. It is supposed that the spinal cord was injured and the skull fractured. Mr. Beams was at Detroit at the time of the accident and, although he had been telegraphed, he was not made aware of the calamity that had come into his home until he stepped from the train at this place on Wednesday, and his grief, when told, can better be imagined than written. The parents are nearly heart broken over the sad affair. The funeral occurs today in the Lutheran church at Spencerville.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Mrs. Dye is improving very slowly.

Fred Willis is clerking for Mr. Speer.

R. M. Lockhart went over to Auburn Saturday.

Thursday morning Dr. Yeagy went to Fort Wayne.

Mrs. Winslow was in Auburn Saturday on business.

Rev. Mr. Loudy preached on the street Saturday evening.

W. H. Crane, of Sedan, was in our town last Wednesday.

Mrs. H. E. Braun has a sister from Fort Wayne visiting her.

Miss Ollie Rempis went to Chicago to visit friends last Monday.

Mr. Dieball, of Kendallville, was in Waterloo last week, Thursday.

Miss Newberry returned Sunday to her home at Lake Geneva, Wis.

Marion Bemenderfer has been laid up a week or more with rheumatism.

Mrs. Phil. Morell is sick with a hard cold. She can hardly speak aloud.

Rev. R. E. Locke preached Sunday evening, at 5:00 o'clock, at Uniontown.

Miss Dessa Mountz, who will teach the high school, is in town at present.

J. Beek and son have concluded to occupy their new building themselves.

The Leas families, of Waterloo, have been entertaining friends from Kansas.

The Patterson families enjoyed a very pleasant day at Hamilton on Wednesday.

Frank Smith is foreman in the broom factory during the absence of C. S. Harper.

Next Sunday there will be quarterly meeting at the M. E. church of this place.

Mr. Hughs was in our town some days since. He has relatives of the same name here.

Mrs. Keller and son returned Tuesday from a lengthy visit with her married daughter at Goshen.

A number of new cement sidewalks and crosswalks are being made in various parts of town.

Mrs. G. Morell went to her home and husband at Elkhart, Saturday, taking the boy Harry with her.

Richard Shull and wife visited in Waterloo several days last week, returning to Auburn Saturday.

Miss Lilly Talmage, of California, Mich., passed through this place Wednesday en-route to Rome City.

Mr. I. Speer is to be seen again at his place of business, after an absence of a week on account of sickness.

Miss Steiner, a niece of J. Loewenstein, who has been visiting the family for several weeks has now returned to her home in Chicago.

Miss Floy Hart, of Milford, on her way home from Angola, stopped in our town Wednesday and was the guest of Miss Nellie Carpenter.

Rev. J. M. DeWeese and family will return home the latter part of this week, having been at Rome City during the entire session of the assembly meetings there.

Ezra Patterson and family returned to their home at Galesburg, Ill., Thursday. They were accompanied by Mrs. W. A. Patterson and Miss Emma Patterson as far as Elkhart.

The hopes of the family and friends in regard to the improvement of Mrs. Archie Sinclair's health, have been dashed. She is now very low, indeed,—was thought last evening (Monday) to be dying.

Mrs. Jerry Plum died Sunday morning of old age, after a lengthy and painful illness. The funeral services took place at the U. B. church, Tuesday morning. Mrs. Plum was well known and highly respected in this vicinity.

The latter part of last week Mrs. James Winerich had a stroke of paralysis which left her in an unconscious condition. Sunday she was unable, if conscious, to speak. Your correspondent has had no later information. Later, —She is dead.

A few evenings since, a concert on the street was given, interspersed with anecdotes and cracking of jokes. Preliminaries concluded, the object was shown when the selling of notions and medicines commenced. Strange but true many purchasers are always ready, paying more for an inferior article than is asked in town, and often the medicine sold is good for nix or positively injurious. Barnum understood human nature when he said people like to be humbugged.

Miss Nettie Kelley died last Monday of consumption. Her body was taken to Auburn Wednesday morning for her mother to see, and was afterwards brought to Waterloo, where the funeral services took place Wednesday forenoon. She was interred beside her father, the late James D. Kelley, in the Waterloo cemetery. Her mother, Mrs. Dr. Adams, now residing in Auburn, has been quite sick for some time, and is not now able to leave her bed.

Mrs. Waters, the evangelist of the U. B. Radical branch, of that church, preached Sunday morning. Her business here was to arrange missionary societies among the ladies of that body. She is perfectly at home in the pulpit, speaks well, is never at a loss for a word, has a sweet, clear voice that can be heard throughout the building, yet she WILL strain her voice and halloo, as some men do, when it is difficult to understand her. Why does she throw away her good gift and great advantage of a sweet, winning voice, always clear and always heard? We never read of Christ's preaching in that way. Mrs. W. uses many gestures, but they are always appropriate, seem made without thought, and help as much as words to make her meaning clear.

Last Frisday evening, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Patterson and his sisters, had quite a number of friends at tea, invited partly in honor of their brother E. S. Patterson and family, of Galesburg, Ill., who were back on a visit. It was a social gathering of more than ordinary pleasurable incidents, for it brought together a number of old-time associates who had not met for many years. It was an evening of mutual enjoyment for all. The spacious rooms of their comfortable home, were the scenes of many little reunions and much retrospective anecdote and conversation were indulged in. Perhaps no more pleasant gathering ever assembled at our town. It was a generous rivalry between the hosts and the guests as to which should do most to add to the pleasant features of the occasion. J. W. Baxter and wife and J. A. Barns and wife, were over from Auburn.

W. A. Fisher is home for a few days' vacation.

Mrs. Stewart, of Fort Wayne, was here last week.

J. J. Fitzgerald's new residence at Bryan, will soon be finished.

Mrs. Severance, of Moline, Ill., spent last Sunday with friends here.

D. Leas is building an addition to his residence. Wm. Baird is doing the plastering.

Tuesday evening of last week, Frank Beidler and wife went to Rome City to spend a few days.

Lawyer Graham and wife were in town Saturday on their way home to Fort Wayne from the G. A. R. encampment at Detroit.

Miss Nellie Carpenter spent several days last week with her friend and classmate, Miss Lulu Rempis, at her pleasant home near this place. She enjoyed her visit exceedingly.

Miss Kittie Koons went over to Auburn Saturday. She receives many orders for work in her line from many of the best ladies of that place, and has been solicited to remove there, but as she has a pleasant home here with her parents, and as many orders there as she can fill, there could be no object in changing her place of abode.

GARRETT.

Many of our citizens are deeply interested in ditches.

Some of the sidewalks and crossings are being repaired.

Everything is in a rustle at the Fair Mr. Wagner is a hustler from way back and don't you forget it!

Business of all kinds is booming, and our people are beginning to realize that 1891, so far, has been a profitable year.

Preparations are being made to erect two new business rooms in the near future. Look out for something interesting.

B. Hunsel, our enterprising merchant tailor, has been on the sick list the past few days. He had the grip last year, which resulted in asthma.

The shower Tuesday morning, cooled off the atmosphere, and gave somewhat of a rest to the almost ever-present 'kerchief of a few days previous.

Louis W. Krieg, of Connersville, Ind., traveling agent for the Catholic Record, published at Indianapolis, is now in the city, in the interests of that periodical.

The B. & O., is doing a rushing business. Usually the yard is filled more or less with empty cars, but at present, the tracks are bare and the cars are in use.

No. 5, came rolling in Tuesday morning, pretty badly used up. The left arm on the drivers was broken somewhere east, causing a delay of one hour and ten minutes.

Etna Kuhlman, the South Side lumber dealer at Auburn, was here on business, Tuesday. He can point with pride to many of our magnificent residences and feel that he had the honor of furnishing the lumber.

L. J. Gengler is usually as busy as a setting hen, and his office work keeps him flying around like a 16th-sheet dodger for a circus, but Tuesday morning, his broad smile and elastic steps, indicated that something unusual had taken place. He finally explained by saying that he was grandpa to one of the finest little girls in the land.

Early Monday evening, while Charles Dederick was crossing the B. & O. track between two box cars, he was caught by the bumpers and horribly mashed. He was immediately taken care of by friends who carried him to his home in the East Addition, on a stretcher. He was so badly mangled that no hopes are entertained for recovery, and once more misfortune has thrown a dark shadow over the hopes and prospects of a worthy young man.

The writer was shown through the vast plant of the Archbald Milling Co., a few days since, where was disclosed a three-floor building filled with the latest improved machinery for manufacturing the famous centrifugal process flour. This firm has not been in business at this place, very long, but in the short time, they have established an extensive demand for their flour, etc., and furnish a market for all the grain raised to sell in this vicinity. The proprietors are solid business men, and our people are proud to have such an istitution among them.

SUMMIT.

C. Parish had relatives from Elkhart visit them over Sunday.

Henry Lawson and wife visited Joseph Rohm and family last Sunday.

A. J. Burk and wife, of Auburn, visited his mother, Mrs. Keys over Sunday.

Mrs. Zerkle and daughter, of Toledo, Ohio, are visiting Mrs. Keys at present.

H. D. Snowberger and wife were the guests of L. Colten and wife last Sunday.

Albert Cherry and wife, of Butler, visited his sister, Mrs. Joseph Penick last Sunday.

Mrs. B. F. Hilt brought an 8½ pound boy to the home of Wm. Mulloy last Friday evening.

Mrs. J. Bower and son Elmer, of Fairfield Center, made our town a short call last Monday.

Mrs Stolenbarger and daughter, of Iowa, and Wm. Stolenbarger and wife, of Lagrange, are visiting Henry and A. A. Forney at present.

Startling Facts.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempfling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nervine cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles, and fine book of marvelous cures, free at F. E. Davenport's who recommends and guarantees this unequaled remedy. 6

Gov. Hogg, of Texas, weighs 400 pounds. There is something in a name after all.

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott are keepers of Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter, four years old. Last April she was taken down with measles, followed with a dreadful cough and turning into a fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere handful of bones. Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. 6

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

While these christianizing influences were active in the interests of moral and religious progress, the fact that men will sin despite church disciplines and codes of law was not ignored, and Jefferson Wallace having contracted on Dec. 5th, 1851, to build a county jail, gave bond and was duly authorized in furtherance of the work to draw on the county to the sum of $1000.

B. G. Cosgrove was architect and was allowed $30 for his plan. In December 1852, the board of commissioners examined the completed building and accepted the job. W. K. Streight, then sheriff was instructed to bank the jail. Joshua R. Steves, now a resident of Auburn, acting for Wallace did the painting required and the county had a fairly secure place of restraint for law breakers and had made great progress during the years since Wesley Park's ladder-reached upper chamber served as prison.

This jail has a history all its own. In its close dungeon-like cells many a hardened offender has been confined together with many minor offenders. At the June term of 1854. Auburn was granted the privilege of using the county jail, as a calaboose when not otherwise in use.

In the old jail, early residents will remember that Mrs. Knapp was confined for the revolting murder of her husband and the sensation she created by her partially successful attempt to commit "hari kari" having actually cut out a portion of an intestine, and yet strange to say, she for years survived the perilous experiment.

In 1860, the upper story of the sheriff's residence part of the building was in use by young people of the Walsworth, Altenburg and Cosper families, who were in attendance at school to Chester P. Hodge in the Academy. John Moore, probably remembered by few now, was in charge of the jail proper and gave the renters a fright by a threat to burn them out and he had gathered combustible material in a cell where it was found, and he was summarily dismissed by Sheriff Ralston.

Twenty-six years ago, Henry Willis was sheriff and then as now lived at Waterloo. Alexander Cannon, a man well advanced in years was jailer and occupied the building with his family. Charley Fair, a man of great strength and peaceable disposition was one of his charges, kept there on account of periodical fits of insanity. Not many who now live in Auburn recollect him.

Some will recall a sunny afternoon when a trio of rascals confined in the jail, posted two of their number at the high, barred window to talk, sing and otherwise noisily express their felicity, while the third busily tunneled a passage under the floor through which in the silence and security of night, they made their exit and rid the jailor of the trouble of caring for and feeding them and the county the expense of trying them.

Our friend, Jerry Plum, sheriff from 1868 to 1872 has reason to feel an interest in the old jail, for among his prisoners during his term was a ruffian known as "Michigan Bill" who choosing his opportunity made a desperate assault upon the officers and profited by the confusion to make his escape.

To some these items may seem trivial events to record but ours has been a peaceful community and our history has been disfigured by no tragedies such as shock the mind to peruse accounts of them. Trifles make up the sum of our lives and by a kindly provision of nature, as youth looks hopefully to the future, age dwells with pleasure upon the past, even as the foreigner as long absent from his native land and forgetful of his parent tongue, dying, recalled and spoke again of childhood's scenes in the language of his fathers.

When the present fine modern jail was contracted for in 1875, the old building was moved east to its present location on the northeast corner of Cedar and Ninth streets and being fitted up, serves as quarters for our steam fire engine, hook and ladder apparatus, and a room has been for years used for meetings of the town board.

Matters connected with county business showed little of moment. In March of 1852, W. P. Means had found the work of county assessor too great for him and on petition two deputies, Daniel Altenburg and William Mathews were appointed to give him assistance.

Appropriations grew in number and amounts as they have done since keeping pace with growth of assessment, but it is confidently expected with good reason that the great increase of 1891 will result in a minimum of rates of taxation as speedily as possible. The increase of values of Auburn, as made by Mr. Weavver and his deputies from $414,000 to about one million will undoubtedly result in a reduction of rates from $3,49 on $100, to not exceed $2 00.

The road tax in 1852 was placed at 3¾ cents on each acre of taxable land and 45 cents on each $100, on town lots and improvements.

John Rosser and brother had the patronage in furnishing blank books, which at present and for many years past has been controlled by Wm. B. Burford, of Indianapolis through their shrewd and experienced agent, Mr. Hicks.

T. R. Dickinson had his law office conveniently located on the public square between the circuit clerk's and county treasurer's offices, and J. E. Hendricks still occupied his former school room in the court house, the school district paying for rent into the county treasury one dollar for each month school was taught therein.

Retailing without license was punished by a fine of $2, imposed by a township justice but the penalty was remitted by that officer on the affidavit of the culprit that he was without means to pay it. The history of the early groggery in Auburn if told would be a sad and harrowing one in its details of home wretchedness and the public record of this year is the assessment of a fine of $20 for unlawful sale of liqquor which shows it was then as now under ban and sufferance.

The town board at their March session met at the office of Mr. Dickinson above located and John McCune having declined to serve as town assessor, Bradford G. Cosgrove was substituted and accepted.

The board had previously met at Nelson Payne's store but now had no regular place and adjourned to meet as occasion offered. Payne resigned the office of trustee of the third ward and seems to have lost the confidence of the people. He has been spoken of as fastidious and cultivated, but went west. On his way on the Mississippi the boat caught fire and he lost what he had, and later was visited by parties he had known in Auburn and was found in farmer style at work in his fields. His was one of the first failures in Auburn and another business man, Mr. Freeman gradually lost ground and retired from business to make place for successors.

There were in business at this time, Stiefel & Wolf enterprising men, who had a large trade and rose to considerable prosperity in a few years; John Butt, Valentine Waeaver and R. B. Catlin. J. D. Davis this year started what is yet known as the Pioneer Hardware store in a frame building which stood on the site of the present brick block owned and occupied by John L. Davis, an enterprising business man and private banker.

A PLEASING PICTURE.

Possibly she has just received the ten volumes of the latest revised and is glancing over the vast storehouse of knowledge it opens up to her. Possibly she is a student and needs its pages to help her over many a difficult place. Possibly she is a member of a literary society and has a very interesting lesson to learn and have ready by the date of the next meeting. She is surprised and evidently pleased to find how easily, with the aid of the new Britannica, she masters the lesson. Everything is within easy reach and she does not have to hunt around for some book on a particular subject, only to find at last that has not got it. And she don't have to go off and borrow one. As it is valuable to her in her literary work, so it will prove with the minister, lawyer, teacher and all other students. We shall say more of this hereafter. A few more sets only, and on easy terms and at a low price, at this office.

Obituary.

Eliza Sommers was born in Lancaster county, Pa., March 20, 1826, and died at the home of Wm. Ashelman, at Auburn, Ind., August 12, 1891, her age being 65 yrs., 4 months and 23 days. She was united in marriage to Lyman Chidsey, January 11, 1844, who with two children, John and Elizabeth, have preceded her to the other world, while the third, Mrs. Wm. Ashleman, survives to mourn the loss of an affectionate mother. The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church, of which she had long been a faithful and consistent member, on Sunday afternoon at one o'clock. In the absence of the pastor, the services were conducted by Elder S. B. Ward, assisted by his daughter Mrs. Mary Ehlers. Each spoke briefly, but feelingly, of the friend they had known so long, but from whom they must now part forever. But their words were words of cheer and encouragement, not of doubt, and they drew from her life and the recollections it called up, a valuable lesson for the living. The audience was greatly affected the by simple and earnest eloquence so full of reverence, love and hope. The great church was filled by sympathizing friends, who followed her to her last resting place in Evergreen Cemetery. The friends and relatives from afar, had gathered to pay the last token of love to the departed, and most beautiful flowers stood by the casket during the ceremony. Mrs. Chidsey was a woman of more than average intelligence and force of character, and her circle of friends was a very large one. But as was said in the services: "They believe that through Him who is the Resurrection and the Life, she has entered into everlasting peace."

Obituary.

Mrs. Sarah Wenrick was born in Ashland county, Ohio, April 23, 1842, and died at her home in Waterloo, Ind., August 14, 1891, at the age of 49 yrs. 3 months and 21 days. Her maiden name was Morr, and in 1852, she came to this county. April 6, 1865, she was united in marriage to James Wenrick, and to them were born eight children, five of whom, with her husband, survive her. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. S. Tracy, at the Evangelical church, on Sunday, August 16, at 10:30, and she was laid to rest in the Waterloo Cemetery. The attenance at the funeral was very large. Mrs. Wenrick was received into the Reform church by J. G. Russell, Jan. 1, 1859, and remained a faithful member till death. For fifteen years she has been a sufferer, but the Lord has called her to rest and her sufferings are over.

The Lake Erie and Western Strike—Eighty Drowned—German Military Companies—The President on a Trip Through New England.

THE LAKE ERIE AND WESTERN STRIKE.

It Extends to Indianapolis, and a General Blockade is Announced.

Indianapolis special: The strike on the Lake Erie and Western has extended to this city. All the passenger and freight brakemen have gone out and the road is practically tied up. No freight, wreck, or work trains are running. Orders have been issued to agents not to accept any time or perishable freight, and the General Manager is holding everything in abeyance till the arrival of the general officers.

Private advices received here state that all the engineers, firemen, and switchmen on the Peoria and Pekin Union Railway at Peoria have gone out, and every engine is in the round house, business being stopped.

Findlay special: The strike on the Lake Erie and Western Railway is assuming large proportions. Along the line of the road wherever trains happened to be they were abandoned at the time the orders to strike were received. Over 300 miles of road is tied up. In this city alone five freight trains have been abandoned.

Peoria special: All the switchmen employed by the Peoria and Pekin Union Railway went out on a strike. This practically puts a stop to freight traffic. The business of seven roads is handled by the Union men, and the yards are blocked with cars. The strike was occasioned by an objection to the yard-master.

ON A TOUR.

The President and His Party Depart for the Exercises at Bennington, Vt.

A special telegram from New York, dated the 19th inst., says: The special train bearing the President and party to Bennington, Vt., left Cape May at 8:45 this morning, and the run to Jersey City was made without accident. When the train pulled into the big, iron shed in Jersey City, the President stepped out on the rear platform of his car, and Mr. Boyd pointed out to him the wonderful feats of engineering accomplished in constructing the immense span. The President was dressed in a black Prince Albert coat, light colored trousers, and wore a white traveling hat. He appeared to be in perfect health, and his cheeks showed slight traces of sun-burn.

The train reached Albany shortly before 6 o'clock. A presidential salute greeted the party. They were driven to the City Hall Square where thousands awaited about the place. Reaching the City Hall Square they alighted and repaired to a broad platform, on which had been erected seats on which were seated Mayor Manning, Gov. Hill, and the State officers. The President received an ovation as he reached the front of the platform. Mr. Manning then welcomed the President on behalf of the city, after which Gov. Hill welcomed the President on behalf of the State. President Harrison replied at some length to the Governor, and was roundly cheered.

German Ex-Soldiers.

The Annual Convention of the German military companies of North America, in session at Fort Wayne Ind., elected the following officers:

President—Fritz Holle, of St. Louis.

Vice President—Dr. Van Quast, of Kansas City.

Secretary—Julius Eggers, of Chicago.

Treasurer—Louis Ertel, of Cincinnati.

Representative—H. Pfitzenreiter, of Cincinnati.

Trustees—Mr. Blucher, of St. Louis; Mr. Sehmahl, of Toledo; Mr. Heck, of Pittsburgh.

The meeting was an interesting one and considerable business of importance to the National Association was transacted.

Kansas City, Mo., was selected as the place of holding the Kriegerfest next August.

Eighty Drowned.

Port Au Prince special: A terrible accident occurred here. Recent storms had swollen the mountain streams and in consequence the River St. Mark had overflowed its banks. A large number of natives were assembled on the stone bridge over the river, watching the raging torrent, when the foundations became undermined by the action of the water, and the structure tumbled into the river carrying many people with it. The fortunate ones managed to reach the bank after a hard struggle, but to the others, some eighty in number, were swept along, and their dead bodies were carried out to sea.

Many Persons Drowned.

A cloud burst in the mountains near Botzen, Austria, and flooded the lowlands. The mountain streams were converted into a torrent, which swept through the village of Kollman, carrying away men and cattle and destroying half of the houses. Many persons were drowned.

Had a Bath.

Two hundred persons of the Rahrer Methodist Church, of Dayton, Ohio, were on a canal boat pleasure trip, when the boat collapsed throwing the party in the water. A score were injured, the most seriously, Miss Mollie and Miss Ella Haas.

Dropped Dead.

Louis D. Kiel, of the well-known paper firm of Kiel Bros., Fort Wayne, dropped dead while at work in his office, it is supposed from the effects of a sunstroke.

Woman Burned to Death.

The residence of John Ford, at Oklahoma City, O. T., was destroyed by fire and Mrs. Ford perished in the flames. It is believed that the fire originated from the explosion of a can of gasolene which Mrs. Ford was handling.

Burned by Molten Metal.

As Jacob Scheele was loading a dry roll at the Stewart Paper Mill, Bucksville, Ind., a kettle broke, throwing half a gallon of molten metal into his face and over his body. One eye was destroyed.

An Expert Accountant Arrested.

Little Rock (Ark.) special: J. L. Bay, an expert accountant employed by ex-Treasurer W. E. Woodruff, to look after his interest before the State Board, authorized by the Legislature to settle the treasury muddle, has been arrested on a warrant sworn out by Treasurer Morrow, charging him with the theft of $100,000 of State scrip. When the Legislature adjourned the Joint Committee left two boxes filled with State securities which they had examined and found to be correct. Morrow claims that Bay has broken into another box belonging to the State and extracted therefrom $100,000 worth of scrip that was cancelled about two years ago, which he put into boxes left here by Legislative Committee. Bay was taken before a justice of the peace, and gave bond in the sum of $2,000 for his appearance September 1.

ABDUCTORS CAPTURED.

A Gang of Tough Crooks Are Brought to Grief in Detroit.

Detroit special: On the evening of March 19, Joseph Perrien, a prominent Detroit business man, reputed to be worth nearly $1,000,000, was inveigled into a hack from his home on the pretense of business, and kept for forty-eight hours in some secluded part of the city. A ransom of $10,000 was demanded by his abductors from his family, but its payment being refused, at the expiration of two days he was blind-folded, taken in a hack, and left in the street at some distance from his home, to return to it as best he might. The police made vigorous efforts to discover his abductors, but they did not succeed until the other day, when the city was startled by the report that the gang of kidnappers had been arrested and placed in jail. Five men compose the gang: John and Billy Considine, Frank Griffiths, James McDoel and Tom Kennedy. They are the leaders of a gang of crooks that has infested this city for years, and have been responsible for at least two murders, a dozen or more shooting affrays, and all the big burglaries, but against whom no convicting evidence could be secured. The police claim to have a sure case against the gang this time, as one of its members has squealed. The kidnapping was one of the most sensational criminal events in the city's history.

A SWITZERLAND HORROR.

A Rear End Collision Results In Twelve Deaths and Many Injured Passengers.

Berne special: A terrible accident, resulting in the instant death of twelve persons, and the serious injury of many others, some of whom will probably die, occurred on the Jura-Simplon Railroad near this city. A special excursion train, which was conveying hundreds of villagers from the surrounding country to witness the fetes in connection with the 700th anniversary of the foundation of the city of Berne, was stopped at a siding a short distance from its destination, in order to allow the regular Paris express to pass. The engineer of the express, as nearly as can be ascertained, had not been notified of the fact that the excursion train was on the track ahead and the conductor of the excursion train seems to have neglected to send a signalman back to protect the rear of his train while the shunt was being arranged. The express running at high speed, came upon the excursion train so suddenly that the engineer's efforts to check its speed and avoid disaster were unavailing.

Hanging at St. Louis.

Henry Henson was hanged in the jail yard in St. Louis. The drop fell at 7:12 a. m. and death was announced a minute later. The condemned man passed the night in chatting and joking with the guards and appeared indifferent to the fact that his last hours on earth were passing swiftly away.

Henry Henson was convicted of the murder of his wife Ida. Henson had married a widow with one child. They lived unhappily together in a boarding house which they conducted at No. 405 South Second street, Henson being of an insanely jealous disposition. On the evening of February 2, 1889, Henson charged his wife with receiving the attentions of a crippled tailor who rented apartments in the house. A quarrel ensued and after some hot words Henson took a revolver from a table drawer and started toward the woman. The latter's 13-year-old son interfered and Henson left the room. A little later he returned, placed the muzzle of the weapon against the side of the unsuspecting woman's head and sent a ball crushing into her brain. As the stepson ran from the room a second ball grazed his form. At the trial the jury, after being out only thirty-three minutes, found Henson guilty.

A Mighty Crash.

A disastrous accident on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad occurred at Attica Station, fourteen miles east of Tiffin, Ohio. A west-bound local freight was standing at the depot, when a heavy through freight, thundering down the grade from the east at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour, crashed into its rear. The engine and nearly a dozen of cars were crushed into a shapeless mass. Three cars were hurled bodily through the depot building, a large frame structure, totally demolishing it. The occupants of the depot narrowly escaped with their lives, being warned of impending danger by the roar of the approaching train. The conductor of the local says he had no knowledge that the freight was following him, and that the first intimation he had of its approach was given by the sound. He then hurriedly sent out a flagman, but owing to the dense fog the engineer of the approaching train was unable to see the signal in time. The engineer then called for brakes and reversed his engine and jumped, as did his fireman. The fireman escaped unhurt, but the former had his left leg broken and received serious internal injuries. Brakeman Esher, of the freight, had his foot crushed.

Masked Robbers.

In Winston County, Ala., a band of four masked robbers visited the house of Col. John Cagle, a prominent citizen, and, after covering him with revolvers, demanded his money. He refused to tell them where it was, and they dragged him from bed and into the back-yard, where he was strung up to a tree. When half dead he was taken down again asked to disclose the hiding place of his wealth. He stubbornly refused, and the hanging operation was repeated until after the third time, when he was taken down unconscious. When restored to life he again refused the robbers' demand, and they were preparing to hang him again. This time he consented to lead them to the hiding-place of his money, which he did. They got $600 and fled. A posse is in pursuit. Cagle recognized two of the men as his former neighbors.

Their Fate Known.

A bottle was picked up at Benton Harbor, Mich., recently, containing a piece of brown paper, on which the following was written:

> "We, the undersigned, are passengers on the Thomas Hume. The schooner's hold is rapidly filling with water and we have no hope of escape. We are on the St. Joseph course and have been drifting for hours. We have friends in McCook, Neb., and Elkhart, Ind. Please notify them of our fate.
>
> [Signed.] "FRANK MAYNARD.
> "WIBUR GROVER."

It will be remembered that the schooner Hume was lost on Lake Michigan about May 10, last with seven men on board. Not the slightest trace of the vessel has yet been found. It was owned by Hockley and Hume, of Muskegon.

Horrible Death.

Cincinnati special: The hundreds assembled at Coney Island witnessed a horrifying tragedy. Anna Harkness made a balloon ascension to be followed by a parachute descent. When a thousand feet up the parachute was released. It fell some distance only partly opening, then closed. The woman and the parachute shot toward the earth with awful rapidity, and struck the ground with terrific force. The woman was crushed into a shapeless mass, every bone being broken. Many ladies fainted and men were sickened by the sight. The woman is known professionally as Leroy. Her home is at Indianapolis. She struck on her feet, and was driven into the earth nearly to her knees. The body was mangled out of all human shape.

Frightful Explosion.

The powder mill at Central City, Ky., on the Newport News and Mississippi Valley Railroad, blew up, resulting in two deaths, that of J. W. Boles, of Huntington, W. Va., and Timothy Carney, of Catlettsburg, Ky. Geo. Wills' skull was fractured by falling timbers and a Mr. Justus was severely hurt. The building, which was blown up, contained about 14,000 pounds of powder. It is not known what caused the explosion.

The dwelling house of John Webb, a half mile from the scene was badly shaken up. Even the dishes on the table were broken into pieces. An iron shaft weighing nearly 500 pounds was carried a distance of 200 yards. The damage done by the explosion will not be less than $10,000.

Burned to Death.

The drought has so scorched foliage in the western part of Allen County, Indiana, that the foliage along the railroad tracks is constantly in a blaze and much damage is threatened. The other day the wooded land on the large farm of Frederick Klaehn was discovered on fire. The farm is situated about five miles west of Fort Wayne. Frederick Klaehn and his son rushed to the woodland to prevent the spread of the flames. Neighbors were called in to assist, and till late at night the men battled with the devouring element. Mr. Klaehn was overcome by the heat and fell in a faint. His clothes became ignited, and, when found by his neighbors, his body was burned to a crisp.

The Platte River on a Rampage.

St. Joseph (Mo.) special: Platte River Valley from Oakland Mills to the north and east for a distance of many miles has the appearance of an ocean. The river is out of its banks for a distance of about a mile on either side. Tributary streams and creeks are swollen, and the water is coming down the narrow valley with a rush and roar. The Platte River rose fully twenty feet in less than twelve hours. The "One Hundred and Two" River was out of its banks in places, where the night before there was scarcely more than three to five feet of water. Hundreds of farmers along the banks of these streams have suffered the loss of cattle, grain, or buildings.

Milwaukee in the American Base Ball Association.

St. Louis special: It is settled, beyond all question that the Milwaukee club will enter the American Association and so purchase the franchise of the Cincinnati club. The price agreed upon is not given out, but President Gillette, of Milwaukee, put up $6,000 cash and the balance required in notes. Of the Cincinnati club Milwaukee gets Seerey, Dwyer, Carney, and Canavan; Washington secures Marr, Vaughn, and Mains, and "King" Kelly goes to the Boston Association team. Manager Bancroft has been signed to manage the new Milwaukee team.

A Heavy Loss.

Fire almost completely destroyed the machinery of the mine of the New Pittsburgh Coal and Coke Company at Alum Cave, Sullivan County, Ind. There has been a strike at the mine for a week past, and it is thought the mine was set on fire. The mine worked by machinery, which was of the costliest kind, and the most complete of any in the State for handling coal and burning coke. The Company estimates the loss at $100,000, with two-thirds insurance. It will be impossible to resume work inside of several months.

Bold Attempt at Train Wrecking.

A dastardly attempt was made to wreck trains on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad between Sturgis and Burr Oak, Mich., by piling ties on the track in several places. It is evident there was more than one person engaged in the business, as some of the ties were too heavy for one man to handle and they were piled quite high.

A Wife's Confession.

Indianapolis special: Henry Dillon, marshal of Houghville was murdered a few months ago and no clue to the murderers could be found. The other day Mrs. Chas. French accused her husband and Chas Hubbard of the crime and they have been arrested. When the woman threatened to expose her husband he nearly killed her with a base ball bat.

Fatal Aeronautic Accident.

A balloon which ascended at Macerata, the capital of the Italian province of that name, was carried out over the Adriatic, and while it was hanging over the water the aeronaut either fell or jumped out of the car and was drowned before he could be reached by craft which put out to his aid.

Fire in a Mine.

Fire broke out in the shaft of the Louisville mine near Leadville, Col., and burned all the timbers up the shaft for 500 feet. When the flames reached the top they consumed the shaft house, ore bins, and everything else except the engine house. Damage is over $30,000. No insurance.

Chased by Wolves.

While two children of Albert White were out picking berries near Moulton, Iowa, two wolves came out of the bushes and chased them. The little children fled screaming towards town. The intervention of a farmer with a gun alone saved their lives.

'TWAS A BARE SWINDLE.

ITS VICTIMS NUMBER OVER THIRTY THOUSAND.

Detectives Chasing the Fugitive Manager—He Has Decamped with Most of the Plunder—Still a Small Part of the Receipts in the Hands of the Court.

A hasty examination of the books of the National Capital Savings, Building and Loan Association of North America, which was taken in hand by the United States authorities at Chicago, gives a more definite idea of the extent of the fraud practiced by the "close" corporation and shows in detail the plan by which 31,000 people were systematically defrauded. The amount of the firm's receipts was somewhat exaggerated by the first reports, but Inspector Stuart holds that at least $150,000 for which the stockholders got not a cent was taken in by the company.

The greater part of this amount, over and above the association's expenses, is in the possession of Louis F. Mortimer, the promoter of the project, who is now being closely chased by detectives in the East. Ex-Judge S. A. Page and Attorney Lyden Evans, for the cheated stockholders, and District Attorney Milchrist turned rapidly through the dozen or more ledgers and books kept by the corporation, and the result, roughly estimated, gives the following figures: Total amount received, $86,000. Of this $31,000 has been paid to the agents throughout the country. There are $13,000 assets in sight, $9,100 of which is the securities upon which small loans to give confidence to stockholders were made, and the balance in the bank and now subject to the court's order. Then the books show $19,000 paid to Lewis F. Mortimer as commissions, and of this $19,000 Mortimer must account to the indignant stockholders. There is yet $23,000 to be accounted for, and Mortimer is supposed to have the amount with him. At least he did have it in hand when he left the city on "pressing Eastern business." Since July 30 this year $13,000 has been taken in and is deposited as a trust fund, subject to the order of the Superior Court, in which the case is now pending.

Mortimer is being closely followed in the East, and word was received at the Government building which, it is said, will lead to his arrest. The officials look upon him as the important man and care nothing about the little catch, for Mortimer got the money and the others were used as his tools. Alfred Downing, president of the bogus building association, is still in the hands of the Government authorities, but his bail has been fixed at $2,000, which is looked upon as an absurd bond for a man under the charge made against him if the officials cared to hold him. N. H. Tollman has also been released on the same bond. In view of the fact that both men have told all they know about the management of the National Capital Savings, Building and Loan Association of North America and are working hand-in-hand with the authorities for the capture of Mortimer, it can easily be surmised that neither of these men will be prosecuted, but will be used as witnesses against Mortimer, who, according to Mr. Downing, is "one man in a thousand," and as smooth as the best.

Attorney Lyden Evans has been drawn into this case by circumstances. He was at first called upon by Mortimer to defend certain little suits and knew nothing of the association's standing. He did more and more of the firm's legal business until one day he conceived the idea that all was not straight. Mr. Mortimer was in New York at the time and Evans demanded at the association's office in the Rookery Building to have access to the company's books if he was to be its legal adviser. It was then he met Tollman, one of the directors, and he told him what he thought. Tollman, he says, became frightened, and asked what he could do to protect himself, as he did not know the association was not straight. This started the ball rolling, and a receiver would have been asked for by Mr. Evans had not Uncle Sam got there first.

"Mortimer runs things with a high hand," said Mr. Evans, after he had looked over the books of the bogus company, "and it's a wonder he did not smash things and get in the hands of the law before. He put his father in as secretary and treasurer, his brother-in-law (F. O. Wentworth) as president, and had a man in Canada named Choate whose proxy he voted regularly. It was a sort of family affair between them, and Mr. Downing, the president, whom Mortimer claimed to have ousted by the recent election, was made a tool of, as was also the vice president, Mr. Tollman. These men, I believe, got nothing. We are going now to see what we can do for the stockholders. There is $3,000 left in bank and $9,100 out on loans, the real estate security for which we believe is perfectly good. That is about 20 per cent any how. We will next make an application for a receiver, and I believe the association ought not to be allowed to go to pieces, as there is a heap of money coming in all the time. Since the money now in bank was tied up over $13,000 has been received, which the court will take charge of as a trust fund, and I believe that an association that is in receipt of such large amounts shouldn't be allowed to go to pieces."

While the figures got from the firm's books showed that $86,000 had been received, this does not cover the entire scope of Mortimer's business. He ran a branch house for three months at Philadelphia, and of the proceeds it is said no account was made.

The company operated in nearly every State in the Union and its agents were in nearly every town. The plan was the regular system adopted by building and loan associations, only they failed to make the usual loans when called upon, and the stockholders' money can only be accounted for the one way.

Inspector Stuart said that he does not think a record of half the money received by the association was kept, and stated that more than fifty letters containing checks, money orders, etc., ranging in amount from $5 to $50, and addressed to the association, were received by one morning's mail.

A NOBLE LIFE ENDED.

OUR LOVED POET AND STATESMAN AT REST.

James Russell Lowell, After a Long Life of Usefulness and Brilliant Successes, Is Called to His Home—Renowned as Statesman and Bard.

James Russell Lowell, the great American poet and diplomat, died at Cambridge, Mass. He was born in that city Feb. 22, 1819. He graduated at Harvard College in 1838, and studied law, but soon abandoned law for literature. Before leaving college he published a class poem. A volume of miscellaneous poems entitled "A Year's Life" appeared in 1841; a new collection, containing a "Legend of Brittany," "Prometheus" and others, in 1844: "Conversations on Some of the Old Poets," containing a series of well-studied criticisms, both in prose and verse, giving indications of Mr. Lowell's interest in the various political and philanthropic questions of the day and of his attachment to those principles of which he has since been the champion, in 1845; a third collection of poems and "The Vision of Sir Launfal," founded on a legend of the search for the San Grael, in 1848; "A Fable for Critics," in which he satirically passed in review the litterati of the United States, and his most remarkable work, "The Biglow Papers," a collection of humorous poems on political subjects, written by "Hosea Biglow," in the Yankee dialect, in 1848. "Fireside Travels," including graphic papers on Cambridge in old times, and the second series of the "Biglow Papers" appeared in 1864.

In 1869 Mr. Lowell published "Under the Willows and Other Poems," and near the close of the same year "The Cathedral," an epic poem; in 1870 a collected volume of essays entitled "Among My Books," and in 1871 "My Study Windows." "Three Memorial Poems" appeared in 1876. In 1855 he succeeded Longfellow as professor of modern languages and belles-lettres in Harvard College. The degree of D. C. L. was conferred upon him in 1873 by the English University of Oxford, and that of LL. D. by Cambridge in 1874. The latter degree he received also from St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, Harvard and Bologna. From 1857 to 1862 he was editor of the Atlantic Monthly, and he had previously been connected with The Pioneer, a magazine of high character, the Anti-Slavery Standard, Putnam's Monthly, and from 1864 to 1866 was editor of the North American Review. He had also been a lecturer before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, on the British poets.

Toward the close of 1874 Mr. Lowell was offered the post of Minister to Russia, which he declined, but in 1877 accepted that of Minister to Spain, from which he was transferred in 1880 to that of Minister to Great Britain. On the change of administration in 1885 he resigned this position and returned to the United States. The speeches which he delivered in England were republished in 1887 under the title of "Democracy and Other Addresses." Though a life-long Republican, Mr. Lowell supported the candidacy of Mr. Cleveland for re-election to the presidency in 1888. During the slavery agitation prior to the civil war he was a prominent advocate for its abolition, and had been equally outspoken in more recent years in urging the reform of the civil service.

"Harvardiana," which Mr. Lowell edited in 1837-8, was a notable poem, composed under peculiar circumstances. At the time of writing it the collegiate senior was undergoing a brief period of rustication at Concord in consequence of inattention to his text books. His forced sojourn in this Arcadia of scholarship and reform brought him into relationship with the transcendentalists, who at that time were in the habit of gathering at the home of Emerson, with whom then began that friendship which, despite the playful sallies of the younger poet in his earlier writings, only terminated with the death of the elder. The young satirist saw the humorous side of the social movements of the day, and the class poem, scintillating with wit, attacked the abolitionists, Carlyle, Emerson and the transcendentalists.

In the winter of 1887 Mr. Lowell read a paper before the Union League Club, of Chicago, on the authorship of "Richard III." Since his return to private life Mr. Lowell's home had been with his only child, the wife of Edward Burnett, at Southboro, Mass.

BOMBARDED THE SKIES.

Farwell's Rain-Makers Are Abundantly successful in Texas.

The rainfall expedition sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture under the charge of R. G. Dyrenforth arrived at Midland, Tex., last week, and has scored its first success. Last week was spent in conveying the supplies to the ranch of Nelson Morris, of Chicago, which is located twenty-three miles north of Midland. A part of the apparatus was set up and a test of it was made in which a number of blasts were fired.

The explosions of "rackarock" bombs caused great concussions, and were heard and felt distinctly at a considerable distance from the field of operations. The explosives were all fired from the ground by means of electric batteries. The trial was made primarily to test the apparatus, and was not calculated to be on a scale extensive enough to secure rain. However, in about ten hours after the explosions clouds began to form and gather over the Morris ranch and surrounding country, and about seventeen hours after the operations the rain began to fall in copious quantities.

The storm seemed to gather directly over the ranch and the fall of the rain was heaviest at that point. The storm extended over a space of 1,000 square miles and at the ranch the rain continued to fall for a space of six hours. About two inches fell at that point. This storm breaks a drought of long duration in this locality and is the best rain that has fallen on the Morris ranch for more than a year. All the apparatus will be in position in a few days when full trial will be made, which will be watched with greatest interest.

Somebody who has been figuring up says that the records of women preachers have 720 names. Three hundred and fifty of these belong to the Friends. Of the churches which have begun to ordain women the Universalist is at the head of the list; it has thirty-six women regularly in the ministry and eleven others licensed to preach. The Unitarians have sixteen ordained women and a large number who preach more or less regularly. The Congregationalists have six or eight ordained women. And, we may add, there are lots of men who could well be proud of the work these women have done.—Boston Record.

As if he did not have enough to do with his projected observatory on top of Mont Blanc, M. Eiffel has cabled the World's Fair directors for permission to erect a tower in Chicago that shall be superior to the one at the Paris exposition. He has been notified to send on his proposition and it will receive immediate consideration. But is Chicago enterprise going to let a Frenchman take the crowning honors of the great fair with a second-hand show that has lost its novelty?—Philadelphia Bulletin.

WENT OVER A DOLLAR.

A WILD RUSH IN THE PRICE OF WHEAT.

On 'Change at Chicago It Takes an Unprecedented Spurt and Rises Nine Cents in One Day—Conservative Brokers Say It's a Stampede—Fell Nearly a Mile.

Wheat Brokers Excited.

Wheat at $1.08 a bushel, and next to none to be had at that rate! This was the sensation on 'Change in Chicago the other day, says a dispatch. The news of wheat at a dollar a bushel had spread far beyond Board of Trade circles, and when the Board opened the following morning the galleries were crowded to suffocation. Scenes on 'Change are interesting even at ordinary times, but when the market is at fever heat; when there are no reasonable indications where it will stop in a wild upward rush; when, on the other hand, all signs point to the existence of a strong syndicate in control of the supply, then the pit becomes a veritable bedlam, a pandemonium such as only several hundred howling, shouting and madly excited traders can produce.

Now this was the case. While everybody was prepared for a rise, each onward revolution of the hand on the big indicator was greeted with yells that would have done credit to a gang of Apaches on an attack. The spectators caught the infection, but inasmuch as they were so closely wedged together that motion was impossible they could do nothing else but perspire. Many of them even shouted as wildly as the traders below, though there was no earthly reason why the visitors should yell. They simply did it by contagion.

December wheat opened at $1.02, within a very small fraction of 2 cents above the closing price of the preceding day, but it did not remain longer than a few minutes at that figure. Presently the indicator marked $1.02¼, then $1.03, and at this interesting point the rumor gained ground that Jim Keene and B. P. Hutchinson, backed by a syndicate of wealthy New York men, were manipulating the market. This caused a jump of 2 cents, and from that point the market advanced by quarters and halves to $1.08, where it remained until selling brought it down again to $1.06½, which was the closing price.

Experienced brokers claim that they see nothing extraordinary in the rush, and they maintain also that it cannot last very long. At present the farmers deliver little or nothing. The spring wheat is not yet harvested, and the supply of winter wheat is exceedingly small. All commercial exchanges have an upward turn, so have the domestic markets, and everybody seems crazy to get wheat. This was illustrated on 'Change, when the price at one time was bid up 2 cents, and not a pound of wheat could be had at that.

FELL NEARLY A MILE.

Woman Killed While Attempting to Make a Parachute Drop in Ohio.

One of the recent attractions at Coney Island, near Cincinnati, was a balloon ascension by Miss Annie Harkness, whose home is in Terre Haute, Ind. At the appointed time the young woman came forward and stepped into the car. The ropes were loosened at once and the balloon rose rapidly. At an elevation of about 5,000 feet the parachute was let go. The buzz from the gazing multitude was at its height. The on-lookers watched with trembling delight. The parachute slowly began to unfold. Suddenly there was a dreadful hush like the silence of death. The parachute had closed and with its human burden was falling with frightful velocity. Then the silence was broken with shrieks of fainting women, with children wailing and crying, and men turned away their faces to shut out the awful sight. Suddenly there struck upon the ears a dull, sickening sound—the end had come. A life had gone out in the midst of pleasure. Annie Harkness had made her last parachute descent.

—Jefferson street, the main thoroughfare of Huntington, was the scene of a dreadful and heart-rending accident. Mrs. Frank Collins, with three children, was on the street, the youngest, a daughter aged 6 months, in a baby cab. The mother stopped at one of the public wells to give her children a drink, when the baby cab rolled noiselessly away from where it was standing, falling off the curb at the feet of a team of horses. The infant was rolled in the gutter, and one of the horses kicked it in the head, killing it instantly. The agonizing shrieks of the mother were the first intimation of the occurrence, and the scene was one which made the faces of the strongest men turn pale.

—A few days ago there was born to Mr. and Mrs. Elias Scott, of Lafontaine, Wabash County, a son, and it is likely that the offspring has more grandparents living than any other child in the country. On the father's side there are grandfather and grandmother, Jerome Scott, and the father and mother of Jerome Scott, who are, of course great-great-grandparents. Then Mrs. Jerome Scott's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. McPherson, are also living, and are great-grandparents. On the mother's side are grandfather, great-grandfather, grandmother and great-grandmother. Grandmother Lynn's father is also living, making in all eleven grandparents.

—David Plake, the 15-year-old son of Lafayette Plake, had both legs cut off at Tipton, and he died in a few hours. He was attempting to get off a north-bound Lake Erie and Western passenger train.

—Churches in Indiana are now paying off debts by having "hugging societies." For fifteen cents one can hug a 16-year-old girl two minutes, ten cents for a short squeeze. Old maids three cents a piece or two for five. Editors pay in advertising, but can't hug anything but old maids and schoolmams.

—The onion crop raised by the farmers residing on the river bottom west of New Albany is said to be very large and fine this season. Four hundred barrels have already been shipped to Northern points.

—Jacob Heaton, residing five miles east of Muncie, turned a large drove of fat hogs in a wheat stubble-field, and, with his family, went to the city to see Barnum's show. When the family returned home at night Mr. Heaton found seventeen of the hogs dead from suffocation, and as many more would have died only for careful nursing. He had forgotten to provide water for the stock.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

Mr. Caper sent for an old woman who professed to know Joe's likes and dislikes, then left them. This old woman did know much more than Mr. Caper was aware of. When they were alone the first thing she said startled Job.

"Come, how much am I to get?"

"You—get! What you talkin' about?"

"If you make any money, why must I have nothing?"

"Make money! Why, bless my soul—bless your old soul, I'm out now mor'n forty dollars!"

"Humph. You can't fool me."

"I don't want to fool you. You must be crazy."

The old woman looked at him fixedly.

"You're not foolin' me?"

"What in the name of the Seven Sleepers would I want to fool you for?"

"You are fooling me. You've found out who she is. You've found her people. They're rich, and they've lots of money to pay for finding her. Now, you can't fool me, Mr. Wonder."

"Gosh hang it all, be you smack clean, clear gone crazy? Find nothing. Know nothing. I just would like to find out something, but you ain't helpin' a mite."

"You do look as if you were telling the truth."

"See hyar now. I don't want you to tell me Job Wonder lies."

"And you don't know who her people are?"

"Wish I did."

"And they ain't rich?"

"Oh! Go to grass."

"You won't make a pile of money."

"Good-day to you."

"Good-day to you."

"Blamed old fool!"

"Come back. I'll tell you what I suspect."

Job returned to the wooden seat, and sat down beside her.

"I suspect she's come of rich people."

"Eh! Why?"

"I saw her mother's linen—it was fine—fine—fine. And so was the child's."

"That all!"

"No. Her mother put on airs."

"Humph."

"I know when people put on airs. She did. And when she was dying, I heard her talking. She thought she was at home again—with her mother."

"Well—go on now."

"She used fine words—and what she said satisfied me, her mother was rich—rich."

"Well, and suppose she was—maybe she hasn't a copper now. Like as not it's all gone."

"No, it isn't. She was at home—in England."

"How do you know?"

"Don't I know the English ways, and English words. There's no hedges and public bake-ovens in this country like there are in England. I tell you whoever Joe's grandmother is, she's rich—rich. Joe's mother said it in her fever."

"Well, I'd be glad of it."

"Yes, but if you find her for her grandmother, you must give me something. You'll come to me?"

"I'll give you something right now. There's five dollars."

The old woman looked all around her suspiciously as she clutched the note he gave her, and concealed it quickly.

"I knew you were a gentleman—come to me again if you want to know anything about Joe."

"Yes," said Job. But he went away so disgusted with the old woman that he resolved never to see her again.

He did not know whether to believe her or not.

But he could not understand Caper's manner or advice. Caper didn't want Joe, evidently. He appeared to think she was a good riddance. Why? Job asked himself again and again. Why? And, if the old woman told the truth, who was Joe? If her grandmother was living, it was his duty to help to restore her to her people.

Now, Job began to think of it, Joe ought to have some relations. She ought to have some name. "What was her real name? Who was Joe, anyhow?"

"That's what I'll try to find out," said Job Wonder to himself as he set out for New York.

CHAPTER XII.

THE SIMPLE FARMER.

When Job found number —, — street, he was ushered into the presence of a gentleman of uncertain age.

His manner was that of a young man, but his complexion, the wrinkles, and gray hair were such as a man of sixty might have. Mr. Jenks was an old young man. Old in cunning, in living fast, in the knowledge of men.

He was only young from the knees down. His springy step was like that of a panther. Just now he was done with the vanities of the world. He had arrived at the mature age of forty, and had concluded to give the husks to the Lord.

He had long, bony fingers, a nose like a beak, and a long, scraggy neck. He had thin, bloodless lips, fishy eyes, and a narrow, retreating chin. He had a habit—a very disgusting habit, of which he was wholly unconscious—the dirty habit of biting his finger-nails.

The moment he announced himself, Job observed that Mr. Jenks began to chaw his finger nails, and the lawyer's action instantly excited the farmer's suspicions.

To explain: Mrs. Wonder, many years before, had endeavored to persuade her husband to have no dealings with a neighbor who desired to purchase a peculiar wedged-shaped field. The neighbor professed he wanted it to assist him in a sheep pasture.

As he told his story Mrs. Wonder sat knitting. When the neighbor departed she said: "Job, don't you sell it, or you'll rue it."

"Why, Maria?"

"I can't tell why. Only I know Mr. Breen was biting his finger-nails all the time he was here. I can tell a man's honest by his hands. Mr. Breen is not an honest man—and the habit is so disgusting that it ought to teach people. They ought to look at his hands."

"Pooh! Maria. Tell a man by his hands?"

"Yes, Job. I can tell a man or woman's honesty by their hands. And I'm not the only one."

Job laughed. It was ridiculous.

"I never knew a straight-out honest man or woman bite their finger-nails, Job."

"Don't ever let anybody hear you say that, Maria."

Job sold the field to Mr. Breen—not because he wanted to; he did it solely to accommodate a neighbor.

In a little less than a month a great company sent a lawyer to him to ask his price for a portion of his land. The farmer had just discovered it contained very valuable mineral and a peculiar clay rarely found in the State. The knowledge was evidently shared by people he did not know. He was given to understand the company was willing to give him four times the value of his farm—in the past—for forty-five acres.

He slept over it. He talked to his friends, consulted the county surveyor, and concluded he would let the company have fifty acres for double the amount the lawyer offered him.

The lawyer telegraphed his principals; the company immediately ordered the papers to be made out.

"Of course you understand this fifty acres includes the field on the north side of the road, Mr. Wonder—that five acres, or less."

"No. I sold that wedge to Breen."

The lawyer stared at him.

"To your neighbor Breen?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"A month ago, I guess."

The lawyer whistled. Then he swore. Then he turned pale with anger.

"Mr. Wonder, this is a rascally business of Breen's. I thought you knew that man. I could tell you some things concerning him that would surprise you. However, he sha'n't make much out of me."

"Why, what are you talking about. What's he to do with this deal?"

"Everything, now. How are we to get in to the land? We can't get over to it by balloon, and that wedge runs right along the front at the only part of the land a road can be made."

"I begin to see."

"You do? Well, unless you are prepared to give us your house, your very best fields—your entire farm of two hundred and eighty acres, in short—the deal's off."

Job Wonder looked at the lawyer stupidly.

"What do you want me to do?"

"Nothing."

"But I'd like to sell. It's a good price."

"I'll buy, but as things stand I'll advise—more, Ill see the company does not pay a farthing more."

"That ends it, then."

"Oh, no."

"What can I do?"

"You can buy back from Breen. He thinks we'll buy. I wouldn't permit the company to buy an inch from him; if he offered it at the same rate you do I'd take it. Not till the crack of doom could that man compel us to give him a farthing more."

Mrs. Wonder rejoiced. She didn't care whether the land was sold or not; and Breen's dirty practices had been fully exposed now before the whole county, for the story was in everybody's mouth.

"I'll buy back that wedge," said Job. "Why I'd sold my whole farm for $20,000 two months ago, and hyar's these people offering me $25,000 for fifty acres."

He went to Breen, and came back raging to his wife.

"What do you think? That fellow wants me to give him half what the company gives me!"

"I knew that before you went over. Well?"

"He'd overheard it somehow—knew the company was going to deal with me."

"Mr. Breen is wideawake—for himself. Well—why don't you finish it? Give him half. After selling to him to accommodate a neighbor, why don't you help him get rich?"

"What! Give him $12,500 for land I sold him for $250! No! But I'll wind him up now."

And Job proceeded to wind his neighbor up.

He proceeded to cut a roadway that was the wonder of Acorn County. He had his land resurveyed, then cut a huge slice out of the hillside next the wedge-shaped field that left a gully, or ditch, bordering the hill side of the wedge that was impassible. Breen's wedge was entirely cut off by the new road.

In the cutting process, an unexpected deposit of mineral was fully exposed—more than compensating for the outlay, which was vast. Job expended six thousand dollars—but he was in the heart then of his mineral deposit—a greater deposit than that the great company first expected to reach.

The butt end of the wedge-field lay next his land. The lane was on his own land.

He offered the county land for a new road—a shorter road; the county accepted his offer, and Breen had to come to him inside of five months to consult him about a way to get into his wedge-field.

Job retained a royalty on his mineral land, sold to the great company the fifty acres—less the wedge-field—for fifty thousand dollars.

He was thousands ahead and Breen was punished.

"But it was half luck," Mrs. Wonder said.

Job remembered all this as he observed the thin lawyer biting his nails. He became suspicious at once. He was not a stickler for forms, on the contrary, he was independent, democratic, but a stickler for cleanliness.

"Ahem! Mr. Wonder, you seem very anxious to find this girl. By the way, —take a seat—sit down. By the way, how old is the girl you are in search of?"

"Well, along from fourteen to sixteen."

"Ah! You didn't describe her in your advertisement."

"Well, no. I left that for them as knows where she is to do."

"That is a good deal like the Irishman's answer to the clerk in the post-office. He wouldn't tell his name till he got his letter."

Mr. Jenks laughed.

Job, listening to a cackle rather than a laugh, took a hearty dislike to the lawyer.

"I come to compare notes, Mr. Jenks. Come a good ways, too."

"There's no hurry, take your time—take your time, Mr. Wonder. Now, there is a client of mine who has a young lady in view. She would be about fifteen, and I am led to believe she has dark hair, dark eyes, and is rather small for her age."

"You are not sure," said Job.

"Are you looking for a girl like that?"

"I am."

There was a lengthy silence. The lawyer was the first to speak.

"Is there anything of moment depending on the girl you want?"

"Well, yes." Job was going to add it would ease his conscience, but he concluded this lawyer wouldn't appreciate his motives.

"In what way would it benefit you—or her—or any others, if there are others?"

"Don't put so many questions at once. I came here to compare notes. If you know of such a girl, or can help find her, I'll tell you just what I came for. I'll go that far."

"I think I can be sure of where such a girl was six months ago."

"Six months ago! Why, she was in Barnesville Poorhouse—the girl I'm after, six months ago."

"Precisely. I know that."

"You know it?"

"O, yes. I'm aware of the manner in which you took a girl from the poorhouse, and it is greatly to your credit."

"I don't think so at all. Anybody would have done the same—in my place."

"In your place—very good. But everybody has not filled your place. Well, the girl you took may, or may not be the girl I have in view. It is just to determine that that I wrote to you. I would have gone to you—but as the girl is in the city——"

"What! Is Joe here?"

Jenks was biting his nails again. He made Wonder very nervous. Wonder fidgeted, and the lawyer misapprehended him entirely.

"We'll cut this right short then. I'll go and see her; that'll settle it."

"But you can't just at once. We must go slow, Mr. Wonder."

"When can I see her, then? I haven't much time to lose hyar."

"We will try to arrange it so you can see her to-morrow. It must be managed very carefully."

"Where is she? She isn't locked up, is she?"

The lawyer smiled.

"O, no! She is in excellent hands—the girl I have in view."

"How long has she been in town?"

"I cannot say—some time."

"Three months?"

"Perhaps. I think so."

"It's Joe, I'll bet a dollar."

"I hope so. I will have to see a third party, and afterward I will communicate with you, so that you can be on hand and see the young lady."

"Oh, Joe ain't a young lady, she's just a bit of a girl."

Mr. Jenks was biting his nails again. He smiled curiously. "Can you be on hand to-morrow morning—say at ten?"

"I can be here at six!"

"No, no! Nobody is ever up at that hour here, Mr. Wonder; say at ten."

"Ten be it, then. I'll be on hand."

"Ten," repeated the lawyer, as he bowed the farmer out.

The moment the farmer departed from Mr. Jenk's office, that gentleman called to a person in an inner room:

"Ike—here—I want you, and be lively."

"Jump down after the man who left me—a farmer with a white hat—follow him and report to me."

The young man, who had his hat on, tipped it a little to one side and hastened away.

He returned at the end of an hour.

"Stops at the A—— House; registered Job Wonder, to-day."

"That's right. Now then, Ike, I've fifty dollars—mind, fifty dollars for you if you'll do what I want you to. Put yourself in the way of finding out which of the girls living at Monsieur Dufaur's academy came there about three month's ago from the country. You must do it this evening, or before nine to-morrow. If you can, make an excuse to see her. And if it is possible, find out what hour she can be seen on the street or about the house."

"I can do that, I guess. What's wrong in calling to see my friend from the country, and discovering I've made a mistake?"

"That will do."

"Where is my friend from?"

"Near Barnesville."

"Stable—barn—stable—I'll remember. Well?"

"That's all for the present. Except that if you manage neatly there may be more in it for you."

"You couldn't give me a fiver on account, Nuncke?"

"There! Lord! the money you spend, Ike. I'm called down town, now—you can close the office as soon as you like."

And the lawyer placed his hat on his head and left the office.

Ike waited until he was down-stairs. He leaned out of the window, and watched Mr. Jenks step into a street-car, that whirled him down town. Then Ike whistled softly.

"Fifty! Fifty! Lord! He'll bust some day. Wonder what's up! He's awful close—awful suspicious of me. Never lets me see the lady that calls once a week in a stylish turnout. All I've seen is the top of her head. White-haired! Rich! Footman! And he works among his private papers so much. Well, here goes to learn something."

He locked the door, took from his pocket a bunch of keys, opened a drawer, lifted a bundle of letters out, and glanced at them.

"These are all from England. There's a crest on 'em, too."

Ike's face was a study as he held his head on one side and looked at the monogram, which he termed a "crest."

"A crest. Now, that means blood—blue blood. And blue blood in England means money. Money, and lots of it. What's in 'em?"

He opened a letter—the first that came to his hand, and smiled as he read it.

"Whew! She's giving him Hail Columbia, and, oh, my uncle! What a sweet-scented one he is! How he must have lied! Lord, how he lies! Why, if I live to be a hundred, I never can hope to teach uncle at lying. I do believe he tells lies in his sleep."

He took up another letter.

"Humph! This isn't so—so gingerish. But my sweet uncle's lies stick out so straight, it's a wonder any one could fold the paper over them. Why, what a liar he is!"

A third letter was glanced at.

"Hello! Hel-l-l-o-o! What's this? Eh? Struck a gold mine!"

Then Ike suddenly sat down, ceased to talk to himself, and proceeded to master the contents of a dozen or more letters.

At the end of half an hour he rose, drew a long breath, replaced the letters carefully in the order in which he found them, and pondered.

"I knew he was deep—very deep, but I never thought he was so infernal sly—so cute as he is. He's playing a deep game!"

Ike's brow's corrugated; his mouth was closed with a curl that expressed a sneer and suspicion.

"What's the little game? I'm a peanut shell if I don't find out! I must find it out. But what's the difference what his game is? I've a plan, too, and I'll play it for all it's worth. And I'll begin now—instanter—forthwith, as we lawyers say—if not sooner."

And then Ike, with a knowing look, carefully locked the door behind him, and set out on the errand his uncle set him to do.

"Rich is she! Well, we see if I can't come in for my share. If I don't get ahead of the old man now, I hope my head may be sold for an old oyster can, that's all!"

And Ike set out on his errand to the Dufaur mansion.

Population of Cities.

The census of 1890 shows the population of our country to be 62,622,250, and nearly one-third of the whole is centered in incorporated towns having populations of 8,000 and over. The following table exhibits the steady tendency of the people to mass together in such cities:

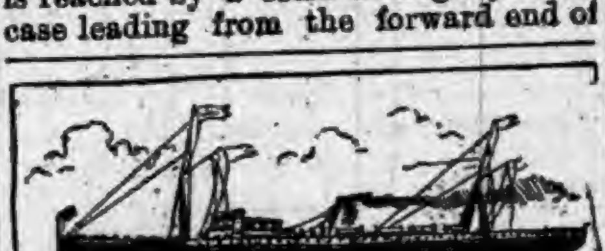
OVER 300 years ago, in the reign of Henry VIII., an Italian ship sank in the River Stour, at the entrance to the English port of Sandwich. The river, which is noted for frequently changing its course, recently shifted into an old channel and exposed the wreck of the vessel which since the year 1542 has laid imbedded in the sand.

THE county jail at Somerville, N. J., was entered by burglars the other night and a pocket-book stolen.

QUEEN OF FRESH WATER SEAS.

The Virginia Is the Best Equipped Vessel that Ever Sailed Into Chicago.

Perhaps the handsomest, costliest and best equipped steamship that ever sailed into Chicago is the Goodrich Transportation Company's Virginia, which arrived recently direct from the hands of her Cleveland builders. Massive in outline and construction, and yet molded on lines as graceful as a yacht's, and combining speed and weatherly qualities, she was the pride of every fresh water sailor who boarded her for inspection. Such a sweep of deck room, such a display of novelty and ingenuity that was everywhere apparent, and such thoroughness in the minor details of outfitting were never seen before on the lakes. The Virginia is essentially a perfected edition, though on a smaller scale, of the ocean greyhounds, whose running is one of the marvels of the times. Equipped with twin screws that are turned by powerful triple expansion engines, she will doubtless be able to show her heels to anything that floats on the lakes. Her interior fittings and arrangements are rich and artistic, and include a number of novelties, among which folding berths will probably prove the most popular. The dining saloon is located in the forward hold space, and is reached by a solid mahogany staircase leading from the forward end of the main cabin. The first stairway extends from the cabin to a hallway on the main deck. This hallway is finished in mahogany, and from it the stairway continues to the saloon, which is richly furnished. The ceiling is divided into panels filled with Lincrusta walton, and in the center of each panel is an electric light pendant. In addition to these lights three electrotiers are hung from the central beam running fore and aft through the saloon. With the exception of mahogany the entire saloon is finished in the tasteful and fashionable style of decoration known as ivory and gold.



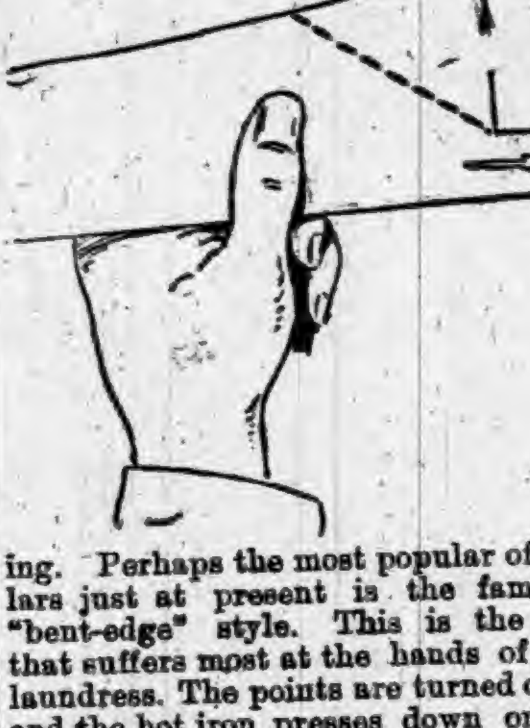
THE VIRGINIA.

The dimensions of the hull are 278 feet over all, 260 feet keel, 38 feet beam, and 25 feet deep. The water bottom is divided into six sections, three on either side, and contains a tank that will hold 45,000 gallons of fresh water. The hull has six water-tight bulkheads in addition to collision and stuffing-box bulkheads, so that if the boat should be cut squarely in two both ends would float.

POINTERS ON COLLARS.

Time and Trouble Saving Devices for Shirt and Collar Wearers.

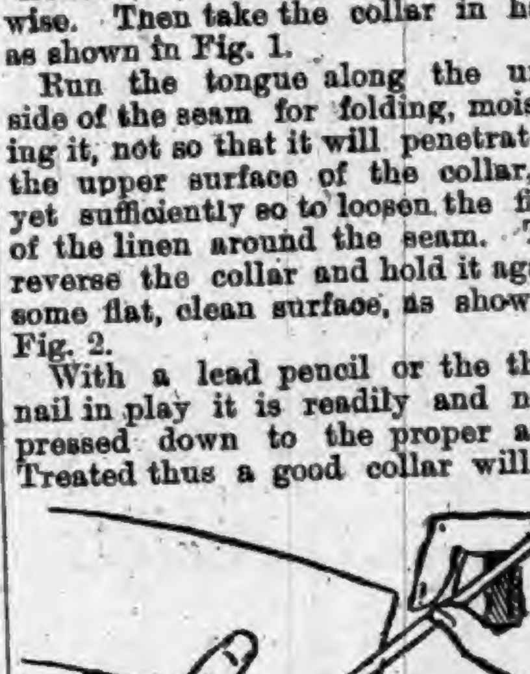
Millions of good linen collars are ruined annually by the handling they receive in laundries. The acids used in washing are baneful enough, but the greatest harm occurs in the ironing. Perhaps the most popular of collars just at present is the familiar "bent-edge" style. This is the one that suffers most at the hands of the laundress. The points are turned over, and the hot iron presses down on the seam, stretching the fiber at that point so that the collar rarely is presentable after two or three washings. Here is shown a little device that will effect a great saving if put into practice, while being simple in operation.



First, instructions should be given that your collars are to be returned "ironed flat," the ends not bent in any wise. Then take the collar in hand, as shown in Fig. 1.

Run the tongue along the under side of the seam for folding, moistening it, not so that it will penetrate to the upper surface of the collar, but yet sufficiently so to loosen the fibers of the linen around the seam. Then reverse the collar and hold it against some flat, clean surface, as shown in Fig. 2.

With a lead pencil or the thumb nail in play it is readily and neatly pressed down to the proper angle. Treated thus a good collar will last twice or three times as long in use as the ironed-down affair. Some difficulty may be experienced at first in having the collars returned as requested, but a card attached to the package containing instructions will be effective.



ISAAC N. SELIGMAN, the New York banker, is regarded in financial circles as the ablest of what may be termed the second generation of the family whose name he bears, and it is an open secret that he is one of the prime factors in the immense banking business and railroad interests they control. As the young man has made a thorough study of railroad engineering, and supplemented it by practical experience on a Western railroad system, he has an equipment which few financiers possess.

THE number of arrests for drunkenness in Massachusetts for the year 1890 was 52,814, of whom only 5,882 were women. Forty-five thousand nine hundred and eighty-two arrests were made in the twenty-five cities, and only 6,591 in all the rest of the State. The city population is 1,327,164; the town population 911,779. The number of arrests has increased since 1885 from 35,480 to 52,824 in 1890, whatever the figures may mean.

THURSDAY……..AUGUST 20, 1891.

NEW YORK state convention is to be held Sept. 15.

SEVERAL buildings of the world's fair, are delayed because of bad foundations. Mistake in the plans.

STATE elections are held in the following states Nov. 3: Iowa, Pennyluania, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Maryland, Mississippi and Virginia.

MRS. POLK, widow of President James K. Polk, died at her home in Nashville, Tenn., Friday, at the age of 88. She was in moderate circumstances, having seen her once fair property destroyed during the rebellion.

MONTANA is rich in flocks and herds. The recent reports made to their state board of equalization shows 640,000 cattle, valued at $9,500,000; 1,516,000 sheep, valued at $3,800,000; 161,000 horses, valued at $4,500,000; 6,060 hogs, valued at $27,000.

FRED. DOUGLAS, has resigned as minister to Hayti. That high-toned colored republic don't want a man of color to represent this country at their headquarters, and Harrison may have to send a white man. He should not send anyone.

BAD accident at a Long Island port last Wednesday. An excursion steamer was starting from the dock at Cold Spring Harbor to go back to Brooklyn with about 500 on board, squall shook the vessel, and the upper deck broke down crushing many, of whom sixteen were killed.

NEW silver mines in Leadville, Colo. Late dispatch says: "The richest strike that has been made in this mining district for years has just been made in the Bohn shaft located within one block of Harrison avenue, Leadville's main thoroughfare. Last week it was determined to sink this shaft, and diamond drills were brought into use and went down 312 feet and struck a thick vein of extremely high grade of silver ore, which assays from 200 to 300 ounces of silver to the ton.

THE only things republican papers have to brag about, are the very things the democrats have been fighting for, but which republicans in congress refused to help make into laws. Among these things, are the reduction of tariff duties. They have done this in case of sugar, and that article became cheaper, just as democrats said other things would. Then there is the reciprocity scheme. This is free trade, or freer trade with a few nations. They point with pride to this now, but then democrats asked for it on a more extended scale even, they refused to consider it. If reciprocity is a good thing, give us more of it.

THE authorities of Portugal have closed their ports against the importation of American or other wheat until all their home grown wheat has been consumed. Then they will let foreign wheat come in.

REPUBLICAN papers have never yet explained their claim that lowering the tariff on sugar made it cheaper, and raising the tariff on tin makes tin cheaper. If raising the rate on tin made tin cheaper, why didn't lowering the rate on sugar, make sugar dearer?

INDIANA will not unite with other states, and make a big building at the world's fair. She will build alone. Ed. Hawkins, one of our state commissioners has selected the spot. He has this to say of it: "We have a plot of ground covering about one acre, partly covered with large, beautiful trees, which will remain intact. We are near the railroad, close to the steamboat landing and just across the drive from the art hall. A small lake of ten acres is within a stone's throw and there are no buildings to intervene between our building and Lake Michigan. The ground is triangular and has two magnificent buildings of California, Illinois and Women's department across from the several sides. The intention of the board is to have Secretary Noble advertise for plans for a building which shall only cover part of the ground leaving a small park in front. The three drives about the Indiana land with the magnificent buildings of California, Illinois and the American women surrounding it will cause everybody who attends the World's Columbian exposition to pass the exhibit of the Hoosiers."

Corunna Assembly.

The union assembly of Northern Indiana to be held at Corunna, Ind., Aug. 29-30. The managers, Rev. French and Rev. Peirce beg leave to state through the colums of your paper that the assembly will be one of the best ever held in this part of the state. The following is the program:

Saturday, 10:30 a. m., Lecture by Rev. Albertson, subject, Courage.

2:30 p. m., Lecture by Prof. L. W. Fairfield of Tri-State Normal, subject, Knights of Pythias.

7:30 p. m. Lecture by Rev. J. M. Driver of Ft. Wayne, subject, What I saw and heard in Dixie.

Sunday 10:30 a. m., Sermon by Rev. L. W. Fairfield.

2:30 p. m. Lecture by Rev. J. M. Driver, subject, The Dark Days of the Sixties.

7:30 p. m., Sermon by Rev. Albertson.

The lectures and sermons will be interspersed with the finest of vocal and instrumental music. The old Corunna band will furnish the assembly with bund music both days. There will be excursion trains between Elkhart and Butler, also, between Angola and Auburn. Everybody come and hear the intellect of the state and enjoy the great occasion.

Public Highways.

One of the best investments a community can make is the judicious expenditure of the public funds for the improvement of its highways. But before another cent of money is added to the road tax, there should be a sweeping reform in the methods of improving the roads. Under the methods generally in vogue there is an enormous waste of money and labor. Under reform methods that are possible, the same amount of road tax would do so much good that the people would be willing to have it increased. If they received the worth of their money they would not object to the amount of their tax.

Dr. Collier, of the New York Experiment Station, in an address to farmers on the improvemet of highways said: "It seems to me that it should be for the future 'the pet scheme' of every man, and woman and child also, until some action shall be taken looking to their permanent improvement. Within a week I had the pleasure of riding over a stretch of macadamized road nine miles in length, which within two years has been laid in one of the New England States, and I could not but think that such a road, like a thing of beauty, was a joy forever. Consider for a moment the enormous tax which our roads involve, without considering even the millions upon millions of dollars, which, during the past half century, have been expended upon our roads without at present any evidence of improvement in their condition; consider the wear and tear of horses, harness and vehicles which the condition of our roads for months in the year involves; consider the loss of time, which also is money, and the wear and tear upon one's patience, for I doubt whether grace has been given to any sufficient to sustain him for a ten-mile drive over any of our roads during several months of the year."

Public interest in this subject is increasing. To add to this interest and call forth valuable suggestions, prizes are offered for the best essays on the improvement of highways. The following explains itself:

"Under the auspices of the American Economic Association, Colonel Albert A. Pope, of Boston, offers $500 in two amounts, of $200 and $300 respectively for the first and second best essay on "Country Roads and City Streets." The essay must not exceed 25,000 words, and should treat of the economic and social' importance of good roads, the causes of poor roads existing in much of our country, the best system of road making, reconstruction and maintenance, including cheaper methods suited to dirt roads as well as methods for permanent roadways, the best system of street improvement, the systems of taxation that should be employed in both country and city to distribute justly the burden of road and street improvement, and the legislation that is required to further these ends. Competition is open to all. Further information may be obtained by addressing Professor Richard T. Ely, Baltimore."—Ex.

"A given load that can just be drawn by one horse on a level iron track will need the power of 1 2-3 on asphalt, and will need 3 1 3 on our best granite block pavement, seven horses on good cobble stones, twenty on ordinary earth roads and forty on sandy road." These are the results of actuals experiments and they show the enormous value of a good surface on our highway.

Lightning Hit It.

Lightning struck T. J. Saxton's house during the brisk rainstorm last Friday afternoon. He was up town at the time, and his daughter and Mrs. Cone and Ethel McKay were in the house. The shock greatly frightened them, and all noticed great balls of fire by the corners afterward found to be struck, but they did not know for some time that the lightning had actually hit the house. Their attention was first called to what they thought was smoke rising from the tin roof of the wings. On going around the building it was found that the bottom siding boards, and corner board at the northeast corner, had been torn loose at the bottom and somewhat splintered. A tin spout comes down at that point, but the spout did not show any marks. Going south from this point, at the southwest corner of that wing, a spout comes down and goes into the cistern. Here also, the lightning had torn loose the corner boards and siding near the bottom. by the spout. But in neither case could one see any trace of where it came from. An examination of the roof did not reveal any damage done there. How the fluid followed from the roof, is strange And if it came from the ground, it is strange that it did not follow the building or the spouting up to the roof. But it was a fortunate thing that it was no worse.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain.

M. E. Blair M. D. D. D. S. of Mansfield, O., formerly of the Western Reserve Medical University, Cleveland, O., will be at Auburn, Friday August 21st to 22nd for the purpose of extracting teeth without pain or sleep. The Doctor is the patentee of this process and will positively appear in person. Remember the date, Aug. 21 and 22, at the Swineford House.

TESTIMONIAL:

Dr. Blair extracted a number of teeth for us without pain, and we cheerfully recommend him to the confidence of the public. Mr. Walter Miller, Mrs C as. Bange, Mr. Dexter Taff, Mr. B F. Blair, Mr. G. C. Lahnun, (22 teeth)

Another Burglar.

Burglars got into Lewis Spangler's residence at the Junction last Saturday while he and his wife were up town. They went home about noon and on going into the house, he noticed a clock and some other things piled on the bed. He at once stepped outside and got help. It is supposed that while he did this, the thief slipped back into the cellar, through a window, which it is believed he had entered, and from there escaped back where he came in, and hastily reached the woods. At all events he was gone. He had opened everything he thought might have valuables, and had apparently spent some time trying to break into a small old-fashioned fire proof safe, in which Mr. S., kept valuable papers. He had taken a good ax from the wood house, and tried to chop the safe open, and had almost got into it, completely ruining the safe door and spoiling the ax, the edge of which had large chunks of the steel broken off. The safe door was gashed up and loosened, and the filling of plaster of paris was reduced to a powder. But there was no money in it, though it contained notes and other valuable papers. It is not believed the burglar got anything of value.

Stoned a Postoffice.

Academie over in Allen county, had a lively time a week ago last Sunday. A lot of young men wanted to get beer on that day, and being refused, stoned the premises. The building it seems also is the postoffice, and family residence, and this made matters all the worse. They were arrested and taken to Ft. Wayne and given a fine, but we presume that fellows who think such rows are fun, will go and do the same thing over again at the first chance. We presume they were the same gang who came up on the same train, drunk, with the crowd that went to Barnum's show from Auburn. They became disgusting, abusive, and finally insulting in their conduct in the presence of the ladies, and happening to be present at the right time, Dr. Buchtel slapped one of them "for keeps," and made him shut up. As soon as he got off the train however, he was very loud mouthed again, and wanted very much to get where Doc. was so as to lick him He didn't chase the train very far, however.

Figures Never Lie.

The retail prices of everything depends upon two considerations. First: The price at which any article can be purchased at wholesale. Second: The expense attending its sale at retail. The merchant, who by reason of large capital and special advantages can buy goods at lower prices than his competitions, or who by a more economical management of his business can sell them at less expense than others, is sure to undersell his competitors, and to a certain extent monopolize custom. The Foster Furniture and Carpet Co., of Ft. Wayne, La-Fayette, Jackson and Terre Haute, possesses unusual facilities for producing and purchasing goods below regular market rates. Their business is so large that the percentage of profit they must have is not above the half what it usually is. These two advantages account for the steady and rapid growth of their immense business.

Encyclopedia Britannica.

We were obliged by an unusual amount of advertising, to discontinue for a time, our notices of this valuable and important work. Besides, a good part of our stock has been disposed of, though we had not even called on the people at Garrett and Butler. Now, we have only a few sets left, and will not likely get more, so it will be an object to all who intend to purchase a set soon, to call on us, as we have the exclusive sale in this section of the county. You will never be able to get them as cheap as now, and the chance will soon be gone. Good terms for payments, or good discount for cash. Teachers, members of literary societies, parents who have children in school, clergymen and lawyers who have as yet no encyclopedia in their libraries, have now the best opportunity they will ever have, and should remember that the supply is limited, and getting smaller. Call at our office for terms, or write to us at an early date. 33-35

Three Cheap Harvest Excursions.

On August 25th, September 15th and 29th, low rate harvest excursions will be run from all stations on the Wabash railroad to the great farming regions of the west, northwest, south and southwest. Tickets good for returning for thirty days from date of sale. The crops were never so good as this year, and the railroad rates, via Wabash, never so low. Whatever section you wish to visit, be sure and write to or call upon the nearest Wabash ticket agent for particulars as to rates, time of trains, accommodations, etc. If you do not live adjacent to the Wabash, write at once to F. Chandler, Gen'l Pass. and ticket agent, St. Louis, Mo. 31-38

B. & O. Excursion to Niagara.

On August 25, the B. & O. will sell excursion tickets to Niagara Falls, Toronto and Chatauqua Lake. Special train of first-class coaches will run through to Niagara. Returning, special train will leave the Falls at 7:90 p. m. August 27. Pullman car accommodations may be secured upon application to Mr. L. S. Allen, A. G. P. A., Chicago, on or before August 20. To accommodate passengers who wish to stay longer, tickets will be good, returning on all regular trains, for six days, and stopover will be granted at Lake Chautauqua within the limit of the tickets.

Notice to Patrons.

Having disposed of my entire stock of groceries, etc., I desire to have a settlement with all who are indebted to me. Those knowing themselves indebted, are hereby notified to call at once, or their account will be placed in the hands of the collector.

Yours very respectfully,
HENRY J. MOSSBY,

Was it Suicide?

Why marriage is sometimes a failure is an interesting and important question to all; and everyone married or single, should the absorbing story with the above title by the poet novelist Ella Wheeler Wilcox, written in that popular author's most forcible style, which is on published in the September number of that always bright periodical Demorest's Family Magazine. It contains, besides, an abundance of other good reading matter, just the sort that one enjoys at this season. There is a splendid article, fully illustrated, about "Brazil;" "A Poet at Home" tells about Ella Wheeler Wilcox and her lovely home, and with it are pictures of "the poet's corner" and portraits of her in some of her noted gowns; whether you ever enjoyed that rare sport moose-hunting or not, you will be interested in "A Stray Shot at a Moose," written by the fortunate amateur sportsman who brought down his game at the first shot, which is also finely illustrated; "A Seven Day's Tramp and What it Cost" describes a "tramp" made by eight girls and a chaperon, and the chaperon tells the story: then there are stories and poems, and the various departments are replete with useful and amusing matter, and there are nearly 200 illustrations, besides a beautiful water color, "Play ball, Pa!" which appeals to every admirer and devotee of baseball. And this is only a fair sample of what one get monthly in this ideal ideal Family Magazine, which is published for $200 a year, by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th, St., New York City.

JULIA MAY DILLS,
Administratrix.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GARRETT.

The B. & O. car shops are now very busy, running night and day.

A great deal of tile has been laid in town this year, and more to be laid.

The convention of the Epworth League of Northern Indiana is to be held here August 26 and 27.

Chas. Dietrick, who was hurt by the cars last week is improving nicely and will soon be out again.

John Zeek has begun work on his new block adjoining Davis' store. The basement is excavated, and work will go on.

Our popular merchant tailor, B. Hunsel is putting down a ten-foot cement walk by his entire building. It will cost him near $200. Here's enterprise.

The school board has opened out the basement of the building, so the pupils will have that to use. They also expect to put in heaters soon. Good plan.

The town is going to plant trees all around the park this fall. Our city fathers are a live set of men. Give them credit for the good work now being done.

The Behler & Fitzgerald steam laundry is doing splendid work, and we are glad to see they are getting a big custom. Their plant cost not less than $2,000.

W. J. Frederick has put down 150 feet of Columbus flagstone sidewalk on Keyser street. "Fred" don't do things by halves. He began on another new cottage this week.

The town council went to Chicago Sunday evening and purchased a hose cart and 1500 feet of new fabric hose, for the better fire protection of our city. We propose to be ready.

Moore & Merica, dealers in musical instruments and furniture, are doing a good business. They understand their line of goods perfectly, and people will do well to trade there.

Mr. Drake, the photographer, who lately located here, is doing some fine work in pictures. His gallery is on King street, just east of Hunsel's store. It will pay our people to call in and see his work.

The town board has opened Peter street south to the South Addition, bringing many good lots into market. They were sold off in a hurry, and at advanced prices. It will be a valuable improvement.

Mrs. Wm. Fountain will soon have one of the nicest dwellings in town. It is of brick and will cost about $3,500. It will be her own residence. C. B. Jones has the contract. The foundations are dug and the stone hauled.

A colored tramp jumped on the bumpers of a train here Monday and was quite seriously hurt, his foot being crushed. Dr. Thompson dressed his wounds and he was sent the hospital at Chicago. He seemed quite intelligent.

Father Young went to Avilla Monday, whence he and Father Duehmig go to Milwaukee, to remain a day or with the new archbishop. Then the former at least, goes on the lakes for his health He will return the last of this week.

John B. Mager, president of our council, is putting down a cement sidewalk in front of his meat market, on Cowan St. Mr. M. is a square and fair dealer, and has a good run of custom, as he deserves to have, for he treats all alike, and in a pleasant, friendly way.

Jacob Busbey, our lively contractor and builder could almost make a town himself in a year. He has already put up fifteen new dwellings so far this year, having the last nearly done, and is good for several more before snow flies. People who are going to build, should see him about it.

Jim Murphy, fireman on the B. & O., was badly hurt Saturday, at Attica, Ohio. His train ran into the rear of the local. The engineer jumped off on one side and Jim on the other the latter breaking his leg. He was picked up and cared for. Sunday evening he was brought home on No. 9. in care of Dr. Young, of Attica, and was here placed in charge of Dr. Thompson and is doing well.

As jolly a chap as our town holds, is Charlie Hoick, at the Half-Way House, at the east side of town. He has a fine line of everything to be found in a general store, and treats all his customers as if they were old friends. And they soon are old friends. Life is too short for Charlie to grow thin, but just long enough for him to make himself on good terms with everybody who comes.

L. J. Gengler has a big line of business in insurance, building & loan, etc. Besides eleven insurance companies, he has the Detroit Accident and the Lloyd Plate Glass. It was he who paid about $150 for the plate glass broken by some toughs last year at Singler's. He has also the Fort Wayne Tri-State B. & Loan Co., the Lansing B. & Loan Co., and the Detroit B. & L. Co. He has loaned out for building purposes during the past year, over $80,000. The B. & O. Imp. Co. has also put up a number of good dwellings and W. J. Federick has erected five good dwellings near the center of town. They are nice ones.

Next Saturday Night.

After six o'clock, or any day or night this week, you can buy at F. E. Davenport's a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup for your cough. This medicine is guaranteed to cure any cough or cold and all lung or throat troubles. For bronchial diseases it has no superior and many cases of bronchitis have been entirely cured by its use. Do not hesitate to try this great, meritorious remedy and be convinced of its curative powers. You can buy this medicine for 25c. to give it a trial of F. E. Davenport.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE

cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

How plain to my mind are the scenes of my childhood,
As my recollection recalls them to view,
The soap-kettle hung on the poles of green basswood;
The Smoke and the Smell that my infancy knew!
But those days of SOFT SOAP and consequent anguish,
Have long since departed, we pray and we hope;
The use of the stuff 'gan to wane and to languish
As soon as they offered US

Job Edwards, who can be seen on our streets almost daily, is one of the oldest men in our town. He will be 84 if he lives till the 23d of next month. Though considerably crippled up, he is able to get about, though slowly. He is supposed to be one of the heirs of the Edward's estate that lays claim to about 60 acres in New York City. This land has been held on one of their long time leases, probably 99 years, which we are told has just run out. If it should prove that he is one of the heirs it would be a nice thing for the old gentleman in his declining years.

He found also, many warm friends, who kept him on the go and the talk as long as he remained. He made a friendly call on the COURIER and its editor, and had a talk over old times. Monday night he again turned his face to the far west, with many wishes from our people for his safe journey. His wife will make a visit here soon.

The Young America cigar is still on top as an article of trade manufactured in Auburn. They are smoked by the best people.

A. Lewis will soon put up a dwelling on the lot he got of Geo. Quince. It is just southeast of James McClellan's in Gas Addition.

While walking around in the city with nothing particular to do, just drop in some place and get a K. & B. cigar. They are worth the money every time.

Miss Laura Keeran went over to Butler Saturday evening for a few days visit. She taught in the Butler public schools several years and has many friends there.

The ladies of the Lutheran church are earnestly requested to meet in lecture room Saturday afternoon at two o'clock promptly. It is important all should be present.

John Leasure was up with the lark last Thursday morning, and got the big plate glass front into its place in the new building by seven o'clock. John is a hustler.

Dr. James Headly the distinguished lecturer and Samuel Phelps Leland the renowned traveler and lecturer will be [illegible]he chief attractions in the institute [illegible]cture course. 32tf

J. A. Gushwa, one of the jurors now [illegible]tting, put in one of the recesses very [illegible]ofitably by paying the printer ahead, [illegible]d we didn't "talk about the case be[illegible] the jury," either.

[illegible]omas Brothers have the finest show[illegible] in town in their new bakery. It is [illegible]ular revolving case, and quite ex[illegible]ve, but is very convenient, and will [illegible] off goods nicely.

[illegible] young ladies of the Catholic [illegible] will give a lawn social Saturday [illegible] Aug. 22, at the residence of W. [illegible]ntyre on Seventh street. Supper [illegible] cream and cake 10 cents.

We received a short time ago, a paper from Cameron, Mo., containing the Fourth-of-July sermon delivered by Mr. Sawyers to his congregation there. It was a scholarly and patriotic sermon, and would make excellent Independence Day reading for everybody.

Douglas Kelley of Smithfield, was down here on Thursday of last week, the next day after the funeral of sister Nettie. It is indeed a sad bereavement for him, as well as for his mother. He was accompanied by Mr. Albert Smith, who resides at St. Louis, Mo., and not in Michigan, as reported last week. He is employed in a railroad office there. His father lives in Michigan, and some years ago was agent for the Jackson road at Waterloo.

Peter Rinehart of Waterloo, was here Monday. He still nurses a very sore hand, that was hurt over a week ago. He was fixing up a binder, and in some way he cannot now explain, the part he was handling, slipped or turned in such a way as to get his right hand into the main set of cogs. The part of the palm next the small finger was badly torn and cut, in fact water would go through some of the holes. Dr. Nusbaum dressed the wound for him, but he will have to wait some days yet, before it is sound.

We received several nice looking theater bills from Mt. Ayr, Iowa last week. They were a part of them something like our "Opera House Programs," the center space being reserved for the program of the plays they are putting on the boards. It seems they have plenty of home talent there, and heading the list in each play, we find our friend T. H. Leasure. One piece is "Sam'l of Posen," the well known standard drama, that has always been popular. Mr. L. gets big capital letters in the star role of "Sam'l," the "Hebrew Drummer." In the other play, "Uncle Jeff," he is also the star, taking the part of Uncle Jeff. We would like to be present, and hear the Mt. Ayr company, but the fact is, the walking is too dusty.

"Perry" rhymes with "merry" on all occasions, but especially up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Long, since last Saturday. If a nine pound girl baby won't make a family merry, we don't know what will. We congratulate our young friends on their good fortune.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

The entry books of the Auburn fair are now open and the secretary will be in his office in the Nicky & Gandy Hall, over the Boston Clothing store, every day for the transaction of any business connected with the fair. Make your selections now and make your entries early. This will be the first and largest fair of the season and the officers desire everything to move along smoothly and hum as they go. Remember the date Sept. 7 to 11.

Two car loads of slate were sent by the Lake Shore road this week, to make new roofs for the freight and passenger building. But Mr. Miller, who is now buying great amounts of wheat, asked them to put off the work till the grain business was lighter, as it would seriously interfere with him. So they have taken the slate away and will patch up the roof for the present. Agent DeLapp believes we shall have a new passenger house on the south side of Seventh street by New Years.

Hon. Nicholas Ensley came up from Indianapolis Saturday evening on some business matters. He laughs at the wild statements in the dailies last week, that claim he and the other stockholders have lost money in their California land speculation. He says the whole story is a fabrication from beginning to end. A part of his business here this time, is to see about laying a new walk along the north side of his building, the Harter store. It will be of cement, five feet wide. He will also change and improve the steps at the store corner.

F. C. Waterman was in town Saturday. He had a splendid visit at Detroit with the old comrades. Among his former comrades and commanders, he met Ex-Gov. Fairchild of Wisconsin, the colonel of his regiment. But the most dramatic incident of the Detroit visit was the accidental meeting of a man who was asking where the "Indiana boys" were quartered. Mr. Waterman told him, and asked what particular Indiana man he would like to see. He replied he wanted especially to meet Fred. Waterman, a comrade, who picked him up on the field when sorely wounded, and carried him to a place of safety. They shook hands at once. Veterans who have not met since they were young men, now find it difficult to recognize the once familiar faces in that of the grizzled veteran of to-day.

J. Beuret for screens that will stand the usage of more than one season. Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere. 19tf

Mrs. Levi Brandaberry of Smithfield, was here Tuesday visiting the family of Dr. Adams, as well as the friends in the COURIER office.

"Right to the front." That is what Harter says in his notice of new and seasonable goods this week. He always means what he says.

A few dollars invested in screen doors will add greatly to your comfort during the hot months of summer. J. Beuret has them, and don't you forget it. 19tf

A. J. Critchet, representing the Wabash School Furniture Co., captured the orders for school desks, at the meeting here this week. There were several competing houses but the Wabash was the cheapest.

The New Process Vapor stove sold by Beuret is the latest invention in household labor saving stoves. The simplest, easiest and safest. Go and see it for yourselves, at Beuret's, Auburn.

Mr. Hoffman who built the new M. E. church, was here a few days this week. He was accompanied by Mr. Chew who had assisted him here. They were looking over the building to see how everything stood.

PLAIN SEWING: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Mrs. Alice Imler in the north part of town will weave carpets for those needing this work. Striped carpet for 10 cents a yard, hit-and-miss, for 9 cents. Good carpet made with 1¼ pounds of rags to a yard. If not convenient to call on her drop a postal and she will call on you and get the material. 32tf

Miss Laura Shutt, daughter of the late William Shutt, was in town Monday. She is again to be principal of the St. Joe schools, a position in which she has already been very successful. Besides she is administrator of her father's estate, a position that requires pretty good business ability, but she is succeeding well.

The King & Franklin show had a good attendance here on Saturday, both afternoon and evening, and gave excellent satisfaction, as far as we have heard anyone express an opinion. Of course it would not be considered equal to Barnum's high-priced show, but for one of its kind, it is probably one of the best on the road. They went from here to Hicksville, and from there on eastward.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Joliff are visiting at Bowling Green and Clyde, Ohio.

See the notice of C. J. Porter, the optician. He does not now travel over the county, but makes his regular visits here. He would like to see all his old patrons and many new ones.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

To Subscribers.

The last year or so, has been a bad one financially. In fact it has been "hard times," and knowing this, we have said but little to subscribers to the COURIER about paying up, although we could not help seeing that many who had always paid promptly, were getting behind and that others who were already behind, were falling back still more. But we said, "It is hard times. We will try and dig along, and give our friends as good a chance as possible." But now we believe we must ask for a little help. Let everyone who possibly can do so, chip in a year, or two years, or so, on his subscription now due, and make as earnest an effort to give us a little help, as we have made to give them easy terms. If all who can do this without inconvenience, will set about it and make the effort, it will be a great accommodation to us, and but the proper thing for them. Now, boys, what do you say? Shall we all help a little? Let us see all try and then if you can make up a year or two, we shall be satisfied by knowing you have done the best you could.

As Natural as Life.

Just as we went to press last week we received a letter from Harry Rush, at Spokane Falls, that was so characteristic, and withal so jolly, that we cannot resist the temptation to give it to our readers, and without any omissions. Here it is:

J. A. BARNS, Esq.,
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:—

I thought I would spring a little surprise party upon you by sending you $5.00. I expect it will be like finding something that was given up for lost, but we usually get there, if we are a litle slow.

But we are fixed in this country like all the rest of the Union,—in the midst of hard times,—but hope this little mite will bring upon you a smile that will extend from Indiana to Washington.

Respectfully yours,
S. H. RUSH.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

An agent of the show brought $1150 in silver to the Farmers Bank Saturday morning, and at night, when the bank closed, there was not more than $25 of it left. It takes lots of change for Auburn on Saturday.

Mrs. E. Snyder was here Saturday. We were sorry to hear that her son William, had had a burn out of his hardware store at Chrisman, Ill. We believe he had some insurance, and hope the loss will not be heavy.

C. E. Dudley, a former resident of Butler township, was up here Saturday. We were glad to meet him again, and to know he is succeeding. He is still in the school work, having been for several years principal of the schools of Ossian in Wells county.

Joseph Goodwin of Pleasant Lake, was in town Saturday. He is settling the estate of his father the late Samuel Goodwin, being the administrator. Joe is one of the most successful of our young business men, and is steadily working his way to the front.

The fire department was called out in hot haste last Thursday just after dinner. The woolen mill at the north end of town had caught fire, near the smoke stack, but water and buckets were convenient and it was not allowed to get much of a start. The firemen were there in good time, however. The race up North Main was a pretty sight and very inspiring.

Miss Florence Jackman of Smithfield, was here last week, visiting the family of R. C. Baxter, and other relatives. She spent last year at DePauw University taking special studies, and expects to be in Chicago for a year, in the training school, preparatory to entering on her chosen work as a missionary. Miss Jackman is a talented young lady, and will be an earnest, and we hope a successful worker, wherever her lot may be.

Kendallville Standard: P. S. O'Rourke of Ft. Wayne, superintendent of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, is the father of a new Catholic society for the Catholics, called the Sons of Columbus The order is a new one and is spreading rapidly, and branches will soon be established. Mr. O'Rourke is very proud of this society and is pushing it warmly. Unlike the Knights of St. John, it is not under the authority of the church, although its members are entirely from church.

Trustee Robert Sherlock of Fairfield, called at our office Saturday in company with his oldest brother, Capt. S. H. Sherlock of Fort Smith, Ark. The latter was a captain in the 94th Ohio and for some time was inspector of the 1st Brigade, 1st Division, 14th Army corps, and saw a great deal of service. He was visiting his brother on his return from from the great G. A. R. meeting at Detroit. He is now settled in business at Ft. Smith, and we might add that he is well acquainted with our friend Stephen Masters who lives not far away.

The war with the Seminole Indians, which occurred more than half a century ago, and which is now almost forgotten, was marked by many tragical incidents well worthy of historical record. Among these a prominent example was the murder of Dr. Perine and the almost miraculous escape of his family, the memory of which has been preserved only by tradition. Harriet Pinckney Huse has lately committed this "Untold Story of the Florida War" to writing, and it will be published for the first time in Harper's Magazine for September.

Job Edwards, who can be seen on our streets almost daily, is one of the oldest men in our town. He will be 84 if he lives till the 23d of next month. Though considerably crippled up, he is able to get about, though slowly. He is supposed to be one of the heirs of the Edward's estate that lays claim to about 60 acres in New York City. This land has been held on one of their long time leases, probably 99 years, which we are told has just run out. If it should prove that he is one of the heirs it would be a nice thing for the old gentleman in his declining years.

J. C. Sommers, now of Pueblo, Colorado, reached here last week, coming to attend the funeral of his sister, Mrs. Chidsey. He is in business out there in artificial stone, flagging, building stone, etc and evidently prospering. He found a great change in Auburn, and was no doubt pleased to see the great addition he once laid out on the east of our city, started up again, and as "Gas Addition," nearly filled with comfortable dwellings He found also, many warm friends, who kept him on the go and the talk as long as he remained. He made a friendly call on the COURIER and its editor, and had a talk over old times. Monday night he again turned his face to the far west, with many wishes from our people for his safe journey. His wife will make a visit here soon.

The Young America cigar is still on top as an article of trade manufactured in Auburn. They are smoked by the best people.

A. Lewis will soon put up a dwelling on the lot he got of Geo. Quince. It is just southeast of James McClellan's in Gas Addition.

While walking around in the city with nothing particular to do, just drop in some place and get a K. & B. cigar. They are worth the money every time.

Miss Laura Keeran went over to Butler Saturday evening for a few days visit. She taught in the Butler public schools several years and has many friends there.

The ladies of the Lutheran church are earnestly requested to meet in lecture room Saturday afternoon at two o'clock promptly It is important all should be present.

John Leasure was up with the lark last Thursday morning, and got the big plate glass front into its place in the new building by seven o'clock. John is a hustler.

Dr. James Headly the distinguished lecturer and Samuel Phelps Leland the renowned traveler and lecturer will be the chief attractions in the institute lecture course. 32tf

J. A. Gushwa, one of the jurors now sitting, put in one of the recesses very profitably by paying the printer ahead. And we didn't "talk about the case before the jury," either.

Thomas Brothers have the finest showcase in town in their new bakery. It is a circular revolving case, and quite expensive, but is very convenient, and will show off goods nicely.

The young ladies of the Catholic church will give a lawn social Saturday evening Aug. 22, at the residence of W. H. McIntyre on Seventh street. Supper 15. Ice cream and cake 10 cents.

We are continually receiving new goods of all kinds, and our trade is steadily increasing because, selling for cash, we can undersell all other dealers in our line of business, at the Fair, Garrett, Ind,

Cosper Altenberg and family have been here for a few days visiting the old friends and neighbors. They reside at Little Rock, Ark., where Mr. A. has been in business several years.

W. H. Kiblinger is excavating for a cellar under his residence. His main purpose is to get room to place a heater. He will put the cellar about seven feet deep and cement the bottom and sides, so that water can never come in.

Miss Nellie Barns returned Saturday from Chicago, after a four weeks' visit with the relatives there. They made the time pass very pleasantly for her, and she comes home with the impression that their hospitality is like their city, very large and active.

Miss Jones of Nebraska, has been here visiting her relatives of the Ditmar family. She returns home this week, and Laura Ober will accompany her. Miss Ober will also go to Cameron, Mo., to visit friends at that point, including Rev. H. A. Sawyers.

We received a short time ago, a paper from Cameron, Mo., containing the Fourth-of-July sermon delivered by Mr. Sawyers to his congregation there. It was a scholarly and patriotic sermon, and would make excellent Independence Day reading for everybody.

Douglas Kelley of Smithfield, was down here on Thursday of last week, the next day after the funeral of sister Nettie. It is indeed a sad bereavement for him, as well as for his mother. He was accompanied by Mr. Albert Smith, who resides at St. Louis, Mo., and not in Michigan, as reported last week. He is employed in a railroad office there. His father lives in Michigan, and some years ago was agent for the Jackson road at Waterloo.

Peter Rinehart of Waterloo, was here Monday. He still nurses a very sore hand, that was hurt over a week ago. He was fixing up a binder, and in some way he cannot now explain, the part be was handling, slipped or turned in such a way as to get his right hand into the main set of cogs. The part of the palm next the small finger was badly torn and cut, in fact water would go through some of the holes. Dr. Nusbaum dressed the wound for him, but he will have to wait some days yet, before it is sound.

We received several nice looking theater bills from Mt. Ayr, Iowa last week. They were a part of them something like our "Opera House Programs," the center space being reserved for the program of the plays they are putting on the boards. It seems they have plenty of home talent there, and heading the list in each play, we find our friend T. H. Leasure. One piece is "Sam'l of Posen," the well known standard drama, that has always been popular. Mr. L. gets big capital letters in the star role of "Sam'l," the "Hebrew Drummer." In the other play, "Uncle Jeff," he is also the star, taking the part of Uncle Jeff We would like to be present, and hear the Mt. Ayr company, but the fact is, the walking is too dusty.

PUBLIC SALE: There will be a public sale at Mrs. Headley's residence on North Main street on Thursday, Sept. 3 beginning at 1 p. m. She will sell a vast amount of household goods that day, and it will pay to be there.

WANTED:—By a young man of good habits, a furnished room, near the business part of town. A room easy of access without disturbance to family. Anyone having a room of this kind, will please call on or address this office.

J. W. Doty has been agent for that excellent agricultural paper, the Orange—Judd Farmer, for several years. He will be at the Auburn fair as agent, and take subscriptions at reduced rates. Don't forget this, for it is an extra chance to get a good paper cheap. 34-36

"Perry" rhymes with "merry" on all occasions, but especially up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Long, since last Saturday. If a nine pound girl baby won't make a family merry, we don't know what will. We congratulate our young friends on their good fortune.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

The entry books of the Auburn fair are now open and the secretary will be in his office in the Nicky & Gandy Hall, over the Boston Clothing store, every day for the transaction of any business connected with the fair. Make your selections now and make your entries early. This will be the first and largest fair of the season and the officers desire everything to move along smoothly and humming as they go. Remember the date Sept. 7 to 11.

Two car loads of slate were sent by the Lake Shore road this week, to make new roofs for the freight and passenger building. But Mr. Miller, who is now buying great amounts of wheat, asked them to put off the work till the grain business was lighter, as it would seriously interfere with him. So they have taken the slate away and will patch up the roof for the present. Agent DeLapp believes we shall have a new passenger house on the south side of Seventh street by New Years.

Hon. Nicholas Ensley came up from Indianapolis Saturday evening on some business matters. He laughs at the wild statements in the dailies last week, that claim he and the other stockholders have lost money in their California land speculation. He says the whole story is a fabrication from beginning to end. A part of his business here this time, is to see about laying a new walk along the north side of his building, the Harter store. It will be of cement, five feet wide. He will also change and improve the steps at the store corner.

F. C. Waterman was in town Saturday. He had a splendid visit at Detroit with the old comrades. Among his former comrades and commanders, he met Ex- Gov. Fairchild of Wisconsin, the colonel of his regiment. But the most dramatic incident of the Detroit visit was the accidental meeting of a man who was asking where the "Indiana boys" were quartered. Mr. Waterman told him, and asked what particular Indiana man he would like to see. He replied he wanted especially to meet Fred. Waterman, a comrade, who picked him up on the field when sorely wounded, and carried him to a place of safety. They shook hands at once. Veterans who have not met since they were young men, now find it difficult to recognize the once familiar faces in that of the grizzled veteran of to-day.

Dr. T. J. Bassett, Dr. George Brown ex-president of the State Normal, and Sadie Tarney of the chair of methods and psychology in the state normal, will be the day instructors at the county institute. 32tf

Mr. Hoffman who built the new M. E. church, was here a few days this week. He was accompanied by Mr. Chew who had assisted him here. They were looking over the building to see how everything stood.

PLAIN SEWING: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Mrs. Alice Imler in the north part of town will weave carpets for those needing this work. Striped carpet for 10 cents a yard, hit-and-miss, for 9 cents. Good carpet made with 1¼ pounds of rags to a yard. If not convenient to call on her drop a postal and she will call on you and get the material. 32tf

Miss Laura Shutt, daughter of the late William Shutt, was in town Monday. She is again to be principal of the St. Joe schools, a position in which she has already been very successful. Besides she is administrator of her father's estate, a position that requires pretty good business ability, but she is succeeding well.

The King & Franklin show had a good attendance here on Saturday, both afternoon and evening, and gave excellent satisfaction, as far as we have heard anyone express an opinion. Of course it would not be considered equal to Barnum's high-priced show, but for one of its kind, it is probably one of the best on the road. They went from here to Hicksville, and from there on eastward.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Joliff are visiting at Bowling Green and Clyde, Ohio.

See the notice of C. J. Porter, the optician. He does not now travel over the county, but makes his regular visits here. He would like to see all his old patrons and many new ones.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

To Subscribers.

The last year or so, has been a bad one financially. In fact it has been "hard times," and knowing this, we have said but little to subscribers to the COURIER about paying up, although we could not help seeing that many who had always paid promptly, were getting behind and that others who were already behind, were falling back still more. But we said, "It is hard times. We will try and dig along, and give our friends as good a chance as possible." But now we believe we must ask for a little help. Let everyone who possibly can do so, chip in a year, or two years, or so, on his subscription now due, and make as earnest an effort to give us a little help, as we have made to give them easy terms. If all who can do this without inconvenience, will set about it and make the effort, it will be a great accommodation to us, and but the proper thing for them. Now, boys, what do you say? Shall we all help a little? Let us see all try and then if you can make up a year or two, we shall be satisfied by knowing you have done the best you could.

As Natural as Life.

Just as we went to press last week we received a letter from Harry Rush, at Spokane Falls, that was so characteristic, and withal so jolly, that we cannot resist the temptation to give it to our readers, and without any omissions. Here it is:

J. A. BARNS, Esq.,
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:—

I thought I would spring a little surprise party upon you by sending you $5.00. I expect it will be like finding something that was given up for lost, but we usually get there, if we are a litle slow.

But we are fixed in this country like all the rest of the Union,—in the midst of hard times,—but hope this little mite will bring upon you a smile that will extend from Indiana to Washington.

Respectfully yours,
S. H. RUSH.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A CHOICE SELECTION OF INTERESTING ITEMS.

Comments and Criticisms Based Upon the Happenings of the Day—Historical and News Notes.

A NEW YORK composer yawned until he dislocated his jaw. He was probably employed in setting up the Herald editorials.

A FAIR damsel to whom was shown the chair in which the Sing Sing murderers died recently pronounced it "just too electroente for anything."

ENGINEERING presents the diagram and description of a new five-day trans-Atlantic steamer. Engineering skill is not waiting for time and tide nowadays.

A SAN FRANCISCO woman sold a piece of her epidermis, 9x5 inches, to surgeons for a skin-grafting experiment for $100. The lady has opened up another sphere of feminine possibilities, but it is hardly probable that her example will find many followers.

A MONKEY in New York got drunk on a bottle of whisky and went on a regular tear. His success in imitating the male specimen of the human species would seem to add considerable force to the Darwinian theory that the monkey was the earliest ancestor of man.

A MAN was killed on the steps of an elevated railway station in New York by having an umbrella jabbed into his eye by the man in front of him. The man who carries an umbrella or a cane under his arm on a crowded street deserves banishment to a country where it never rains.

A PRACTICAL joker at Wheeling, W. Va., recently did unusually effective work by snapping an "unloaded shotgun," killing a woman and seriously injuring two men. Of course the man was overwhelmed with remorse, but there should be a more practical punishment for this class of jokers.

A MONTH or two ago 3,500 people in Omaha were victimized by paying 50 cents each to witness the flight of an air-ship. The ship did not materialize or fly, but the projecters of the scheme did. Three thousand people were gulled in the same style at Fort Wayne, Ind. The air-ship swindler appears to be thoroughly familiar with the profitable points in the green circuit.

AHA! a lot of Peru (Ind.) people have been poisoned nigh unto death by eating imported dried beef. Maybe now the effete monarchs of the old world will in shame withdraw their strictures on the great American hog in his dressed condition. If they don't imported dried beef should be barred, absolutely and utterly. The unwholesome bovine is just as dangerous to America as the unwholesome swine is to Europe.

HUMANE societies have lost an earnest worker for their cause in the death of Edwin Lee Brown. For many years he has been the Henry Bergh of Chicago, and it is largely due to his efforts to prevent cruelty to animals that a horse too feeble to work or one being inhumanely treated by a cruel driver is now seldom seen on the streets of that city. Both were once only too common spectacles.

A FRENCH lady leaves by will $100,000 as a prize for the person who shall, within ten years, be able to communicate with the people in any other planet. Astronomers think that certain lights seen flashing in Mars are attempts to signal us. They may have telescopes there which reveal us to them as clearly as we see our own mountain ranges. Very few things are really impossible, and we may be telepnoning to Mars long ere the ten years prescribed expires.

CALLING things by names too big for them is a provincialism that ought to be deprecated. Every little amusement hall is dubbed an opera house; every barber shop, though it have but a single chair, is at least a parlor. A two months' course of study, not above high school grade, in various simple divisions of primary culture, is dubbed up North "a summer university." This is going a little too far. More confidence might be felt in its value were its designation more honest and more modest.

FOR the first time since the war, West Point this year turned out too few graduates to fill the vacant second lieutenancies in the regular army. Good! The rank and file want promotions, and the martinets of West Point have been too often mere military automatons. Even in the war they had to be unstarched ere they became first-class soldiers, while the great ones like Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Lee, Johnston and Jackson, were men too great to worship their West Point sheepskins. In a country whose army in all great emergencies must be citizen volunteers, West Point cadets should have no monopoly of military honors.

EX-JUDGE PRENDERGAST, of Chicago, was fined for contempt of court, and conduct therein unbecoming a gentleman. When a judge he fined others for the same offenses, but seems to have relapsed when he resumed practice. Blackguardism in court deserves no mercy. Too many lawyers who claim to be gentlemen, and elsewhere deport themselves as such, in court browbeat witnesses, insult women and each other, and talk in such style as anywhere else would secure them a good thumping. Judges can maintain their own dignity and benefit the public best by coming down on such doings like judicial pile-drivers.

CALIFORNIA seems to have been trying a rather costly experiment, a little on the principal of that of the man who undertook to pay 5 cents for the first nail in the horseshoe and double the amount for each succeeding one. California had coyotes and did not enjoy their depredations, so in an impulsive moment it offered $5 a scalp to the slayer of these animals. But it seems to have underestimated both the number of coyotes and the enterprise of its citizens, for the scalps are coming in at such a rate that the dilemma seems to be whether the State shall repudiate or go into bankruptcy.

ENGLISH slang is just as slangy as American slang, but it does not always attach the same meaning to the same words. For instance, Edmund Yates, referring to the German Emperor's English visit writes: "The Emporer had intended to stay in London until Tuesday, but the pace during his visit to Holland and England has been too rapid, and His Majesty was so dead beat that he was glad to get away to the solitude and repose of his yacht on Monday night." In England to say that a man is "dead beat" means that he is thoroughly tired out. In this country to say that a man is "a dead beat" means that he has thoroughly tired out people from whom he has secured credit.

AFTER quoting the statement of the Philadelphia Ledger that the chief reason why good men do not more generally go into politics is because they are unwilling to expose themselve to the abuse of the newspapers, the Providence Journal says: "The only public men who complain that they are unfairly and abusively treated by the newspapers are those about whom the newspapers persists in telling uncomfortable truths. They are men whose motives, methods, and records can not bear the light of public scrutiny and who must necessarily be held up to scorn and condemnation wherever they are impartially and honestly commented upon. The only men, therefore, who need hesitate to go into politics out of fear of newspaper criticism are those who propose to indulge in practices and work for ends which are in themselves incapable of approval and insusceptible of praise."

THE historic old Valley Forge property on the line of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad is in danger of being divided up and sold, its present owner, Mrs. Anda, L. Carter, having instructed her attorney to dispose of 190 acres of it. The portion of the property about to go into the market contains the remnants of the ramparts of Fort Washington, the cold spring, the site of the forge, and of the headquarters of Washington, Lafayette, and Knox. It will be more than an occasion for regret if this historic spot is allowed to be sold and it is thereby lost to the country. It will be a national shame. No spot is more indeliby connected with the Revolution and the days that tried men's souls than Valley Forge. It was there that the tide of misfortune went down to the lowest mark, and it was there also that the great leader of the army appeared in his noblest and highest manifestations of faith and courage. Let the patriotic orders of the country send in their protests at once and ask to have the sale withheld until they can take measures to save this relic of the Revolution either through purchasers who will agree to keep it intact, or through some action of the people at large or of the Government which will secure control of it as a national park.

By the Name of "X."

In France, where great care is taken that men shall have no other name than that to which they are lawfully entitled, and where every citizen's name, profession, social condition and history are carefully recorded and his goings and comings officially kept trace of, some very curious incidents take place.

Not long ago a young man was arrested at Constantine, in Algeria, on a charge of stealing money belonging to an establishment in which he was employed. When it was sought to make a record of his name, it was found that he had no lawful name at all.

He had been "inscribed" at Bordeaux at the date of his birth, but his father and mother were not known, and the name of Laffon, under which he had been inscribed without authority, he had since been forbidden by a court of justice to bear, because it was not rightfully his.

After having been forbidden the name of Laffon, he took that of Bacon, and was in turn officially refused permission to bear that.

Nevertheless, he managed to exist, in some way, without any name at all; but when, having been accused of taking some money that had disappeared, the law was obliged to take cognizance of him in some way, he was entered upon the lists of the court as "one X."

If he is convicted of the offense with which he is charged, he will go to prison as X; and if he should be acquitted, he will have gained, if not a "good name," at least one letter of the alphabet toward some kind of name.

Boycotting the Young Ladies.

A peculiar boycott in the town of Tennille, Ga., which would be laughable were it not that the young men are in dead earnest. An enthusiastic and well-attended meeting was held by some of Tennille's best young men for the purpose of declaring a boycott against the young ladies. The position of the members was outlined in resolutions to this effect: "That we organize a boycott; that this boycott apply to the young ladies in the town of Tennille that persist in going with the small boys; that this boycott shall not apply to any one young lady in particular, but to those who persist in going with small boys; that the boycott shall not apply to ny lady under 15 years of age; that information having reached our ears that certain young ladies in the town of Tennille are in the habit of breaking engagements, we condemn this habit in the strongest terms possible and boycott the young ladies in the future who shall be guilty of this; that we boycott any young lady over 15 years of age who allows boys under 16 years of age to call on or accompany her to places of worship or amusement; that we boycott any young ladies who make two engagements for the same night; that we solemnly pledge ourselves to carry this out." After these resolutions were adopted the boycotters adjourned subject to call.

IS THERE no hope, doctor?" asked the dying Congressman. "No." "Then if I must die tell the boys to place the limit at $5 and drink nothing but champagne on the funeral train."

WHY SUPERIOR SHIPS?

MORE INCONSISTENCIES OF PROTECTIONISTS.

Wealth Then and Now—Contract Labor—War to Be Waged Against the Importation of Tin-Plate Workers—Another Trust Announced—Minor Points on Tariff Reform.

It must make the protectionists sad to know that the steamship Majestic has crossed the ocean between England and the United States in five days eighteen hours and eight minutes. Of course no protectionist can see with satisfaction any improvement that brings us into close relations with Europe. Why, in Europe they sell goods cheap, and wicked Americans have been known to go over and wear back the cheap clothes made by the pauper laborers of Europe, thus defrauding American manufacturers of the natural right to fleece every creature that wears clothes.

It was a Pennsylvania political economist that discovered the peculiar evils of sailing the ocean blue. Trade with foreign countries should be discouraged, he thinks, because, among other things, you can do nothing worse to a man than make of him a salt-water sailor. Fast ships, light-houses and all the conveniences and safeguards of ocean travel should be neglected if our protectionist friends are right Above all things, why dredge rivers and harbors, especially harbors? If the protectionists were consistent they would produce a bar across every harbor now carrying water deep enough to admit any ship bigger than those engaged in our coasting trade. "Oh," say the protectionists, "we are willing to send our goods to foreign countries, but we are not willing to receive theirs."

"What," says the astonished tariff reformer; "you wish to give away the goods to Europeans?"

"Not at all," says the protectionist; "We'll take gold in payment."

"But gold must be carried in ships?" says the reformer.

"To be sure; and as the ships must come back they can bring the gold."

"What, enough for ballast? Why, they could not find so much in all Europe, and besides, if they could, what would we do with it? We as a nation could not afford to buy diamonds, for example, with all our products; that would be exchanging necessities for luxuries, and gold is a luxury just as diamonds are."

"But we can coin the gold into money," says the protectionist, "and besides Europe would make payment by means of bills of exchange."

"You couldn't have bills of exchange without indebtedness both ways, and if we buy nothing of Europe we shall owe nothing to Europeans. There's nothing left for you but to take metal, and after you have coined it into dollars its only effect would be to raise the price of home commodities in the home market. It would not flow back to Europe in accordance with the laws of trade, for your prohibitive tariff would have made trade impossible."

WEALTH THEN AND NOW.

What Would Washington Have Thought of Mr. Carnegie's Millions?

Ex-Senator Ingalls, who seems to have learned a good many things since his fall, declared upon a recent occasion, when speaking at a prohibition meeting near New York: "Ninety years ago in this country the richest man was George Washington, our first President. The estimated amount of his wealth aggregated about $800,000. It is safe to say to-day that scores of men have annual incomes that largely exceed that of the richest man in the country ninety years ago. One man at whose touch everything seems to turn to gold has a monthly revenue larger than General Washington's total wealth. At that time, ninety years ago, there was not a millionaire, a tramp, or a pauper in the country. Most of this great transformation occurred within the last forty years. To the great mass of the people life is but a hopeless toil that prevents them from seeing wife and children by daylight and leaves them an old age of hopeless mendicancy."

Mr. Ingalls probably overestimated the first President's real wealth, but whether he did or not, the figures that accompany this estimate are interesting. Would Washington ever have signed that first tariff bill had he known that the tariff, under the name of protection to American labor, would be used in the next century to make millionaires by the score? What would Washington have thought of Andrew Carnegie rolling in wealth acquired by means of the enormous tariff on steel rails and various forms of iron and at the same time waging an annual war over wages with the powerful union whose labor produces these very manufactures?

What the Farmers of Minnesota Think of the Tinned-Plate Duty.

The case against the duty on tin plate is admirably summed up by the Minnesota journal Farm, Stock, and Home. No one ever denied, it says, that we could import block tin and skilled labor and make tin plates in this country. The only question was whether it paid to do so. That it did not pay was proved by the fact that we did not go into the business. It was cheaper to import tin plate than to make it. Hence, if we are to make it now, it must be sold at a higher price than formerly. But it asks:

"Is that a matter for rejoicing? No, unless some compensation to the buyers and consumers of tinware accompanies the advance. No such accompanying compensation is possible. Making tin in this country cannot raise the price of farm products, because at the utmost it will not take the products of over three average Western agricultural counties to feed all the help that will be employed in the tin-plate industry. It will cause no increase in the price of labor, for it is confessed that the labor must be imported; but if it is not, the quantity employed will be too small to affect the labor market. It follows, then, that all the rejoicing about tin is because tin dinner pails, fruit cans, etc., are to be higher priced."

The article goes on to declare that if the Welsh manufacturers can make tin more cheaply than it can be made in this country, and "will pay our farmers as much for wheat and meat as the latter's own tin-making countrymen will pay, then it is an outrage on our farmers to make them buy the home-made tin." The sentiment that is attached to the idea of the home market may be glorious, but in the opinion of this journal, "as business or common sense it may be idiotic." It might be glorious to grow oranges in Minnesota at a cost of 50 cents apiece, but it is better on the whole to get them for 3 cents from Florida or Cuba. The sentiment might be tolerable if it worked both ways—if it compelled payment to the farmer of higher prices for all he sells when it exacted higher prices for all he buys; "but the old thing doesn't work that way, has not worked that way, never will work that way."—New York Evening Post.

They Must Have a Subsidy.

The McKinley newspapers continue to tell their readers that bar tin could not now be produced at the California mine if there had not been inserted in the McKinley act a paragraph imposing a duty on imported bar tin two years hence. To them every part of that act is sacred, and no one but "an enemy of his country" can question the wisdom of a sentence or a word in it. The price of bar tin in this market is about 20¾ cents a pound. The San Jacinto Estate, limited, professes to be able to produce bar tin at a cost of less than 6 cents a pound. Does that show that a duty "is needed?" Here is a part of it:

"The reports further show that by reason of their high percentage of yield, accessibility for economic working, their absolute freedom from wolfram, mundic, and other impurities found in most tin ores, and their exemption from all dues, metallic tin can be produced from Temescal ores at a cost not exceeding £25 per ton (less than 5¼ cents a pound). Based on a daily output of 200 tons of ore, yielding 10 per cent. of metallic tin, costing £25 per ton and sold at £95 per ton, the Cajalco mine alone—which is the lode from which the company is now taking ore—would produce a yearly profit of £420,000, or nearly double the total profit from all the mines of Cornwall. It should be borne in mind that the above profit is based on the estimated output from the Cajalco mine alone, without taking into consideration the profits to be derived from the numerous other tin lodes of the estate."

This is taken from the official statement of the company, which was published in the London Times of July 10, 1890, and in other London journals of the same date. The price of tin in this market at present is equivalent to about £95 per ton.

And now, because the sacred McKinley act provides for a duty of 4 cents a pound two years hence, the organs of McKinleyism cry out that such a duty is needed for the protection of these Englishmen who assert that they can produce, at a cost of 5¼ cents, tin which is sold in this market at 20¾ cents. There must be a duty, we are told, in order that this English company may be able to exact more than 20¾ cents for its California tin.—New York Times.

CONTRACT LABOR.

The New Fight of the Amalgamated Association of Steel and Iron Workers.

Labor unions are peculiarly unpopular among protected manufacturers. Several of the most important protected industries have for years been waging an annual war with a view to resisting the demands of labor unions. One of the most powerful unions is the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers. These men treat with their employers as one hostile power treats with another. There are conferences lasting for days, many discussions, demands of all sorts, finally compromise, sometimes preceded by shotguns. It must be remembered meanwhile that protection is always demanded in order that the American workingman may have high wages. There seems an inconsistency here, but a good many steel and iron workers go on supporting the policy of a high-protective tariff.

Just now, however, the Amalgamated Association has other fish to fry. The association is making ready to wage war against the importation of foreign tin-plate workers. Their first move will be an attempt to checkmate ex-Congressman Niedringhaus, who is interested in mills in St. Louis. They say that, although he was one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the McKinley bill, he has nevertheless gone back on the spirit of protection and secured a ruling from Superintendent Owens, of the Treasury Department, to the effect that the alien contract law does not prohibit engaging "under contract or agreement skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States, in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States; provided, that skilled labor for that purpose cannot be otherwise obtained."

The association takes the ground that there are sufficient skilled workmen in tin plate manufacturing already in this country to meet all demands. In proof of this they have been gathering information as to their number and experience. In one iron mill in Pittsburg there were found enough foreign-born and trained Welsh tin rollers to man three tin plate mills. They say that it is surprising what a large number of practical tin plate men are to be found in the iron mills in this country, and that by their proper disposition others could be rapidly trained and broken in.

Here, then, is a new aspect of the protection question. Why import labor if we have it at home? The contract labor law was passed in order to please workingmen, who said protection was right, but it should be given directly to labor as well as indirectly through capital. But the moment there is a loophole of escape protected manufacturers evade the intent of the law.

Judge Lawrence and Thomas Dolan.

We hope that while Judge Lawrence is filling the Republican papers of Ohio with dissertations on wool, he will not overlook the following remarks of Mr. Thomas Dolan in a letter written on the 27th ult.:

"It is an interesting fact, deserving much emphasis of statement, that the prices of wool are lower now than they were one year ago. This decline was distinctly promised by protectionists during the discussion which accompanied the framing of the McKinley tariff."

There are two large and powerful high-tariff associations in this country, and Mr Dolan is the president of one of them. Judge Lawrence asserts that he wrote the wool schedule of the McKinley tariff, and he tells the wool-growers of Ohio that the price of their wool would now be higher if the Eastern manufacturers had not "conspired" to buy foreign wool in order that the price of Ohio and Michigan wool might decline and that the new tariff might thus suffer in the estimation of Ohio and Michigan farmers. Another reason which he gives is that the new tariff is not strictly enforced, because there are traitors in the custom houses. Mr. Dolan's club asserts that the new wool schedules were made by a committee of its members, thus permitting the inference that Judge Lawrence did not do the work. The design of the Pennsylvania protectionists appears to have been to reduce the price of Ohio wool by increasing the duties, and everybody knows that Judge Lawrence's purpose was to increase the price of the same wool by increasing the duties. Judge Lawrence should speedily assure his friends in Ohio that he is not one of "the protectionists" who "distinctly promised the decline."

Another Trust Announced.

The McKinley tariff raised the duty on glucose 50 per cent, and Chicago advices say that the glucose trust has been reorganized after extensive negotiations covering a period of three months. A pool has, it is said, been formed with a capitalization of $15,000,000. The greatest secrecy has been observed by the new trust in the making of negotiations, and the full details are not yet obtainable.

This is the fourth trust formed within three weeks, the others being the Wire Rod Combine, the Leather Board Syndicate, and the Flint Glass Trust.

Does this show that the trusts are afraid of Sherman's anti-trust law?

A Leather-Board Syndicate.

An English syndicate has purchased practically all the leather-board factories in the Eastern States. The purchase includes the plant of the Harwood Manufacturing Company at Leominster, Mass., with its opera-chair factory, also the Moncan Manufacturing Company of Kennebec, the Leather Board Company of Boston, and the plant of Clegg & Fisher of Lawrence. The local managers are to remain in charge.—New York Times.

Whine or Whistle, Which?

A small boy was chasing a somewhat bigger one the other day, when the bigger of the two stumbled and fell. The other tumbled over him and was hurt as much as the bigger one. But the bigger boy was the biggest baby and began to whine and cry. The smaller one got up, brushed off the dirt, rubbed his barked knee and began to whistle.

The other one looked at him a moment and then blubbered:

"Jimmy, how can you whistle when it hurts so?"

"It doesn't hurt so if you whistle," said philosophical Jimmy. "It's when you whine that it hurts so."

Whistle and whine begin alike, but they end differently.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 20, 1891.

Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.

After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause.

Hale and Hearty.

These two adjectives by no means imply the possession of great muscular strength. There are many men and women of slight build and inferior stature to whom the terms "hale and hearty" perfectly apply. Their complexions are clear, eyes bright and vivacious, pulses tranquil, step elastic, movements steady, sleep undisturbed, appetites sound. These indicia of haleness and heartiness Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will assuredly bestow upon the feeble, the nervous and dyspeptic. No tonic of the century compares with it in popularity, no other rivals it in efficacy. As permanent invigoration means also the previous regulation of disorder in the system, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters must also be regarded as chief among regulators. It conquers and prevents malaria and rheumatism, overcomes inactivity of the liver, bowels and kidneys, and promotes the acquisition of flesh as well as vigor.

Making Fishhooks.

There is a little machine which turns out fishhooks in six strokes. Stroke No. 1 bites off a morsel of steel wire; No. 2 makes the loop where you fasten your line; No. 3 hacks the other end; No. 4 flattens and bends back the barb; No. 5 makes the point; No. 6 bends the wire and your fishhook drops into a little bucket, ready to be finished. Then it is either japanned—these are the common, black fishhooks—or it is tempered to the delicate blue you sometimes see in cutlery. For this finish it is heated red-hot and then cooled in oil.

The Commercial Instinct Developed.

A tourist who visited Alaska recently declared that his reception at the coast towns of that territory brought to mind recollections of previous sojourns at more civilized watering places. He mentions among others the Thlinket Indians of Wrangell, who spend much time watching for the steamer. When they see its smoke in the distance they at once convert their houses into shops, where they offer for sale all sorts of curiosities manufactured for the purpose of coaxing coin from the pockets of travelers.

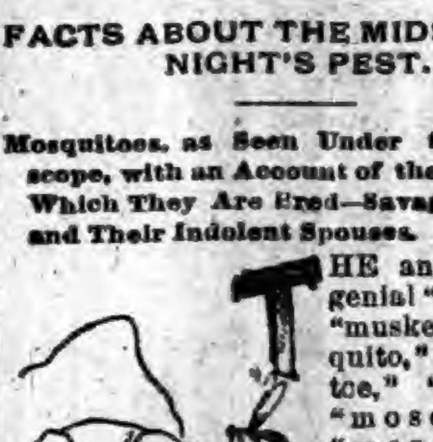
ABOUT THE MOSQUITO.

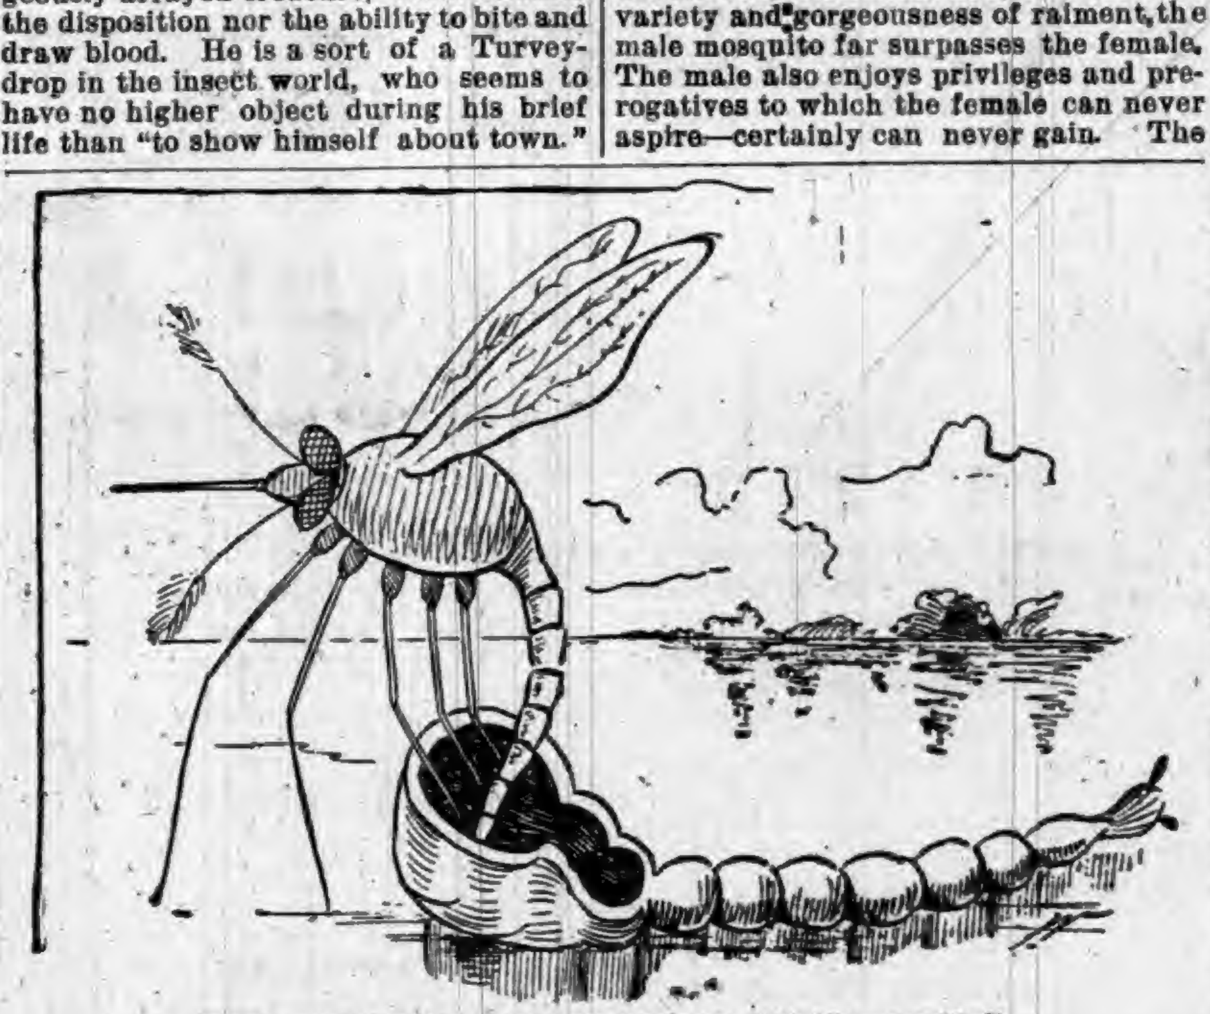
FACTS ABOUT THE MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S PEST.

Mosquitoes, as Seen Under the Microscope, with an Account of the Manner in Which They Are Bred—Savage Females and Their Indolent Spouses.



THE anything but genial "mosquito," "musketo," "musquito," "musquetoe," "moschito," "moschetto," "mosquetto," "muschetto," "mushetto," or "musquetto" is abroad. For such a very little pest the "mosquito" has more names and in more languages than any other living thing. Scientists variously call her the culex pipiens, allex Americanus, the cousin, the moucheron and the "humming gnat." The Century dictionary describes the insect of many aliases as "one of many different kinds of gnats or midges, the female of which bites animals and draws blood." Persons who are given to attribute to the female sex all the gentlenesss and amiability there is in the world will bear this in mind.

Mr. Mosquito is an easy-going, gorgeously arrayed creature, with neither the disposition nor the ability to bite and draw blood. He is a sort of a Turveydrop in the insect world, who seems to have no higher object during his brief life than "to show himself about town."



MOSQUITO EMERGING FROM PUPA SHELL—(Highly magnified).

His life, to be sure, is a short one, but then it is full of indolence and luxury. He is expected to pay certain delicate attentions to his infinitesimal spouse, which she rewards when tired of him by giving him a short, sharp, and fatal prod of the remarkable lance which she carries concealed in her probosis. He is not provided with such a weapon, and is as much at her mercy as a boxer at that of a skilled swordsman. He is of gentle and perhaps amiable character. He lives on a strictly vegetable diet, which may account for the absence of the bloodthirsty and ferocious spirit of his spouse. She can at a pinch live the life of a vegetarian, but what she wants is gore, piping hot gore, human if she can get it; but never overlooking any chance. The toughest hide that ever covered a horse or steer does not intervene between the lady mosquito and her vampirish thirst. It is even doubted that Col. Mosquito is given to vocal efforts. If he ever does join his consort in a nerve-destroying duet, he sings very low, and his performance is entirely overlooked, when the restless human appreciates the ease with which my lady takes high C and holds it until driven out of the room by the exasperated wielder of a wet towel.

Less is known about the origin of the mosquito's name than of his habits, and Americans have no monopoly of information upon this latter phase of the subject. All climates claim the mosquito as pest in chief. On the upper waters of the Missouri mosquitoes, after a rainy season, are the greatest impediment to navigation met with. They swarm by millions. Cattle are driven in the river, and they stand with their muzzles alone held above the water, which are black with the pests. Pilots on the boats are forced to burn smudge fires. They are of every conceivable degree of minuteness, and no veil has fine enough texture to exclude them. Artcic explorers all write of sufferings at the hands, or rather stings, of mosquitoes.

In England mosquitoes are called gnats, and on the continent of Europe cousins, moucherons, and other names. The gnat belongs to the genus culex. It is found in most of the temperate and tropical portions of the globe where man has penetrated. About thirty species are known in the United States.

In the human family the female is the more ornamental as well as the more amiable animal. In the insect world, particularly among mosquitoes, the reverse is the case. There are mosquitoes which confine their activities to the daylight hours, and which will lavish their caresses principally on the tender foliage of trees and aromatic plants. These principally inhabit woods and marshes. The other variety make themselves heard and felt during the night chiefly. The greater portion of their active existence is passed in or near human habitations. These are the varieties with which man is most intimately acquainted.

THE FEMALE MOSQUITO.

But in all the species of the mosquito family the male apparently is the superior being. In grace and elegance of architectural construction, as well as in variety and gorgeousness of raiment, the male mosquito far surpasses the female. The male also enjoys privileges and prerogatives to which the female can never aspire—certainly can never gain. The function which she performs in propagation of the species compels her to consume more food than he does, and all this food she is obliged to get herself. In every essential particular she has to make her own and the family's living without the slightest aid from him. Such food as he requires for himself, which is neither large in quantity nor varied in quality, he picks up. Beyond that he does little except to display his charms and enjoy life. It is the female of the mosquito family with which the human species comes in most intimate contact. The female does by far the greater portion of the biting done by the family, and the warblings of the mosquito are those of the female mosquito only.

The mosquito first appears in the form of an egg. The eggs are deposited in the water by the mother mosquito. Before doing this she crosses her hind legs in the shape of a letter X. As the eggs are dropped they are caught by the crossed legs, the glutinous substance attaching to the eggs holding them together. The number of eggs laid by one female before rising is very great. These eggs are arranged in the form of a raft and left to ride on the water, shallow, stagnant fresh water usually being selected. By the additions made to the number of eggs the raft is converted into a sort of a boat, and when the laying process is all completed the boat consists of from 300 to 350 eggs. This is the first stage in the existence of the embryo mosquito. After the last egg is laid and the boat completed the mother's function, so far, at least, as regards this particular brood, ends, and the eggs are left to shift for themselves.

A few days after the egg boat is launched the larvæ appear. These are of an elongated, worm-like form, and come out of the lower end of the eggs, leaving the empty shells forming the boat lying on the surface of the water. The shell is soon destroyed by the action of winds and water. When the larvæ appear the eggs are hatched. Most readers of this article have seen these larvæ in immense numbers on the surface of stagnant water during the warm months. They are vulgarly called "wigglers." Suspended from the surface of the water, with head downward, they are enabled to breathe by means of a sort of tube communicating with the trachea. The appearance of the larvæ may be said to complete the second stage in the existence of the mosquito.

From ten to fifteen days after the appearance of the larvæ the substance enters the pupæ state. They take on a thin skin, almost completely covering the larvæ, and roll around in the water, their motions being directed by a fin-like contrivance at the end of the tail. The quick, seemingly irregular, movements of the pupæ give them the name of "tumblers." They, too, are familiar to persons residing in the rural districts in the spring and summer. The change of the larvæ into the pupæ completes the third stage in the mosquito's existence.

Between five and ten days after the pupæ appears the last and most critical stage in the entire metamorphosis of the egg into the perfect insect arrives. About this period the pupa skin bursts open, and the mosquito takes its first look at daylight. The pupa shell is in the form of a boat, the opening appearing on the surface of the shell which is farthest from the water. The insect rises slowly and deliberately until it at length balances itself on its tail. A small gust of wind now or a slight eddy, and the shell boat would tip over, when the mosquito's active existence would end before it begun.

If the gust of wind or eddy fail to appear—and it is certain that they often do fail to appear—the insect slowly extricates its front pair of legs, and places them on the surface of the water, still clinging to the shell boat. Then it as slowly and deliberately spreads its wings. They at first strike the water, but are raised above it again, and the sun—for these affairs invariably take place on sunny days—and air dry them. The hind legs are then slowly drawn from the shell until their ends rest on the edge of the boat, the body is stretched out, the wings expanded. A moment afterward the wings flap, the shell is tipped over, the head is turned shoreward, and the mosquito is ready for business.

Electric Mosquito Net.

One of the most singular uses to which electricity has been put in this electric age is announced from Paris. A French savant has invented an electric mosquito bar, which is, he believes, destined to replace all other means of defense against flying insects. Making use of the principle of electric execution, he has constructed a sort of screen or wire-work cage, with a small electric light in the center. The mosquitoes, attracted by the light, attempt to fly through the interstices of the cage; but if they so much as touch the tips of their wings—and they cannot fly through without doing so—they are struck by the current of electricity with which the screen is kept constantly charged.

This mosquito-trap, which, under a test, is said to have killed innumerable victims, can be maintained only by the aid of a small electric apparatus, so arranged as to send alternative currents through the wire network.

It is supposed that the person to be protected takes refuge on the interior of the netting, with the little electric light and the generating apparatus. It is not too much to say that there are some people who would rather have the mosquitoes.

Inasmuch as, if the electrified netting will keep out the mosquitoes, a netting made a little closer would keep them out without any electricity, it does not seem likely that this invention is destined to any great usefulness.

It reminds one somewhat of the story of a Dutchman who went about selling a preparation for poisoning a certain kind of troublesome insect.

"You take de insec' mit de finger an' de dumb of von handt," said the peddler, "an' den mit de odder handt you put de pizen in his mout."

"But," said a farmer, "if you've got to catch them and hold them that way, why can't you smash 'em and done with it?"

"Vell," said the Dutchman, "dot's a good vay, too!"

The electric netting also suggests the story of Patrick's experience with an ordinary mosquito canopy. He found one in a room he was to sleep in one night, and, after studying it for a time, made up his mind how it was to be used. This was the way he related his experience the next day:

"It's an illegant thing I found in me room lasht noight. There was a kyoind of a fishing-nit for minnows over me bid. I made a hole through it wid me knife, an' ivery moskater in the room wint into the nit through the hole. Thin I shtopped up the hole wid me hat, an' shlept on the flure all noight, comfortable-loike, wid niver a boite at all!"

For a long time the sounds of almost all English vowels were, as the makers of dictionaries explain at length, in a state of transition. In different words we now have the same vowel pronounced in almost all the various ways known to European languages, and in several that are peculiar to English speech. Probably the pronunciation of more than half the words of the English language has been changed.

There can be no doubt that English vowels originally had the same sounds they now have in most continental languages. Thus a was pronounced as it still is in father, e as ei in rein, i as in ravine, and u like oo in school.

But the English people, having a way of changing the sounds of vowels in speech, gradually converted each one of them into something quite different.

The change is going on still. The vowel a, in London speech, is gradually receiving the sound of long i. An American in London is asked if he wishes to "take in a piper"—and is puzzled until he discovers that this is English for "taking a daily paper."

This tendency has become so marked that the "pipers" themselves have begun, at least in a whimsical way, to print words which have a long a with a y instead. The Pall Mall Gazette, in an article on "Primrose Day," devoted to the memory of Lord Beaconsfield, fancies Englishmen singing:

But who will syve old England from the shyme,
And her sons and daughters who will syve?
For in vyne, alas! in vyne we deplore the honoured nyme
Of Lord Beckingsfield now lying in his gryve

This vicious pronunciation has begun to creep into a limited circle in America, whose members affect English ways. It should be rejected and resolutely discouraged by every one who wishes to speak good English.—Youth's Companion.

He Was a "Feelin'" Man.

After a railroad accident in a New England State, a poor farmer's wife was taken out, bleeding and unconscious. The doctor and a kind woman were working over her when her husband came in and stood a moment, looking on in disturbed silence. His cheeks were drawn in, his eyebrows lifted, his hands in his pockets. Presently, with some effort, he cleared his throat to speak, and, as the doctor looked up, he asked: "Ye didn't see a new tin dipper lyin' round where ye picked her up, did ye?" He got no answer from the indignant doctor, and presently strayed out again in search of his dipper. Meanwhile, his wife opened her eyes and at once asked for her husband. "He's safe," said the doctor, shortly. She felt his curt tone, and, faint as she was, she divined what it meant. "He's a dreadful feelin' man," she said, "but he don't never say much!"

A Carrier Bat.

William Hester, of Spring Hill, Pa., has a large brown bat which he has trained to carry messages like a carrier pigeon. Mr. Hester took the uncanny bird to his place of business in New Castle, and having made arrangements at home to note the exact time of its arrival let it loose. The bat flew a mile in 27¼ seconds.

OF the 11,000,000 square miles of Africa only 2,500,000 remain in the hands of the native rulers.

THIS is a world of compensations—snow comes down in the winter and ice goes up in the summer.

Dr. Mosquito.

Some brainy scientist, with lumps on his forehead like a summer squash, has advanced the startling theory that the mosquito is a medical insect, or, as it were, an M. D. on the wing. He goes on to state that the mosquito is not exactly the universal nuisance that people take him to be, but that he always gives value received, and in exchange for your life's blood injects a dose of quinine, or a substitute for quinine, into your system at the same moment that he taps your epidermis for a straight drink.

Perhaps there is a grain of truth in this interesting and sensational statement. We know for a fact that the favorite haunts of the thoroughbred mosquito are usually located in swampy, malarial districts, where stalk the ghostly chills, dumb yet eloquent agues, indolent livers and torpid spleens. We know that, because we have been there ourselves and have sampled them. And the mosquitoes sampled us at the same time, but we didn't have the least idea in the world that we were swapping blood for quinine, although we did notice that in these localities, surrounded with such malign and depressing influences, the average mosquito waxed fat and monumental in avoirdupois. The man, woman or child caught prowling in this vicinity, and a long way from a regular, practicing physician, with a sheep-skin diploma, saddle-bags and a cross-cut saw, is in momentary danger of being seized with a congestive chill, and suddenly ushered into the dim, uncertain hence without benefit of clergy or the prompt and expensive services of a red-nosed doctor, or even a journeyman medical sharp who has a large and lucrative practice—to get. In such an emergency the philanthropic mosquito comes to the rescue, and while you are stamping, slapping, fighting and swearing, the medical mosquito is busily engaged in saving your life with his little hypodermic injections of quinine, and you never once thank him, or ask him to call again in the morning and see how you are getting along.

One of the chief peculiarities of the whole business is that the medical mosquito settles his bill before he prescribes. That's where he is sharp—sharper than a serpent's tooth, for he would ever have a thankless patient, even if he got away without being busted up in the medical profession. Of course, this practice of bleeding is no new thing in medical science, but we doubt if any of the numerous schools of medicine have ever adopted the practice of injecting quinine at the moment of the removal of the blood.

But, after all, there are other and rather more seductive ways of taking quinine than through the mosquito. Up in Arkansas, for instance, they have a happy faculty of compounding the disagreeable drug with another and more powerful stimulant, renowned throughout the country for its suddenness in effecting surprising results, and hailed from the Rio Grande to Moosehead lake under the assumed names of "Parole," "Old Crow," "Sour Mash," "Liquid Crime," "Calamity Sirup," "Sheep Dip," "Snake Cordial," etc., and as a disguise for quinine it beats Mr. Mosquito, M. D., clear out of sight.—Texas Siftings.

Bishop Simpson made his first appearance in Lancaster, Pa., one Sunday morning very unexpected to himself and the "people called Methodists" of that city. His home was in Pittsburgh. He was traveling over the Pennsylvania railroad to Philadelphia, and a breakdown detained him over Sunday in Lancaster. After breakfast he sauntered out to find a Methodist church, and, walking up Duke street, he met a good Methodist, the late Mr. Carpenter McCleery, who engaged the Bishop in conversation. Dr. Simpson was plainly dressed, and looking anything else than a bishop is commonly supposed to look. Brother McCleery judged from his conversation that he was a local preacher, and the good bishop did not enlighten him to the contrary. The preacher in charge of the Duke Street Methodist Episcopal church finally arrived, and the bishop was introduced to him as "Brother Simpson, a local preacher of the Pittsburgh conference." After considerable persuasion, the bishop was prevailed upon to preach. What disappointment was visible upon the faces of that congregation that morning. They expected to be bored by a "country clod-hopper." The bishop gave out the opening hymn and then prayed. Those who thought they were going to be bored began to think differently, and when the bishop announced his text, "The greatest of all is charity," expectation was on tip-toe. A grander, more eloquent, more feeling discourse was never delivered in that church. As the bishop was elaborating his points and carrying his congregation to the highest pitch by the magnificent roundings of his sentences, the thought occurred to the preacher sitting in the pulpit that this must be Bishop Simpson, and, upon concluding the sermon, the preacher asked him: "Are you not Bishop Simpson?" The bishop's modest and naive reply was: "They call me so at home." The preacher immediately turned, faced the congregation and said: "You have had the extreme pleasure of listening to Bishop Simpson.—Harrisburg Patriot.

A Prairie Dog's Well.

A Wyoming man has settled the question of how the prairie dogs obtain the water they drink. He says they dig their own wells, each village having one with a concealed opening. He says he knows of several of these wells, from fifty to 200 feet deep, each having a circular stairway leading down to the water.—St. Louis Republic.

They Felt For Him.

A thief in Cincinnati stole a trunk belonging to a country preacher, and all he found in it were three paper collars and a pair of socks. He put in twenty-five pounds of brickbats and expressed the trunk to the owner, sending a note inside to express his sorrow that a man should try to be good on such a slim foundation.

A Satisfactory Explanation.

My Liver

Has for a year caused me a great deal of trouble. Had soreness in the back, little appetite, a bitter taste in the mouth, and a general bad feeling all over that I could not locate. Have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for the past three months with great benefit. I feel better, the Strength and Health.

It is quite a common idea that health keeps pace with strength. I know intelligent persons who really think that you may determine the comparative health of a company of men by measuring their arms—that he whose arm measures twelve inches is twice as healthy as he whose arms measures but six. This strange and thoughtless misapprehension has given rise to nearly all the mistakes thus far made in the physical-culture movement. I have a friend who can lift 900 pounds, and yet is an habitual sufferer from torpid liver, rheumatism, and low spirits.

There are many similar cases. The cartmen of our cities, who are our strongest men, are far from the healthiest class, as physicians will testify. On the contrary I have many friends who would stagger under 300 pounds that are in capital trim. But I need not elaborate a matter so familiar with physicians and other observing people. No test of health would prove more faulty than a tape-line or a lift at the scale-beam.

Suppose two brothers—bank clerks—in bad health. They are measured round the arm. Each marks exactly ten inches. They try the scale-beam. The bar rises at exactly 300 pounds with each. Both seek health. John goes to the gymnasium, lifts heavy dumb-bells and kegs of nails until he can put up 125 pounds, and lift 900, and his arm reaches fifteen inches.

Thomas goes to the mountains, fishes, hunts, spends delightful hours with the young ladies and plays cricket.

Upon measuring his arm we find it scarcely larger than when he left town, while he can't put up 60 pounds nor lift 500. But who doubts Thomas will return to the counter the better men of the two? John should be the better man, if strength is the principal or most essential condition of health.—Health.

Gratifying to All.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrate the value of the qualities on which its success is based, and are abundantly gratifying to the California Fig Syrup Company.

Take a Nap.

A physician, writing of rest as a medicine, recommends a short nap in the middle of the day, for those who can take it, as a beneficial addition to the night's sleep. It divides the working time, gives the nervous system a fresh hold on life, and enables one to do more than make up for the time so occupied. A caution is given against indulgence in too long a sleep at such a time, under a penalty of disagreeable relaxation. There has been much discussion regarding the after-dinner nap, many believing it to be injurious, but it is, nevertheless, natural and wholesome.

Living Without Working.

It is said that between the Island of Madagascar and the coast of India there are 16,000 islands, only 600 of which are inhabited. In any of these islands a man can live and support his family in princely luxury without working more than twenty-five days in the year. In fact, on some of these islands he needn't work at all, as Nature provides the food, and no clothes are required.

They Compliment the Hoosiers.

Some ladies from Hicksville attended the great W. C. T. U. meeting in Indianapolis, and have this to say in a letter from one of their number to the Hicksville Independent:

"Indianapolis is a beautiful city with the finest depot in the world, so declared by all foreign as well as home travelers. The center of seventeen railways, yet no transfer 'bus, is required, and you can start to any point from this one—Union depot. Such order, cleanliness and comfort we have never met anywhere, W. C. T. U. room, reading departments and the fan dining department, with its little motor engine, are places of elegance, comfort and usefulness. This is a clean city and it is stocked for miles in extent with beautiful cottage homes surrounded with the most lovely flowers and green lawns. In that respect it surpasses any city of our acquaintance. The building association has made these things a possibility for every honest workman. We spent a day 'down town' and saw the 'sights,' and went through the state house as one of them, but during that whole day we only got one puff of tobacco smoke in our face, saw less lighted cigars during those hours than we would see in half an hour in Hicksville: the floors of offices, stairways, stairs and sidewalk, were almost entirely free of tobacco spittle, and of the thousands of carriages we met and passed in our drives we only saw two men smoking when women were with them. Speaking of this here, a gentleman remarked: 'I don't know how it is, we use enough tobacco but smoking in the women's faces and wading through it is not a part of the business.' We said, amen! most fervently, and pray if it must be used that a little more decency be practiced in other places. The state house costing nearly two millions, is a thing of grandeur and beauty and it was clean, though we noticed that spittoons were placed every ten feet in the halls.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Our public schools will commence next Monday.

J. D. Campbell went over to Auburn Wednesday.

Henry Sinclair has returned to Saginaw, Mich.

Miss Cora Snyder is visiting friends at Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Lazenby are happy over the arrival of a new baby.

A pound party was held last Wednesday evening at Rev. Moots'.

J. J. Fitzgerald and wife spent several days of last week in Bryan, O.

C. J. Porter, the optician was over at Auburn Wednesday on business.

F. E. Thompson with his sons attended the show at Ft. Wayne Thursday.

Thursday afternoon last a party was held at Mrs. J. E. Duncans to sew carpet rags.

Wednesday last J. B. Boyer and wife drove over to Edgerton to visit friends in the vicinity.

Abbie Mason spends her time with Mrs. J. C. Boyer during the absence of her relatives.

Last week Mrs. Wm. Lockhart went again to Grand Rapids to undergo another operation.

G. T. Abby was of the number of those who attended the old settlers' meeting at Angola, Saturday.

The convention of the Epworth League for this part of Indiana will be held at Garrett, Aug. 26, and 27.

A number of our young people went up to Hamilton Wednesday for a picnic party and a ride on the lake.

Mrs. H. E. Braun has been visiting her sisters in Ft. Wayne for some days. She expects to return home this week.

Mrs. I. Davidson and daughter May have returned home after quite a lengthy visit with relatives at Green Springs, Ohio.

Miss Walker has returned to Waterloo, from Chautauqua. She will remain probably until she goes to her place of teaching.

Sunday evening Rev. D. C. Woolpert, presiding elder preached at the M. E. church. He held their attention, and is well worth hearing.

Friday last the U. B. Sunday school had a picnic at Hamilton. The forenoon was pleasant, but we had hail and a hard rain in the afternoon.

Douglas Kelley, northeast of town, lost four fine pigs Tuesday by the excessive heat. He saved two others by pouring water over them. They were fine ones, weighing about 125 each.

Mrs. J. Weerich died the morning of the 15th and was buried from the U. B. church, where the funeral services were held Sunday. She has been an invalid for sometime, yet husband and daughters will miss her, and mourn their loss.

Mrs. Marshall, who has just finished canvassing Auburn for the sale of all varieties of needles and pins, is spending a week in town for some purpose. Hereafter the fathers, sons and brothers ought not to be troubled with missing buttons, or put out of humor for lack of "the stitch in time that saves nine."

School prospects are excellent. Prof. Keep and his assistants are ready for business and if the weather is not too hot, they expect the largest attendance ever present at the opening of our school. Pupils from outside the town, will remember the good work done here and enroll their names with us.

Frank Fisher, now marshal is proving to be a success for a young man, and a new hand at the business. Our people should give him all possible encouragement and help him by keeping the streets and alleys clean, the gutters and the grass plats in proper condition, and in all that goes to keep our town beautiful and healthy.

No one will deny that the times are hard, possibly continuing to grow more so—yet there is a great scarcity of girls to do house work, and housekeepers whose families are large, or there may be sickness, or the wife is herself in poor health, are unable to supply themselves with the help so much needed. Why is this so? In this case there is no supply to create a demand, and the demand fails to raise up a supply.

The fair society is beginning to hustle around to get things in shape for the fair. The premium lists are being distributed, and other advertising done. The track is being put into good shape, so that horses can be practising for the races. The secretary has already a good deal of correspondence to attend to, and many stand and other rights have been already sold. Advertising will soon be vigorously pushed in every direction, and arrangements made for the usual special trains. It is going to be a big fair, if indications are anything.

C. M. Phillips and A. L. Fausette, are now among those of our people who can raise a fair crop of plums. A few years ago, only Charlie Bassett and some of the Stroh people southeast of town could succeed in keeping off the bugs that destroy the plums. We believe that Mr. Rosenberry and Mr. McAnally, also save their fruit. As much of this is done by spraying, we presume Mr. McAnally's patent sprayer has been instrumental in doing much good. He has lately made improvements in his sprayer, that will make it still more effective as an insect destroyer and saver of fruit, cabbage, potatoes, etc.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Ollie Buss visited friends in and near this place, over Sunday.

Emanuel Neidig, of near Hudson, visited E. Huffman and wife, Monday.

Mrs. Viola Snowberger went to Lagrange, Friday, to visit her father John Markner.

A. A. Forney, John Lyons and their families, wer the guests of A. Bolinger and family, last Sunday.

Out of the forty-four loads of wheat marketed here, Saturday, N. J. Crays took the highest market price, $1.04¾ a bushel.

A few days ago as the gentle twilight was deepening into the shadows of evening, a few of our young men in this vicinity, hied themselves henceward near the limits of Hudson, where they found an equal number of fair damsels anxiously awaiting their coming with wreaths of soft, sweet smiles garlanding the sacred countenance of each pretty girl, while each heart throbbed in wild anticipation of the pleasures soon to be enjoyed at a party just east of this place. All went as smooth as a marriage bell until the party was over and they started for home when it was found that a few of the buggy wheels were missing. The ladies rode home on a lumber wagon.

CONCORD.

The plasters are at work on Is. Wyatt's new house.

Mert Johnson will shortly move to Lagrange county.

Several from here attended the show at Auburn Saturday evening.

Rev. S. S. Stanton delivered his farewell sermon last Sunday morning.

Cora and Nona High have a little lady friend visiting them from Auburn.

Mrs. Estella Koontz had her pocketbook stolen from her home Saturday.

Mrs. Dick Ervin returned from a visit with her parents at Cedarville last Friday.

Mrs. Baughman's daughter Carrie and children, of Logansport, are paying her a visit.

Mrs. M. J. Dawson, of Denver, Col., is here visiting a few weeks with her sister, Mrs. F. Buchanan.

Mrs. J. Hull will entertain the social August 26. A cordial invitation is extended to all interested.

Rev. Nelson, of Spencerville, delivered a temperance lecture in J. D. Smith's grove last Friday evening.

H. B. Culbertson and wife, of Auburn, was driving over the streets last Sabbath smiling on their many friends.

S. Morr and family, D. W. and Mrs. Josie Morr were called to Waterloo last Sunday to attend the funeral of their sister, Mrs. Weinrick.

Last Saturday seven schools met in the shady grove of S. Tarney's and five ministers. It was enjoyable day to all present. We will not omit to mention about their bountiful dinner, that the ladies know just how to fix up.

BUTLER.

We learn with regret about the fires in the vicinity of Auburn.

J. A. Campbell and wife contemplate a drive across the country to Lake Michigan.

Rev. Stone has returned from his vacation and is again at his post. We learn that his wife is quite ill.

G. T. Johns, of Duluth, Minn., a former well known resident of Butler has been visiting here the past few days. He is accompanied by his wife.

The M. E. Sunday school will have a excursion and picnic on the banks of Fish Creek in Troy, the first Wednesday in September. A good time is anticipated.

Waterloo Fair.

We have received the twentieth annual premium list of the Waterloo fair, which is to be held on their grounds there Oct. 5 to 9 inclusive. The list of premiums has been fully revised and improved, many obsolete and useless items taken out, and new and worthy articles inserted instead. The list will now be found one of the most complete and satisfactory ever put forth by any society, and all who think of exhibiting anything should secure a copy. Send to M. Kiplinger, sec., Waterloo, or call on his assistant there, John F. Shuman. They will give you on, or send one by mail.

The Greatest Strike.

Among the great strikes that of Dr. Miles in discovering his New Heart Cure has proven itself to be one of the most important. The demand for it has become astonishing. Already the treatment of heart disease is being revolutionized, and many unexpected cures effected. It soon relieves short breath, fluttering, pains in side, arm, shoulder, weak and hungry spells, oppression, swelling of ankles, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' book on Heart and Nervous Diseases free. The unequaled New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport, also his Restorative Nervine for headache, fits, sprees, hot flashes, nervous chills, opium habit, etc 1

Card of Thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ashelman desire through the columns of the COURIER, to return grateful thanks to all the friends and neighbors for kindness, assistance and sympathy shown in their heavy bereavement, the sickness and death of Mrs. Ashelman's mother, Mrs. Eliza Chidsey. They will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

Fifteen Texas steers broke loose on the streets of Chicago the other day, and made such a commotion that the people thought it was Lucy Parsons.

Our Baby Boy.

The pride of our home should have proper care and during certain seasons when the air is damp, children are often taken with a severe cough that should be attended to in time. The best remedy you can use is Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. It is pleasant to the taste and can be given to the smallest child without danger. Mothers, send for Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup and use no other. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

A Boon to Wives.

Having used "Mother's Friend" I would not be without it. It is a boon to wives who know they must pass through the painful ordeal of childbirth. Mrs. C. Melbourne, Iowa. Write The Bradfield Regulator Co, Atlanta, Ga., for further particulars. Sold by F. E. Davenport and all druggists.

Hereafter any teacher who accepts a present from pupils in the public schools of Hamilton, Ontario, will be immediately dismissed.

Just as Advertised.

Chamberlain's Immediate Relief has been tried for years and no one yet has ever found it to lack any of the qualities which it has been advertised to possess. It is a case where the truly great virtues of the medicine makes it necessary to add a single iota to the unvarnished truth about it. When Chamberlain's Immediate Relief is recommended as a cure for certain diseases, the public may rest assured that such results will be obtained, if the medicine is used according to directions. Try it and be convinced. Watch for testimony in next week's issue. Sold by all druggists. 5

The catacombs of Rome contain the remains of about 6,000,000 human beings, and those of Paris about 3,000,000. The latter were formerly stone quarries. Many of the victims of the revolution of 1792 4 are buried there.

MERIT WINS. We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits.

Robbins & McCord, Druggists. 1

It is surprising the amount of trouble a man will endure before it reaches him.

Will Be Given Away.

Our enterprising druggist F. E. Davenport who carries the finest stock of drugs, perfumeries, toilet articles, brushes, sponges, etc., is giving away a large number of trial bottles of Dr. Miles' celebrated Restorative Nervine. They guarantee it to cure headache, dizziness, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, the ill effects of spirits, tobacco, coffee, etc. Druggists say it is the greatest seller they ever knew, and is universally satisfactory. They also guarantee Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure in all cases of nervous or organic heart disease, palpitation, pain in side, smothering, etc. Fine book on "Nervous and Heart Diseases" free. 1

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

1852,—Continued.

Interest in municipal affairs ran low and at the May election, only twenty-seven votes were cast. Twenty-four of these were cast for Jefferson Wallace, Alonzo Watkins, Stephen B. Ward, Wyllys Griswold, Jonathan Leonard; and John P. Widney received 17 votes as trustee to fill Payne's place.

Whedon W. Griswold was elected town treasurer. He was a colonel in the war of the rebellion and in 1866 was elected count auditor by a majority of one vote over George Kuhlman, who ran for a second term.

The circus and menagerie if a good combination always meet popular support, and Forepaugh and Barnum have been kings of the show. The first record of a circus in Auburn was in June 1852 when Orney & Co. were granted permission to exhibit within the limits of the corporation without payment of a license tax.

Of those well known to old residents of Auburn, who were active in public life in 1852, there are five yet living who are deserving of notice although all have left the field to a younger generation.

Prominent among these is Rev. S. B. Ward, who yet lives in Auburn; advanced in years, enfeebled by age, strong in intellect, he yet cheerfully responds to the calls of fellow pioneers, speaking on various occasions and is most deservedly held high in public estimation. He has been spoken of by old settlers as very hospitable in the early days. To his friends and neighbors the latch-string was always out, and to his table they were ever welcome.

Elder Ward has passed life more in efforts for the spiritual welfare of others than in making temporal provision for himself, and as a result is possessed of moderate means. To his persevering labor in enlisting helpers and supervision, is owing the fine brick church belonging to the Baptist Society.

One daughter, the wife of Dr. Swarts, who owns and occupies both as a home and an office, the fine brick building on Main street near the center of the town, had been a successful teacher in the academic schools of Auburn, and is now a skilled and reliable physician with a large practice.

Another daughter, is Mrs. Mary Ehlers, widow of John Ehlers an officer of artillery during the civil war, later a very capable druggist in the store now occupied by Messrs. Robbins & McCord. He died some years ago and Mrs. Ehlers an educated, talented woman devotes her life to charitable and christian labor at home and elsewhere.

John McCune served the county as recorder from 1851 to 1855 and then gave his time to cultivating an osiery on the land southwest of town limits where in his age and feebleness he still resides.

Boys and girls grown to maturity recollect with pleasure working for Mr McCune stripping bark from millions which he made into baskets of various sizes for different uses. Later he invented a curious knitting machine which discounted the good housewives' busy needles, and built up a stocking with marvelous celerity. He lost much of his property by going surety for a friend. His eyesight almost failed him years ago and in his regular attendance at the Methodist church is guided by his faithful wife.

James W. Case was a prominent citizen in Auburn in the dawn before the war. He came from western Pennsylvania, and taught school in Auburn and in adjoining townships. Later, he started a grocery in the old red brick which furnished the nucleus of the building which stands on the northwest corner of Main and Ninth streets and lived in a small frame attached to the west end.

In 1865, he was postmaster. The writer was for a year associated with him in a trade in grocries and dry goods and found him energetic and shrewd in business. Enlarging his field, he bought grain and seeds, put up the building referred to and seemed on the highway to prosperity, but ultimately failed and in his declining years is a citizen of the national capital, living with his son and only child James Albert Case.

This young man is an honor to Auburn and a model example for her ambitious youth. He began his education in the old academy by a quiet steady course of study. Later, he accompanied Miss Cornelia Strickland, his aunt a most worthy woman to Ann Arbor where he completed his High school and University courses with high honors and ultimately found his way to Washington, where in the preparation of valuable statistics of railways of the United States. Henry C. Adams, Statistician to the Interstate Commerce Commission thus speaks of him, "It is desired to renew the acknowledgment made in last years' (1889) report, to Mr. James A. Case, assistant statistician, for the efficiency and intelligence with which he has conducted the office work and the office correspondence."

Not infrequently the COURIER has been proud to call public attention to the honors reflecting upon Auburn and DeKalb county through the young people, who have sought a higher education after leaving our schools and ultimately became worthy occupants of honorable and responsible positions in and beyond the limits of our state and a list with occupations would be surprising in its extent and pleasant of perusal.

James Brinkerhoff was for some years a practicing lawyer of this county and also, a successful physician and took active interest in town offairs in 1852. He was a man of generous and sympathetic nature and it is said of him that in his practice of medicine, much of which was among those in straightened circumstances, he not only gave gratuitous treatment, but rendered material assistance as well and bid fair to take a leading part in the town, but becoming an invalid, he was forced to limit his practice, and later connected with it the prosecution of soldiers' claims for pensions. During this last year his estimable wife Olive Brinkerhoff died and the doctor still lives in the old home on South Main street, a home which to some extent typifies the life of its solitary occupant.

John P. Widney was clerk of DeKalb county from 1851. He is widely known as a prominent early settler on the banks of the St. Joe river, in Concord township. He came to DeKalb in May, 1836 and during the following winter the county was organized. In the summer of 1837, two voting places were opened in the new county, one on the river and the other on Fish Creek. He has said in this connection. "The returns from the river poll I had the honor of taking to the 'county seat,' as the double log cabin of Wesley Park, the only building in the place, so far as I could see, was called being guided on my way by a pocket compass and the dim marks of an Indian trail. There I met an elderly gentleman of I think the name of Boyer, who brought the returns from Fish Creek. We two formed the board of convassers. Mr. Boyer, a man of age and wisdom, I a youth of less than 21, but both profoundly ignorant of our duties. The vote of the county, somewhere about 30, was by us duly certified to the governor without so much as a thread of red tape."

Mr. Widney became a prominent resident of Auburn about 1852, and as we have seen was elected town trustee. He lived many years in the older part of the present residence of D. D. Moody, clerk elect of the county and ex-representative to the state legislature.

During these more recent years Mr. Widney and wife have been citizens of Lakeside, a healthful and attractive Ohio town and occasionally visit his old home to see his children, revive old associations and visit with former neighbors.

He was a prudent business man and a skilful financier and combining with these qualities frugality, he became wealthy and in age enjoyes in comfort the reward of early industry and self-denial.

Auburn's Music.

There is nothing so delightfully soul-stirring and uplifting as good music. The glittering gems seem to sparkle with a new luster, the beautiful flowers apparently are tinged with deeper tints of coloring and emit a more fragrant odor on the breeze, the song of birds is sweeter and all nature seems imbued with newer life and greater activity, when the sweet, penetrating strains of music float out on the calm, still air. Its magnetic influence charms the ear and holds the silent listener transfixed to the spot while the enchanting melodies die away in rippling murmurings 'mid the atmosphere, echoing softly back gladness and joy to the human heart. 'Tis then the imagination mounts a loftier plane and for the time dwells in brighter realms,—a new world of purer atmosphere, inhabited by more congenial spirits, where all things earthly are alike forgotten in the enjoyment of a newer, broader and better existence. Good music awakens the noblest impulses of the heart, enlivens the highest appeciative faculties possessed and opens up an avenue for the inculcation of purer, unselfish motives, nobler action and the development of finest tastes in the art so beautiful and inspiring. A world where music wields its influence like the wand of an enchantress, is almost a heaven within itself, and mortals drawn toward it dwell in a paradise of their own.

Music is a heavenly gift to mankind;
Truly, it is a heaven-born art.
It banishes care and burdens from the mind,
And breathes consolation to the heart.

Certainly the musician is a benefactor to the human family. A town that does not possess a good cornet band and does not encourage the formation and development of one, lacks one of the important elements of success, and fails to fulfill one of the mandatory obligations incumbent upon it. On this line we would call attention to the Auburn Band. This band is composed of pushing, wide awake and enterprising young men, who are possessed of marked musical ability, and the anxiety on the part of each member for the development of greater skill, has resulted in the accomplishment of a competence both surprising and satisfactory. This has required time, attention, practice and the expenditure of a great deal of money, and will continue as long as the band is in existence. The question naturally arises, "Do our people appreciate and encourage the efforts put forth by these young men, commensurate to the pleasure afforded by them?" Whether they are fully appreciated is not generally known, but to expect these brave fellows to meet all the incidental obligations, and then furnish entertainment free to all who are pleased to listen is asking entirely too much—more than is reasonable. Saturday, in the early part of the evening, a good crowd of people, whose countenances were lighted up with sweet anticipations of the enjoyment of the coming hour, when the band would favor them with a few choice selections, assembled beneath the electric light at the corner of Main and Seventh streets, where everything glittered and shone with sparkling brilliancy. At the proper hour there arose on the evening breeze in all its voluptuousness, just such strains of melody as made the majority of people forget the cares and fatigue of a week of business activity. They played several pieces, which delighted and made people wish for more when the occasion was ended.

Capt. Wm. M. Boughan.

The subject of this notice, William Madison Boughan, was born in Ross county, Ohio, Nov. 12, 1815, and died at Auburn, Ind., August 21, 1891, his age being 75 years, 9 months and 9 days. He was married to Nancy Dixon Nov. 29, 1835, in Union county, Ohio, to which place he had then removed. Here they resided and raised their family, seven children in all. In 1860 they moved to Richland county, Ill., and on the breaking out of the war, he raised a company of volunteers, Co. C, 63d Illinois, and became their captain. He served through the war and until honorably discharged. He was wounded by a shell at the siege of Vicksburg. After his return home, he remained a citizen of Illinois till the spring of 1869, when they removed to Auburn, Ind., which has since been his home. His wife died August 15, 1876. She was born in Loudon county, Va. He married the present widow, Elizabeth Cooper, at Edgerton, Ohio, March 27, 1886, and she, together with five of the children by his first marriage, two sons and three daughters, survive to mourn for him. Early in life he united with the M. E. church, in which he remained for over forty years. Later he connected himself with the Church of God, in which he remained a faithful member till his death. The funeral was from the M. E. church, Sunday, Aug. 23, at 1:30, p. m. Rev. W. W. Lovet, of the Church of God, Wolcottville, conducted the services, assisted by Rev. A. S. Wooton, pastor of the M. E. church at this place. The services were also conducted in connection with the Masonic fraternity, who were out in force, there being a number here from Waterloo and from Spencerville. He was buried in the lovely Evergreen cemetery. The attendance at the funeral was quite large in spite of the continuous rain. Capt. Boughan was elected justice of the peace for the then township of Union, at the spring election, April 3, 1882, and entered on the duties of his office Oct. 27, 1883. He served out his full term of four years to October 27, 1887. He had been in poor health for some time, and a few weeks before his death he had a stroke of paralysis, from which he never fully recovered.

"Father, now thy labor ended,
And thy hand need toil no more;
Sweetly rest, by angels tended,
Over on the golden shore."

Obituary.

Louvina Shaffer was born in Westmoreland county, O., May 11, 1824, and died August, 19, 1891, aged 67 years, 3 months and 8 days. She was the oldest daughter of Simon and Margaret Shaffer. In the year 1834 moved with her parents to Ashland county, O. On March 10, 1846, she was united in marriage with Reuben Dilgard, and in the year 1859 moved with her family to Union township, DeKalb county, Ind., where she lived until her death. To this union were born four children, two sons and two daughters, the latter two dying in infancy. William the elder son died in early manhood with a triumphant hope of eternal life in 1885. Louvina Dilgard united with the Evangelical Lutheran church at Sedan in 1866 and lived a consistent christian until death. She leaves a loving companion, one son, two grandchildren, four sisters, and one brother, together with a number of friends to mourn their loss. She was a kind and loving companion and mother. The funeral services were held at Waterloo and the remains were interred in the Waterloo cemetery. The services were conducted by W. H. Mygrant of Hicksville, O. By request, the text was Phil. 1st chap. 21st verse.

RELENTLESS TIME

BRINGS ABOUT THESE EVENTS IN THE WIDE WORLD.

A Desperado Captured—Seven River Pirates Arrested—Frightful Fall—Ladies Hurt—Indiana Gas Fields.

A DESPERADO CAUGHT.

William McDermott, Who Held Up a Train and Robbed the Passengers, Is Bagged at Last.

Buffalo (N. Y.) special: Nearly a week ago the police received word from Corry, Pa., that William McDermott had held up a train on Aug. 17 on the Western New York and Pennsylvania Railroad, as it was coming into Corry. The train held up was a local, and McDermott did it in true Jesse James style. He was aided by two confederates. Each of his pals held a door with revolvers and McDermott did the work. Brandishing a revolver he commanded the frightened women in the car to give up their valuables. They hastily obeyed. The desperado then pounced upon an old man and woman and beat them into unconsciousness, leaving them for dead. He then shot another woman, and she now lies in a critical condition at Corry. He also shot and dangerously wounded a child. McDermott and his companions then jumped from the train and escaped. The authorities have been in constant pursuit of the desperado since that time, and the other night they succeeded in arresting him. He will be taken back to Corry at once.

INDIANA'S GAS WELLS.

The Supply Diminishing Each Year—A Scheme to Enforce Economy.

Indianapolis special: Further disclosures are made as to the diminution of the supply of natural gas in the Indiana field. The present supply for the city of Indianapolis is obtained from an almost completely new set of wells, and it is necessary to continually open new ones. Experience has proved, according to the published figures that the average life of a well when drawn upon constantly is about three years and of some the time is shorter. In the beginning the supply was obtained at a point in the field twenty miles distant from Indianapolis. Now it is necessary to bring the gas a distance of nearly forty miles, and the wells are now within a few miles of the heart of the field.

The purpose in disclosing these facts is to enforce economy in the use of the fuel and to secure the inauguration of the meter system instead of permitting consumers to burn all the gas they want for a fixed yearly charge. There is great waste in the manufactories.

Ladies Hurt.

Miss Bessie Wanamaker, daughter of Wm. Wanamaker, brother of the Postmaster General, while riding on a board walk amusement known as a "scenic railway," at Atlantic City, N. J., was thrown to the ground on account of the gripman losing control of the car by the breaking of a "brake" bolt and her left leg broken just above the knee. Others injured were: Mrs. E. J. Crippen, wife of a large Philadelphia grocer, face and head cut and was badly bruised; Edward Leeds, proprietor of the Haddon-Hall, back seriously injured; Miss Maggie Smith, daughter of Jacob Smith, of Philadelphia, bruised and cut, and three others slightly bruised.

Among the Ruins.

San Francisco special: The ex-sand-lot agitator, whose home was burned recently, has been passing as Marius among the ruins of Carthage every day since. Kearney laments the loss of letters and newspaper clippings bearing on the labor movement of California of which he was the leader for several years. His grief was the greatest over the burning of a long editorial in the London Times, reviewing his exploits. He declared he was preparing a book on his career and he darkly hinted that the men who were afraid of exposures he could make had conspired to destroy his material.

Not So Poor After All.

Edward Baker, an old citizen of St. Louis County, Mo., died at his home about two weeks ago, apparently in destitute circumstances. A few days ago some of his relatives were cleaning up the house in which he died, for the purpose of occupying it, and discovered an old trunk containing $17,000, of which $12,000 was in greenbacks and $5,000 in gold and silver. The deceased left a widow and three children, none of whom suspected his having the money. He was a farmer by occupation, but was miserly to a degree.

Four Days on a Desert Island.

The steamer Farralone has arrived at San Francisco, from Alaska, bringing the crew of the whaling bark Emma Harriman. Six of them drifted in Behring Sea several days in a small boat and suffered great hardship. They lived four days on a desert Island and nearly starved. They were finally rescued by a passing schooner.

Stoned to Death by Boys.

Egbert Kingsbury, a well-to-do young man, 24 years old, attempted to run some small boys who were stealing apples from his yard in Cleveland. A number of boys turned on him with stones, one of which struck Kingsbury in the head, fracturing the skull, from the result of which he died yesterday. The boys escaped.

Frightful Fall.

John Howard, a wealthy hat manufacturer of Yonkers, N. Y., aged 64 years, fell from a window of his hat factory, and, striking on the stones 100 feet below, was killed.

A Florida Lynching.

Andrew Ford (colored) was lynched at Greenville, Fla. He was captured several days ago and placed in jail. A party of 100 country people came to town and after battering down the jail door, took Ford out, and despite his protest of innocence, hanged him to a tree.

Seven River Pirates Arrested.

United States marshals arrested seven river pirates for stealing hundreds of dollars' worth of goods below Madison, Ind. The prisoners were taken to Louisville for trial.

A Slick Rascal.

Cincinnati special: Mr. Rice Wright, of Philadelphia, organized a customs clothing and merchandise co-operative association establishing branches in Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. His plan was to accept weekly payments of $1 from members, which he persuaded them he would invest in such a way as to enable him after fifteen payments had been made to give them a certificate for $35, good for cash or goods. The other day the 10,000 subscribers in this city who nearly completed their fifteenth payment, found that the local agent, Mr. Horne, is not in the city. They also learned that Mr. Rice Wright, of Philadelphia, is missing. They have attached the office fixtures, which will make a poor return for the big promises held out to the members.

CAPTURED.

The Columbus Grove Murderer Behind the Bars.

Columbus Grove (O.) special: The daring robber who made the raid on the Exchange Bank of this place, has been run down, and is now behind the bars of the prison at New Washington, Ohio—a small town in Crawford County, seventeen miles north of Bucyrus, and at the junction of the Pittsburgh, Akron and Western and Toledo and Ohio Central Railroads. The man's name is Ad. Roberts, and Postmaster Carson, of New Washington, is his uncle, who assisted in the detection and capture of the desperado. He was stopping at Mr. Carson's house.

But little can be learned about the man Roberts and his previous history. Mr. Carson says he does not think he has any relatives living in this part of the country. He had not seen Roberts for over three years. About that time he married a young lady at New Washington, but she deserted him about three months after their marriage and eloped with another man. Up to that time Roberts was a fair kind of a man, but his wife's infidelity broke him all up, and some think that the blow unbalanced his mind. He left New Washington shortly after the affair, and nothing was heard from him until he showed up at Carson's. He told nothing regarding himself or what he had been doing while he was away, but it is the belief by some that he joined the regular army, from which he is now supposed to be a deserter.

TRAIN HELD UP.

Two Masked Desperadoes Kill a Brakeman and Rob the Conductor.

Kansas City (Mo.,) special:—Freight train No. 18, on the Kansas City, St. Joe and Council Bluffs road, was held up and robbed at Murray switch, just outside of Harlem. H. I. Cassel, conductor, started to ring up the watch tower at Harlem, when he was held up by two masked men with revolvers. The robbers took Cassel's watch and told him to signal the tower and learn if the track was clear. The rear brakeman, Ed White was ordered to get off by one of the outlaws. The two men accompanied Cassel to the way car, when they again commanded White to get off. As he stepped toward the ladder the revolver of one of the robbers was discharged. White dropped dead. The ball entered his left temple. Conductor Cassel signalled the engineer and got into the way car as soon as he could. The train started and the two robbers climbed onto the top of the way car. They then climbed down the side of the car and ran into a thicket. When Harlem was reached the engineer and forward brakeman were informed of the robbery. The authorities have been notified and every effort is being made to catch the desperadoes. White was 36 years of age and leaves a widow, who lives in St. Joseph.

Kills His Sister.

A sad accident is reported from Dunkirk, O. Mr. and Mrs. John Decker were in Ada attending the funeral of young George Stokesbury, who was foully murdered in the streets of that place. They left the children at home. George Decker, aged 17, was fooling with his father's shotgun, and pointed it at his sister Rosa, aged 14. She stood about three feet from the end of the gun. Rosa screamed with terror, but George assured her it wouldn't hurt her and pulled the trigger. The heavy load of shot entered the right side, cutting off the third and fourth ribs and penetrating the right side. The girl sank to the floor speechless, but remained conscious to the last, about three hours. Her parents arrived before her death. The scene upon their arrival was heartrending. They returned from the closing scene of one tragedy in the family to witness another ten times more terrible. The brother is crazed with grief. The unfortunate girl was a prime favorite in the vicinity.

"Parson" Davies Nearly Kills an Australian Pugilist.

A sanguinary encounter between two of the most noted characters in the sporting world occurred at Mount Clemens, Mich. Jim Hall, the Australian pugilist, who claims the title of champion middleweight of the world, was fearfully worsted in an attack on his business manager, Parson Charles E. Davies. The encounter was the outcome of a quarrel in the bar-room of the hotel. After an angry word or two, Hall struck viciously at Davies with a bottle. The big prize fighter's arm was caught by a bystander, but shaking himself free, Hall attempted to repeat the blow and Davies at bay, grabbed a lemon knife lying on the bar and dodging Hall's powerful fist and lunged back at him, cutting a terrible gash from chin to ear on the right side and narrowly missing the jugular vein. "You've done me, Charlie, but stay with me," exclaimed Hall as the blood spurted in a horrible flow from the wound. Hall will recover.

A Receiver Appointed for the American Wheel Company.

Chicago special: The American Wheel Company, said to be the world's largest manufactory of wheels and vehicles, is insolvent. Noble Butler has been appointed receiver and has possession of the different plants of the company. The total sssets are given as $4,105,000 and the liabilities $1,800,000. The stringency of the money market and the inability to secure an extension of obligations caused the collapse. All the shops and plants of the company in six different States are temporarily closed and 2,500 employes are made idle. Those most heavily interested and who caused the appointment of a receiver, assert that the company will be able to liquidate all indebtedness and pay the stockholders dollar for dollar on their investment.

In Search of the North Pole.

A brief dispatch from St. Johns, N. F., announces that the steamer Kite has returned to that place. She safely reached her destination at Whale Sound and landed the Pearly party, the house in which it is to live next winter, and the supplies of the expedition. Lieutenant Pearly has had the serious misfortune to break his leg. The dispatch gives no particulars. The subsidary expedition headed by Professor Pellprin, of Philadelphia, has been successful in its work and has got as far as St. Johns on its way home. Eight months at least must elapse from September 1 before the sledging conditions will be so as to enable him to start on his long trip on the inland sea. This will give the lieutenant ample time to recover from the injury to his leg.

An Absent-Minded Father.

North Lime (Conn.) special: George Bump, an eccentric Yankee, while heading a barrel for cider, placed his deaf and dumb five-year-old son inside of the barrel to hold the head up while he tightened the hoops. He forgot that the child was in the barrel and a fruitless search was made. The boy was not discovered for two days and when taken out of the barrel immediately went into hysterics. Bump has been arrested, as the boy will probably die.

"Just Over."

New York special: Rebecca Rubenstein has arrived at the barge office from Odessa, bring'ng with her her twenty-four children. Their ages range from 1 to 25 years. The Rubensteins are in good circumstances and will settle in this city. The father of the interesting family also accompanied the children to this country. Mrs. Rubenstein is 45 years old and is still plump and pretty. She is about to give birth to the twenty-fifth child.

Wheat on the Road.

Kansas City special: The receipts of wheat at this point within the past few weeks have been very large. The receipts in one day are reported at 667 cars, which is the greatest number of cars of wheat ever received in one day. The largest number heretofore received in one day was 610 cars in 1883. The Chicago and Alton Railroad has refused to take any more grain as both of its elevators are filled. The Missouri Pacific road has 650 cars in its yards waiting to be unloaded; the Santa Fe has 500; the United Pacific 700, and the other roads enough to make a total of over 3,000 cars of unloaded grain.

Not on the Bills.

A remarkable balloon ascension was made at Carolina Beach, a summer resort, fifteen miles below Wilmington, Del. Charles Williams, a negro helper to the æronaut, became entangled in the guys to the balloon just as it was ready for the ascent. While struggling to release himself the balloon suddenly shot upward, leaving the æronaut on the ground, and carrying the terrified negro to a height of 5,000 feet. The balloon fell a mile away, and it was supposed that Williams had been killed, but just before reaching the ground he succeeded in disentangling himself from the ropes, and escaped unhurt.

A Terrible Crime.

A horrible crime is reported from Colburt, Chippewa County, Wis. The daughter of Neil Whiterow had been living with a family in Eagle Point, and afterwards went to keep house for her father. About two months ago she was married to a young man in Cadott, and all went well until a short time ago, when she was taken sick. An investigation showed that she was in a delicate condition, and she made a confession implicating her father. Her husband turned the unfortunate wife adrift, and she has disappeared leaving no trace behind. It is said that her father has committed suicide.

Wreck of the El Dorado.

San Francisco special: Vice President Crocker, of the Southern Pacific Company, has received a dispatch stating that the steamer El Dorado, which was wrecked near Bahama Islands, will prove a total loss and that the greater part of her cargo is so badly damaged that none of the Pacific coast freight, comprising nearly fifty carloads of high class goods, can be forwarded to the coast. The Southern Pacific Company's loss will foot up $250,000, on which there is no insurance. The steamer was owned by the Southern Development Company, and was valued at $500,000, fully insured.

Does She Own the Town.

East Tawas (Mich.) special:—A great deal of uneasiness is caused by the report that a woman has arrived here to prosecute her claims to the land on which this village is located. She also claims several valuable farms. It is said that she is here under an assumed name, and her present abode in the village being unknown, only adds fuel to the flame. The prosecution of the claim will bring forth several very highly sensational matters in former land transactions affecting Detroit and Bay City people.

Blind Experiments.

Washington special: A number of leading members of the Association for the Advancement of Science have been interviewed on the experiments of Col. Dryenforth with balloons for inducing rainfall, and a majority of those interviewed were disposed to regard the experiments in the light of what may be called "blind experiments," which may be successful or not. Those interviewed regard the subject as an interesting one and looked forward to future results with much interest.

Through a Trestle.

A freight train on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railroad went through a trestle near Tula, Miss., killing two men outright and injuring three others. William A. Balton and Henry Toggart, brakemen, were mashed to death and Conductor Fairbanks, Fireman Clifford, and Engineer Kelley were fatally wounded.

He Is the Man.

James M. Roberts, the alleged Columbus Grove murderer, has arrived at Ottawa, Ohio, in charge of Marshal Faith, of New Washington, and Deputy Sheriff Reuve, of Ottawa, and was positively identified by Cashier Maples, of the Columbus Grove bank.

Brakeman Fatally Injured.

Edward Skeers, an Air Line brakeman, fell from a freight train in the cut near Milltown, Ind., and rolled back on the track. His right arm was cut off near the shoulder, and he received painful internal injuries of a fatal character.

A Frightful Mine Explosion.

A dispatch from Swansea, Wales, says that an explosion occurred in a mine pit near Merthiery Tydville. So far two bodies have been recovered and it is feared that many more are buried beneath the debris.

Forest Fires.

Terrible forest fires are raging in Eldorado and Nevada counties, Cal., causing heavy loss. Many people are homeless.

HURT BY M'KINLEY.

WHY A MANUFACTURER HAS CHANGED HIS BUSINESS.

A Knitting-Machine Maker Turns Bicycle Maker—How McKinley Put In His Little Bill—An Export Trade Spoiled.

It must not be supposed that the tariff is an unmixed good for the manufacturers. There are frequent cases where the manufacturers are not only hurt by the tariff but are actually driven out of business. And it is to be noted that whenever such is the case they do not let their modesty keep them silent.

The case has recently been reported of a manufacturer of knitting machines who has been hurt by the McKinley law. A representative of the American Wool Reporter, a leading protectionist trade paper, has had an interview with this manufacturer. Here is a part of what was said:

"So you are making bicycles. Is not that a novel line of goods for a knitting machine factory?"

"Oh, yes," replied the manager, "but our export trade is destroyed. Twenty-five per cent. of our force can produce enough goods for the home market, and we have as large a domestic demand for machines as any works in the country, to state it mildly; so happily, circumstances being favorable, we are able to keep 75 per cent. of our men at work in a totally different field, which for their sakes we are glad to do."

"What is the cause of this great falling off from your export trade?"

"The reason is very simple. When the tariff on German knit goods is so high as to exclude them from the American market, the Germans will not buy American knitting machines. You may say that, so far as the export trade is concerned, the manufacture of American knitting machines is paralyzed. We have been in business since 1867, manufacturing machines, both for making seamless hosiery and for making underwear; also topping machines, looping machines, and machines for making 'union suits.' Ours are distinctively hand labor-saving machines. Our factory, in the aggregate, is 305 feet long, forty feet wide and three stories high. We have adequate water power, nine months in the year; employing steam power for the remainder of that period; giving labor to 300 men. We have sold 100 machines a year to go to Germany. We se l none now in that direction. You may say: 'The latest tariff legislation has destroyed that part of our business.'"

An ounce of fact is worth a ton of theory. A New England protectionist manufacturer gives the foregoing incontrovertible testimony to the ruinous effect of the McKinley tariff upon a legitimate American industry.

The Big Foreign Market.

It is pleasant to the American farmer to watch the growing demand in Europe for his grain. During July there were exported from this country breadstuffs valued at $16,379,291, as against $10,733,669 in July, 1890. The exports of wheat were 9,418,775 bushels, compared with 4,360,554 bushels in July, 1890.

The great and only McKinley tries to belittle the foreign market, and asks, "What sanctity hangs about it?" Our farmers care nothing about the "sanctity" of the foreign market, but they find it just now a mighty good place to dispose of a wheat crop about 200,000,000 bushels too large for the boasted home market. McKinley's sneers about the foreign market will win small sympathy from them when they see how the big orders from Europe are causing wheat prices to mount upward.

But McKinley would never think of crying down the foreign market, if it were not that he has his high tariff law to defend. He knows that this law tends to contract our foreign market; hence his absurd attempt to show that it is no good.

But the big foreign market is vindicating itself. It seems certain now that when the present fiscal year ends on June 30, 1892, and our farmers count up their year's sales, they will find that the foreign market has taken a far larger quantity of our breadstuffs than ever before, and that it has compelled the home market to pay much higher than average prices.

This will all be in spite of our McKinleyism, not because of it. We should have a still larger and much steadier foreign demand for all foreign products if our tariff permitted us to buy more largely of European manufactured goods.

Protection Defeating Itself.

The greatest advantage which European manufacturers of woolen goods have over our manufacturers is to be found in their cheap raw materials. It is a serious fact that, while our tariff on wool is intended to equalize things, it has just the contrary effect, since it throws a large part of the world's wool into the European market, and enables the competing manufacturers of Europe to buy it at a much lower price than they would have to pay if our manufacturers were free to bid against them.

How this works may be seen from a report of the recent wool sales in London, in the following words:

"The great bulk of the East India wools are sold at auction in the Liverpool market. We have bought on the average, at each of these sales, from 4,000 to 4,500 bales. When the question of applying the sorting clause to carpet wools began to be agitated in the spring, importers were afraid to buy these wools at the May sales to any extent, because they are all sorted to a greater or less degree. Consequently but 900 bales were taken for America. English buyers being thus relieved of one of their greatest competitors, at once refused to pay the old prices, and values declined. At the July sales we took even a smaller amount, only 200 bales being bought. Values have in consequence further declined, and English manufacturers are now securing these wools at a lower price than they have paid for years. India wools are peculiar, and the purposes for which they are used cannot be supplied by any other grade."

The Ex-Czar on Reciprocity.

Tom Reed, the ex-Czar, has recently returned from a trip to Europe. On board ship he indulged in some very free-hand criticism of reciprocity. The editor of the Chicago Advance, who was his fellow-passenger, reports that the one-time Czar relieved himself in the following fashion on that subject:

"As to reciprocity, that is an attempt to carry on commerce by diplomacy. Two Secretaries strike a bargain with each other for their respective states. But the commercial world can only do business on great commercial principles, not on correspondence between state departments. Then again, if we must have a tariff to protect our business in New York City, how can we compete with the same rivals after we have shipped our goods to some distant republic in South America? If we cannot compete on equal terms here, it is preposterous to suppose that we can there. And it is equally preposterous to suppose that our neighbors will keep up a discrimination against other nations in our behalf."

Not a Fabrication.

Early in the year lists of reductions of wages were printed in many papers. At the time no general denial of these reductions was attempted, since many of them had been printed in protection organs themselves. Recently, however, an obscure organ in Kansas has printed what purported to be a denial from many of the manufacturers concerned.

One prominent Republican has evidently forgotten that such denials were being printed and circulated broadcast over the country by nearly all professional high-tariff organs. This is John L. Wheeler, of Red Bank, N. J., who has recently written a defense of the McKinley law. In this defense Mr. Wheeler has something to say about wages, and among other things he says: "The potters of Trenton have accepted a reduction of 10 per cent."

Yet this case of the Trenton potters was one of those which were denounced by the protection organs as "free trade fabrications."

The Protection Principle in Court.

The judges of the Cook County Appellate Court have recently rendered a decision at Chicago which is of very great importance in its bearing on the tariff question. The case involved the question of competition among stenographers. In its decision the court used this language:

"Any agreement which in its object or necessary operation tends to diminish competition as to anything the public have for sale or it is necessary the public should use is void. Public policy requires that the public shall obtain the things necessary for its use upon fair competition in a free and open market or under such rules and regulations as the public laws may prescribe."

The court said further: "Combinations looking to the destruction of competition have always been unfavorably regarded by the law, for it is manifest that without competition there can be no such thing as freedom of trade."

This decision leads the Chicago Herald to make the following timely reflections:

"The judges assume that freedom of trade is a good thing and that combinations are odious, not only when they destroy, but even when they tend to diminish competition. But a great political party which has for thirty years shaped the economic policy of this country assumes that it is not restriction of trade but freedom of trade that is odious. That party has formed an irresistible combination with classes engaged in the pursuit of certain industries to diminish competition and to compel people to pay more for certain things than they would have to pay under free competition. The Chicago judges agree with other able judges in condemning the policy of the party which has formed the greatest of all combinations for the suppression of competition, the destruction of freedom of trade and the practice of licensed extortion on the greatest scale possible. When the principles of justice are applied the trade policy of the Republicans will not bear the test one moment."

A Trained Alligator.

A very extraordinary wager is reported to have been made by Capt. J. R. Speer, a native of Jacksonville, Fla. He has trained an alligator fourteen feet long to obey him, has named it Jacksonville, Jr., and has made a bet of $5,000 that he will ride his alligator from Jacksonville down the coast, around the Everglades into the Gulf of Mexico, and up the west coast of the State to Apalachicola, making the distance (about 900 miles) in ninety days. He will make frequent halts for rest and food. It is reported that Capt. Speer started recently from Jacksonville, mounted on the alligator's back, and followed by a small steam launch, with medicines, provisions, the judges, and a time-keeper on board. Many wagers are said to depend upon the result.

THE continued jubilation of the protection organs over the low price of sugar leads the Boston Herald to remark: "If our high tariff friends continue in this state of enthusiasm over the fall in the price of sugar from the removal of the duties upon that article, isn't there danger that they will implant a desire in the minds of the public to try this experiment of reduction upon some other articles? We really fail to see how there is any possible escape from this logic. Thus a broad avenue may be opened to that fearful free trade which has before not been mentioned without a shuddering apprehension."

IT is said that a fund is being raised among the manufacturers of Pennsylvania to aid in the election of McKinley as Governor of Ohio. In this renewal of fry-the-fat methods the Republican magnates know where protection piles up fortunes and where it makes people poor. They turn naturally to the protected manufacturers for "soap;" but they cannot get up enough cheek to pass the hat around among the farmers. Should not the farmers be asked to pay something for McKinley's higher duties on wheat and corn?

THE high-tariff people need to be cautioned that the more they talk about the beneficence of free sugar, the greater the danger that there will be a popular demand for other things to be free which are now made costly by tariff taxes. The average person is so densely ignorant that he cannot see why, if it is a blessing for a poor man to have cheap sugar, it would not be a good thing for him to have cheap clothing, cheap provisions, and cheap everything else.—New York Times.

THE consumption of wool in Great Britain and in the United States in 1885 and 1889 was as follows:

	1885.	1889.
Great Britain..	366,000,000	469,000,000	Inc. 28 p.c.
United States..	400,000,000	385,000,000	Dec. 4 p.c.

Why is it that our high protection does not help us to outgrow England in manufacturing woolen goods.

SOME silly protection organs have the "gall" to say that "free trade" is selfish, and to claim that it is protection only that takes a large and unselfish view of the common good. But only one person in twenty is interested in protection. How can the interest of that one be claimed as the "common good" of the nineteen?

WE produce more iron and copper in the United States than is produced in any other country. How much longer will the people in this country who consume iron and copper submit to a policy which keeps those metals dear for home purchasers and cheap for foreign purchasers?—Philadelphia Record.

ALL of the 63,000,000 people in the United States are consumers, but not more than one-twentieth of them are protected producers. Legislation for the consumer is therefore legislation for all the people; legislation for the producer is legislation for one man in every twenty.

IF sheep vote in Ohio, will they vote for those who are proven to have engineered a drop of 3 cents in wool, that the woolen manufacturers might contribute to the protection party the money they skinned out of the Republican farmers?—New York World.

MAJOR MCKINLEY is still harping on the preservation of the home market, but he fails to tell his hearers that the home market is preserved for a few millionaire manufacturers at the expense of the remainder of the people.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE Merchants' Review, of New York, says than nine-tenths of all the industries of the country are controlled by combinations or trusts.

HEADS HIS OWN TROOPS.

BALMACEDA SURPRISED, BUT GALLANTLY FIGHTING.

A Desperate Conflict—Over 3,000 Casualties, with but 20,000 Troops Engaged—The Crisis Has Probably Arrived—Valparaiso Wild with Excitement.

In the Scale.

Even while the battle was raging, news reached this country of a collision between the Congressional and Government forces of Chili. The dispatch was sent from Valparaiso, and reads:

President Balmaceda and the Junta DeGobierno are clenched in the final desperate struggle for the mastery of the Republic of Chili.

The chosen battle grounds are in full view of the city of Valparaiso, and thousands of anxious eyes are watching from every point of vantage the battle which is to decide the fate of the country.

The battle has been raging practically for three days. The first engagement was at the mouth of the Aconcagua and resulted in a reverse to the Government.

The final test of strength is now being made at Vina del Mar Beach, directly across Valparaiso Bay and less than five miles away.

When the news reached here that an army of 8,000 rebels had been landed at Quintro Bay, Balmaceda and his generals were taken by surprise, but the utmost activity was used in getting troops to the front, so as, if possible, to prevent the invading army from crossing the Aconcagua River immediately south of the bay.

The arrangements were made hurriedly and only a little over half of the troops were available for this purpose. Six of the insurgent war ships were anchored in Cosnon Bay, at the mouth of the river, and under the cover of their guns the army of the Junta undertook the task of forcing a passage of the river.

A most desperate and bloody battle resulted, lasting nearly all day.

A galling fire from the insurgent artillery, which was formed on the northern bank of the river, aided by the heavy batteries and machine guns from the ships, was too much for the government troops and they were forced to retire, which they did in good order.

Both sides fought with the utmost valor and the desperate character of the battle may be judged from the fact that, while less than 20,000 troops were engaged, the list of casualties will foot up nearly 3,000 men killed and wounded.

Balmaceda found out that the insurgents are something more than "nitrate stealers." The general in command of the government forces selected a strong position on the beach of Vina del Mar, the eastern shore of Valparaise Bay, as his second line of defense, and leaving force enough in front of the enemy to check his progress somewhat, took his place there and went to work to strengthen it as much as possible.

All day long the insurgent forces pushed their way steadily forward, driving the comparatively small government force before them. It was a constant skirmish for fifteen miles over broken country.

At every point of vantage the Balmacedans made a stand, and while they were constantly forced to give way before superior numbers they retarded the advance, and gave the main army at Vina del Mar a chance to better prepare itself for the decisive fight.

It was not until late in the evening that the attacking army arrived in front of Balmaceda's line of defense.

It was then too late to give battle. In the meantime President Balmaceda, with every available man in this department, himself in command, went to the front. He had over 13,000 available fighting men, while the insurgent forces had been reduced to less than 7,000.

At the back of the government line is Fort Callao, the heavy guns of which have done good work, both in raking the enemy by land and preventing the insurgent fleet which had entered the bay from doing anything more effective than long range firing.

The Congressionalists attacked in force and the battle has raged with the utmost fierceness. The war ships did all they could to aid their land forces, but they had a healthy regard for the heavy guns in the forts, and were compelled to do their fighting at long range.

They sent as many men as they could spare, with all their available machine and rapid fire guns, to aid as a naval auxiliary brigade the attack on Balmaceda's position.

The most intense excitement prevails in this city. The roar of heavy artillery and the sharp rattle of small arms resound through the streets and are echoed back from the high hills surrounding the city. Everybody who is left here has sought some place overlooking the battle-ground, and thousands of people are watching the desperate struggle which is being fought under their very eyes.

The scene from Valparaiso is one of awful grandeur. A heavy pall of smoke hangs like a cloud over the contending armies. It is lit up almost continuously by sharp flashes of light from the cannon and rifles, and the thunderous roll of the artillery can be heard continuously.

FLOODED THE TOWN.

Fierce Storm at Pottsville Drives People to Their Garrets.

A cloudburst broke over Pottsville, Pa., and the water poured down in torrents for an hour. The culverts were unable to carry all the water, and portions of the town were flooded. Fully 400 families were driven to the upper stories of their homes, and the cellars and kitchens were filled with water and mud. The business portion of the town suffered greatly, the cellars of stores being filled with water. Railroads and streets were turned into rivers three and four feet deep, and the raging torrents carried all sorts of goods and debris down to the Schuylkill. It was the worst storm ever known in Pottsville. The damage is estimated at $100,000. Reports from Minerville, St. Clair, Port Carbon, Schuylkill Haven, Girardville and Mahanoy Plane tell the same story of devastation and damage by the rain and flood.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Crimes, Casualties, Deaths, Etc.

—At Milton, Oliver John shot and killed Thomas Dodd in a saloon fight.

—George Bowen's store at Mattsville, near Carmel, was burned down by incendiaries.

—Some person has poisoned the fish in the pond of Asher West, near Crawfordsville.

—There are seventy-five cases of typhoid fever reported from the vicinity of Charleston.

—Frank Morrison, of near Garfield, Montgomery County, had seventeen hogs killed by lightning.

—Farmer Krithline, near LaPorte, while beating a farm-hand, was seriously stabbed near the heart by the latter.

—Peter Morganthaler, a wealthy Fort Wane merchant, has been consigned to the Richmond Insane Asylum for treatment.

—Bert Dermon, about 17 years old, lost his left hand by coming in contact with a buzz-saw at the Greensburg handle factory.

—Patrick O'Brien, an O. & M. brakeman, was run over and killed at Shields. He was sent to flag a train and went to sleep on the track.

—Guy McPherson, an employe at the Structural Iron-works, at New Albany, had both eyes nearly burned out by a flash from the rolls.

—A bottle of ale exploded at the bottling works at New Albany and broke the bottle, one of the fragments cutting the eyeball of James Finzer in two.

—Hettie Thawley, housekeeper for L. N. Hendricks, of Franklin, fell and crippled herself on a broken doorstep, and sues her employer for $5,000 damages.

—John Darr, returning home near Goshen, was stopped by highwaymen, two of which held his horse and covered him with weapons while a third robbed him.

—Mary Loveless, aged 72, of Lafayette, has sued her 53-year-old husband for separate maintence. She alleges he has neglected her for her good-looking granddaughter.

—Hiram Simpson, an employe of the Centreton brickyard, Morgan County, fell under a moving fly-wheel and was crushed between it and the floor. He is perhaps fatally injured.

—William Orr, an old and respected citizen of White County, was instantly killed near Gurnsey, by the east-bound vestibule train. He is partially deaf and failed to hear the whistle.

—George Littell, a Greensburg horseman, has secured a genuine freak. It is a black filly, two years old, and perfectly formed in every respect, except that it is absolutely hairless, there being no tail, no mane and no hair on any part of the body. He secured it from a man near Batesville, in Ripley County. The dam was an Appaloosa mare and the sire an ordinary horse.

—With a majority of one, Muncie's City Council passed the saloon-screen ordinance, requiring all saloons to remove all screens and blinds from their places during legal closing hours. The ordinance has, for a long time, been hanging fire, and its passage is a great surprise, as it was thought to have been killed. The action is a result caused by the "wide-open" manner in which the saloons have recently been doing business on Sunday.

—Hiram Connard, of Crawfordsville, has received a proposition from a man in New York, offering to sell him counterfeit gold "so perfectly made that the best government experts have been unable to detect the fraud." It stated that Connard could take in a partner, but this proposition was to be considered strictly confidential. If the proposition should be accepted a telegram was to be sent to No. 135 East 110th street, New York. The fellow was very cautious in his proposition, and in offering to take $250 for $3,000 he omitted to say whether it was $3,000 or 3,000 something else. A newspaper clipping was inclosed, showing how perfectly made was the gold he offered. He cautioned Connard not to write to him.

—At Richmond, Walter Guyer was assisting Andrew Phillips, lineman for the Central Union Telephone Company, in putting up a new wire along Main street, when it came in contact with a wire running from the trolly wire of the electric street railway to a motor which propels the fans in a saloon. In an instant Guyer was flat in the gutter, giving utterance to the most inhuman cries. People ran to his assistance, but so thoroughly was he charged by the electric fluid that was fast burning out his life that they could not hold him. He had to lay and take the current with a coil of wire on his left arm. Phillips, the lineman, hurried down one pole and up another, cut the telephone wire, thus destroying the connection. When Guyer was taken to an undertaking establishment it was supposed that he was dead, but the doctors brought him to in the course of two hours. There is grave doubt of his recovery.

—John Almer, a saloon-keeper, died at Vincennes, and owing to his great size a coffin could not be secured to hold his body which weighs 389 pounds.

—The parents of Anna Harkes, who was killed by falling 300 feet from a balloon at Cincinnati, are poor but honest people at Brazil. The father is a miner.

—The onion crop raised by the farmers residing on the river bottom west of New Albany is said to be very large and fine this season. Four hundred barrels have already been shipped to Northern points.

—At Laketon, a station on the Chicago and Erie road, in Wabash County, the second section of freight train No. 90, east bound, ran into the first section, which was standing at the station. The first section had stopped to do some switching, and Conductor Howard Falk failed to send a flagman back. Engineer John Darr, of the second section, with his fireman, jumped in time to save their lives, but his engine, No. 500, was demolished, as were twelve loaded freight cars. The loss is not less than $20,000. All traffic was delayed ten hours, until a track was laid around the wreck.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

CHAPTER XIII.

JOE'S STRANGE VISITOR.

Monsieur Dufaur's bell rang.

One young lady entered, and two emerged from Dufaur's academy.

It rang again, and a maid servant—a pretty girl—looked out. The caller, a gentleman, retired jauntily. As the maid was closing the door a little girl approached her.

"Is Mr. Dufaur in?"

"Yes; but he is engaged at present."

The maid looked at the child suspiciously.

"Well, is Mrs. Dufaur at home?"

"Yes, but she is very busy just now."

"Well, then, the young lady—I forget her name—she's from Barnesville—is she in?"

"See here, I don't know anybody from Barnesville, and I've no time to answer your questions. Who are you, anyway, to ask such questions? Be off with you!"

"You needn't get so huffy just because a person speaks to you."

"A person! You a person!" The maid turned her nose in the air scornfully. "The impudence these little beggars puts on—it's amazing."

But the beggar was out of hearing. A minute later she was relating her experiences to Mr. Ike Jenks around the corner.

"No go, eh?"

"Jest froze me out."

"Humph, Jenny, you ought to sweetened her."

"No use tryin'. She ain't the kind that sweetnin' sticks to. I did all I could."

"Well—but you're sure Mr. Dufaur and his wife are engaged?"

"Dunno. I know a doctor pays Will Turnipseed to say he is engaged when he's snoozin' on a bare bench in his office."

"Well, there's a quarter."

Ike handed her the coin, and soon the girl disappeared from view.

"Point one. I'll go right up to the door now, myself."

"Ah! Pardon me. I, ah—called—ah—pray is Mr. Dufaur occupied just now?"

"You can see him in fifteen or twenty minutes."

"No matter—no matter. It did not occur to me—I dare say Mrs. Dufaur is occupied at this hour."

"Yes, sir."

"Ah! Very well, I will call again, unless——" the young man paused, then added, very deliberately, "the young lady from Barnesville is at liberty just a moment—I will not detain her a moment."

The maid courtesied.

"I will tell her—step inside a moment." And then the maid left him.

A minute late a young lady appeared, and led the way to the parlor. She looked at the young man in silence and with apprehension.

"Ah! Excuse me—but I have come to—can I speak to you in strict confidence? My name is—there is my card, miss."

He handed her a card on which she read the name, "Isaac Pratty."

"Certainly—what is it you want to say?"

She was very direct—came right to the point. He made a mental note of it.

"Why, I came to tell you, miss—excuse me, I do not know your name."

"No matter. It don't signify. Go on, sir."

"I came to warn you, there is a scheme against you, miss. I discovered it by the merest accident in a lawyer's office."

"What is it?"

"I can't tell. I know something's up, and knowing it was against a young lady from Barnesville, and hearing there was a young lady here from Barnesville, I took the liberty to warn you."

"What is it? Who is scheming?"

Joe's eyes flashed a look upon the visitor that puzzled him. Was she frightened, or was it suspicion that sat in her eyes. It looked like suspicion as the eyes read his, but it might have been terror.

Ike proceeded cautiously.

"I am not at liberty to tell. Maybe you would say it was mean in me to tell—but I can't help it. As for what is up, miss, that I don't know."

Joe looked at him in a puzzled way; it was plain now she was perplexed.

"Unless you know what I am to look out for, I don't see what I can do. I am obliged to you, sir."

She stood silent. Ike bowed, and withdrew.

When he was on his way home, he smiled to himself knowingly.

"That's all I want now. I've found her—she knows me. How she read me! That girl could pick me out of a million. I've put a bug in her ear, too. And I didn't give myself away. Isaac Jenks—you'll get along in the world—you'll do. You'll do."

And Ike pulled up his shirt collar and held his head a trifle stiffer. He was revolving a scheme—a beautiful scheme that was to surprise his uncle one day.

In the meantime Joe was pondering over the warning.

Who was he? A nice—a very nicely dressed young man he was, only she didn't like him, somehow. His eyes were disagreeable. Why, she couldn't tell. And why couldn't he have told her more? To come to warn her, and go away like that.

Of course it was the people at the poorhouse. Poor Joe did not know that it was a relief to the directors when a pauper ran away, walked off, or died. So the number was lessened, that was all they cared for.

Would she tell Madame? Why—to cause unnecessary alarm. There was no need just yet. By-and-by she would tell her. But maybe Zeke Caper would come some day and pick her up on the street. She must tell some one. It would not do to be carried off, and nobody know what had happened. That would look like running away—and to run away would be very, very mean.

But she would be on the lookout from this time forth. It was not often she had to go out; and she was always quick about her business. There was the music store; she was the messenger chiefly relied upon to go there. And the newsstand. She would not be harmed on the street. And she would be sure to look under the bed every night now, just to be sure that nobody was there in the pay of Mr. Caper, or Mr. Wonder.

At that instant she heard Madame Dufaur calling her name.

"My dear, I want you to go to the music-dealer for me—and call around at the dyer's, and see if my ribbons are ready."

The dyer's shop was in a narrow, poorly-lighted street. Joe remembered the night she called there with Madame Dafaur the place made an unfavorable impression upon her. There were so many ill-favored men and boys lounging near a place with bright-colored bottles in the window.

The bottles were filled with whisky and cheap wine. The gaslight back of the bottles made the contents gleam in the night.

"Bring me 'Ill Fares the Heart,' and any new song Mr. Gray recommends. And be sure to go round to the dyer's."

Joe put on a bonnet and a neat light sacque Madame had altered to suit her. The music was found in a few minutes. Then Joe went around to the dyer's. There was a hang-dog faced man at the door of the saloon she passed. She thought she had met the face somewhere. As she entered the dyer's, she tried to recall it, but failed.

When she emerged from the dyer's the street near the saloon was clear. She walked hastily but timidly passed the saloon. She thought "what if Mr. Caper is in there now!" But she was not molested.

And yet a footstep was dogging her's. The footstep skulked in the shadow—darted in hallways and doorways—crossed the street stealthily, followed her until she hurried breathless into Monsieur Dufaur's, thankful Caper had not kidnaped her.

Then the hound that dogged her hast-to a rendezvous appointed by Ike Jenks.

"Well, Old Blinker."

"It's all O. K."

"You must have had precious good luck."

"So I had. I wasn't on the lookout more than a quarter of an hour till the door opened, and out came a girl same as you told me to look for. She seemed awful 'fraid. Walked as fast as she could—to that music store near the Dutchman's Hall—you know where I mean."

"Yes—go on Blinker."

"She wasn't in there long—then she went round to—well past Dandy's saloon to the dyer's shop."

"Past Dandy's, eh?"

"She didn't waste no time in the dyer's nothur. She more 'n scooted home."

"That all?"

"Why, in course I was as near as I could get. I opened the door sly-like—and I heard the woman say she was sorry—she'd have to come to-morrow night again."

"Sure, Blinker?"

"I'll hope I may never——" Here Blinker swore a horrible oath.

"Now, then; I'll tell you what you must do, Blinker. You can loaf around there to-morrow evening, and get some of the gang to stay with you. You can make up some lie. Don't give the game away."

Blinker winked with so much mystery in his face as to justify the nickname.

"Catch me!"

"When you see her go into the store, or after she comes out, you lurch against her. Say you think she's your cousin—or a gal you've met. Leave the rest to me."

"Suppose the Bobby sees it?"

"O! that's all right—I've fixed him. That's a man my uncle knows—and he knows I know him. No trouble with him. I'd give $5—by George, I'll have him come down on you."

"See here, now. None o' that. That's playin' it too fine, Ike."

"What! Afraid of me?"

"No—no more nor you are afraid of me."

They looked at each other intently.

"This is a square deal," said Ike.

"I'm givin' straight goods," said Blinker.

"All right, then."

"No Bobby in mine, if you please. No cuttin' up rough, if you please. We kin manage without the Bobby seein' me, layin' hands on me. I don't like it," said Blinker.

"Look here, Blinker. I'll tell you a little ghost story. You remember Sam Dolan's hand—his right hand?"

"I ought to—I chawed his right thumb nigh off once."

"You look at the right hand of the new Bobby on that beat next time he passes you."

Blinker stared.

"'Tain't—'tain't Dolan come back to life. Why, he was drowned—shot for a river pirate. 'Twas in the papers."

"Was he? Maybe my uncle made a mistake. Wouldn't it be funny if he has. Maybe I've never talked to the new man. Maybe I was dreaming when an awful cute man got my uncle to help him get this chap fixed on the beat here."

Blinker looked at Ike in admiration.

"You've got a head for a Congressman, Ike."

"I tell you he's the man, but you know better than to blow it."

"It's worth too much to me. You bet I'll be mum on't. So he's the Bobby! Talk about the ghost in Hamlet, Ike—Lord! If Dolan only gave a little squeak, wouldn't the boys have a night of it? I'm in for anything now."

"Well—do as I say—I'll be handy somewhere, and then I'll manage all the rest, Blinker. Now, be sure you hang 'round the corner there!"

"You bet I will," said Blinker. How much is in this for me, Ike?"

"Oh!" said Ike, in a lordly way, "I'll see its all fair. I never go back on a friend."

Then the couple separated, Blinker to return to his vile haunts among thieves, and Ike repaired to a locality where he was in the habit of meeting conginial spirits.

Ike was in a very agreeable frame of mind that night. His thin lips puckered frequently as he twirled the light cane he held in his hand.

"Won't I paste it on my uncle's eye!—O! won't I, though?"

And the light cane struck his thin legs again and again.

"Won't I, though!"

CHAPTER XIV.

THE NICE YOUNG MAN, AND HERO.

Lawyer Jenks looked up when his nephew closed the door behind him the next morning shortly after the lawyer entered his office.

"Well?"

"I called at Mr. Dufaur's. I didn't see the person from Barnesville, though."

"You did it. What prevented?"

Jeremiah Jenks was biting his nails; scowling. Ike continued in an indifferent manner:

"Nothing much; only a matter of ten or twelve miles."

"Eh! What's that? Don't speak in riddles to me."

"I'm not. The girl isn't at home just now."

"Where is she?"

"She went away for a day or two with some friend of Mrs. Dufaur's."

"Humph! How did you find out?"

"From a girl that lives next door. No, I did not talk to her, but a man who goes with her did, and he pumped her for me."

"Humph!"

"I'm just telling you all I know."

"Humph!"

"I am giving you straight goods."

"'Straight goods.' Repeat that slang again and I'll discharge you. I will, so help me. How often have I told you to keep your slang for your low associates?"

"I'll try and remember."

"You'll remember."

"I'll remember."

"The girl—who told her?"

"The girl in Dufaur's, of course. They are thick as thieves."

"Humph!"

Jenks the uncle was chewing his nails savagely.

"Where does the friend live?"

"The girl didn't know."

"Humph!"

"See here—you don't believe me."

"No, I don't. You are lying."

The uncle and nephew looked fixedly at each other.

"If I am lying, that settles it."

Ike was returning to his desk in the back room, when Jeremiah called him back.

"Hold up your hand. Swear it's the truth."

"I'll hold up hand—but what's the use. The man that tells a lie will swear to it."

"No matter. You needn't swear. Now, then. If she's not there, when she comes back how will you know?"

"My friend will find out in a little while and let me know."

"No possibility of a mistake?"

"I'm pretty sure of it."

"If I call you in in a little while you know how to answer my questions."

"I guess so."

"That will do."

Half an hour later Job Wonder entered Jeremiah Jenks' office. The attorney received him cordially. His knuckles cracked as he creased his fingers and interlaced them.

"A pleasant day, Mr. Wonder. I'll have to disappoint you—but it will be only for two or three days. The person I have in view unfortunately is not in the city. She was sent away—to be gone a day or two."

"Humph!" said Job Wonder.

Now, although the lawyer had uttered a similar ejaculation recently while listening to his bright nephew, he did not relish it coming from another. He turned quickly to the farmer.

"You are not satisfied, sir?"

"No! Nor I don't think you'd be in my boots. I've come, I've waited, 'n nothin' to show for my time 'n trouble. I can't stop in New York long—got plenty things to look after at home."

"I am sorry I cannot show you the person I mean; it is not in my power to-day."

"About to-morrow?"

"One moment."

Mr. Jenks advanced to the door and called aloud:

"Ike—here a minute."

Ike responded promptly.

"You told me the young lady you called to see is out of the city for the present?"

"I did."

"Can you assure this gentleman when she will return?"

"No; except that she won't be away more than a few days."

"A few? How many do you call a few, young man?"

"Why, two or three."

"That settles it. I can't stay here three days."

Ike looked at his uncle. His uncle looked at the farmer.

"I have no more to say."

"If I thought the girl would be here to-morrow I'd stop over."

"Well, Ike, what's the chances?"

"Why, she's as likely to be back to-morrow as any day," said Ike, promptly.

"How'm I to know when she's back?"

"Give me the name of the hotel you are stopping at," said Mr. Jenks.

"I'll do that, 'n I'll cal'klate on seein' some of you 'fore this time to-morrow, so's I'll know whether to put off for home or stop over till night."

"Precisely. Well, we will try to give you notice as early as possible."

"All right. Good-mornin'."

And Job walked away, shaking his head, and saying to himself:

"I don't like these here lawyers a bit. Seems to me as if that fellow doesn't know his own mind. But what in thunderation did he bring me off here for? There wouldn't be no sort of sense in lyin' to me. I guess he's got on Joe's track, 'n is keepin' quiet about it."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

She Caught a Pickpocket.

A wealthy lady of New York was going down town in an elevated car, with a considerable sum of money in her purse. At one of the stations there came into the car a man by whose face she was struck, and she instantly said to herself that he must be a pickpocket. When he sat down deside her she thought of her well-filled purse, and resolved to watch him.

Suddenly her suspicious neighbor put his hand down at his side. She felt it slide down until it touched her purse, and instantly she put out her own hand and seized the stranger by the wrist. He did not struggle, and she was in some perplexity as to what she should do next, but she thought that if he should attempt to get away she could, at least, show that she had him by the wrist with his hand in her pocket.

She said afterward that she could not tell why she did not give an alarm at once, but she sat quiet, waiting for her neighbor to make the first move.

They rode in this way for some distance, when to her amazement the stranger at one of the down-town stations prepared to rise.

"If you will let go of my arm, madam," he said, with the utmost coolness, "I will get out here."

He half rose as he spoke, and to her utter consusion the lady discovered that his hand, instead of being in her pocket, was thrust into the pocket of his own ulster. The garment hung down so that his hand had pressed against her purse without being in contact with it, and she had been holding him by the wrist with do apparent excuse whatever.

She was overcome with confusion, but managed to say that she had thought his hand to be in her pocket. The stranger smiled and went out, while a gentleman near by leaned forward to say:

"Don't you know who that is, madam? That is Rev. Dr. Blank."

A Sad Appeal.

A middle-aged, healthy-looking man, who had called at the Postoffice for a letter several days running, returned yesterday with the usual inquiry, and was answered as before:

"No letter for you."

"Are you quite sure?" he earnestly asked.

"Oh, yes."

"Alas! but I can't make it out!" sighed the man. "I should have had one Monday, and this uncertainty unnerves me."

"Expecting to hear from some of your friends? queried the clerk, touched by his despondency.

"Yes—my wife."

"She is away from home?"

"Yes, in Buffalo."

"Any one ill?"

"No, not exactly."

"But you were so anxious I thought it might be a case of life or death."

"It is, almost. You see, she cooks in a restaurant and sends me $5 per week to live on here, and this is the first time in six months I have missed a letter on Monday. I don't know what to think. She may be ill—she may be out of a job—she may have gone back on me. I may even have to go to work again and earn my living! Advice to the Girls.

Girls talk and laugh about marriage as though it were a jubilee, a jolly, gladsome thing, a rose without a thorn. And so it is, if it is all right, if they go about it as rational beings, instead of merry-making children. It is a serious thing to marry. It is a life business, and that of heart and happiness. Therefore never do it in haste; never run away to get married; never marry for wealth, or standing, or fine person, or manners, but only for character, for worth, for the qualities of mind and heart which make an honorable man. Take time, think long and well before you accept any proposal; consult your parents, then some judicious friend, then your own judgment.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.........AUGUST 27, 1891.

ROME CITY expects to have a big new hotel next year.

SEYMOUR, Ind., has raised its largest crop of nutmeg melons this year.

STRAWBERRIES are now getting ripe in Alaska. America is a great country.

GOLD and silver have been found in Kiowa county, Oklahoma; how much is not known.

SLIGHT frost reported in the northwest and in the southwest, Sunday morning. No damage.

GREAT cyclone last week on the island of Martinique. Estimate 300 killed and 1,000 injured.

CANADA has a big wheat crop as well as ourselves. Will have about 33,000,000 bushels for export.

WHY would "importers raise $500,000 to defeat McKinley," if the foreigner pays the tariff? There are a great many things a republican editor can't answer, and this is one of them.

THE Wabash road lost over 1,000 feet of track near Kansas City last week, by the undermining waters of the Missouri river. Will use the Santa Fe tracks till they can repair damage.

HARRISON made a speech at Albany, last week, in which he admitted that the foreign wheat market is our hope for good prices. But he was elected on the assertion that a home market was what we needed.

THE republican state convention of Pennsylvania last week approved Harrison's administration, but gave its best wishes to Blaine for his "brilliant statesmanship, etc." Also endorsed the top-notch tax McKinley bill.

THE home market humbug ought to be understood now, when farmers see wheat run up to over $1 under the influence of a big prospect for a foreign demand. If we had to rely on a home market now, with such a big crop, where would we be?

DEMOCRATS have always wanted reciprocity of trade with the whole world. Republicans said it would ruin us. Now they are tickled half to death because Blaine wants reciprocity with a very few of the poorer nations. If such a small amount of democratic business ideas can so tickle them, how would they stand the complete adoption of the democratic plan?

THE secretary of the great Harney Peak Tin Mining Co. was in Chicago the other day. He said their mines there have valuable ore of the best quality but it is still in doubt whether the quantity is sufficient to make it pay. We don't know how our republican editors are going to explain this new failure of the McKinley bill to provide the needed amount of tin ore.

REPORTS of a hard battle Sunday, between government forces and rebels at Valparaiso, Chili. It was not decisive.

THE Dispatch argues that the McKinley high tariff is a good thing because it claims, there is not as great an amount of dutiable goods brought into this country now. This would mean that our government loses that much revenue. Is this a cause for rejoicing? Also, it says 87 millions more of free goods come in nine months now than in the same time time before. Again the government loses that much revenue, say about forty millions. Is that a cause for rejoicing? But the avowed object of the McKinley bill was to cut down the amount of goods imported. And the Dispatch boasts that it has worked the other way.

THE "Mail" at Columbia City has changed hands, and none too soon. It was fast becoming, or rather it had always been, a stench in the nostrils of the decent people of that enterprising and intelligent little city. Its tendency and its contents, were disgusting and the COURIER has just cut it off from its exchange list as unworthy. We reserve the right to reconsider this step, if the new management shows as we hope it may, any signs of a healthy improvement. The reading public has become too intelligent, and society is constituted on too correct a basis, to demand, or even tolerate newspapers of the style of the Mail. We hope the new manager may trim his sails for a better breeze, than did his predecessor.

Shall We Decorate?

Certainly. We ought to decorate our city at the time of the fair, or at least the most prominent parts of it. There are many prominent points in town, and a number of streets along which many visiting strangers will come. In particular there are our two principal streets, Main and Seventh. These should show tasty decorations from end to end and on both sides. The homes should be made gay and beautiful with bunting and other emblems, and business rooms should be decorated. We all have more or less of these decorations on hand, such as flags, red, white and blue drapery, paper decorations, etc. And we can get more no doubt. Let us all take hold and show our visitors when they come to the fair, that we have some interest in it. Let them see a little city that is bright and beautiful with decorations and fluttering with holiday attire. Let Auburn have on her best bib, her prettiest hat, and have her bangs crimped up in the most approved fashion.

Low Rates to Detroit.

The Lake Shore Railway will sell low rate excursion tickets to Detroit and return, August 25 to Sept, 5, account of the fair and exposition. Good going day of sale and to return until Sept. 5, inclusive.

Notice.

Persons knowing themselves indebted to me, will confer a great favor by calling and settling the same at once. Capital is one of the first laws in the business world, and if those who have accounts with me do not cancel their obligations at a reasonable date, I will have to place my claims in the hands of a collector.

NORTH OF PUBLIC SQUARE.

Thanks for Good Words.

A letter received last week from J. Grenville Mott, one of our former and well known citizens, gives another good word to the enterprising spirit of the COURIER and the industry and talent of Mr. McIntosh. Speaking of our "Early Reminiscences" he says: I am glad to see that someone is taking the trouble to go through the old official, society, and the church records, unearthing and publishing details of the early history of Auburn and vicinity, which will if continued, down to, say the close of the war, make a valuable work. It is just such a work, with its list of names of founders of this or that society, or political work—lists of marriages, deaths, etc., which is really valuable, and most of the so-called county or local histories give very little attentions to such details though far more important than mere biography and anecdote. Anyone who has ever looked through the local histories in the east, covering the period before the revolutionary war, realizes how important are the poll lists, militia rolls, church memberships, grand and petit jury lists, tax lists, etc.—Not very lively reading perhaps, but just what one wants in such a history."

For ourself and Mr. McIntosh, we wish to say, we are thankful for such encouraging words. At the very outset it was plain to us both, that the work undertaken was a vast one, entailing much labor, thought and of course expense. And the vast amount of search through old and oftentimes very imperfect records and similar material can hardly be estimated by those who have never tried it. The articles as now arranged and published in the COURIER look easy enough to read over, and seem as natural as if they had always been so arranged. The great difficulty of putting them into this shape, could best be seen by standing over the author while he collects his material for one of them, gathering them up from the four quarters of the county. It reminds one of the remark the Scotch Highlander made to a tourist visiting his hilly country: "Ah, if you could have seen these roads before they were made."

Ancient Papers Wanted.

We want copies of DeKalb county papers of any sort published in 1856, '57 and '58. Any party having such copy will confer a favor by sending the same to this office. They need not part with the ownership of the papers. If they can lend them for a short time that will do. And any help that can be given us will be thankfully accepted. It should be held as a sacred duty, that everything that can be done to make this work complete and satisfactory should not be omitted or forgotten. It will be a favor to us, and a greater favor to posterity.

Another Fire.

About eleven o'clock last Friday evening, people were awakened by the fire bell. The light shone out from the north end of town, and it was soon found that Frank Wetowskie's dwelling was on fire, and so far gone it could not be saved, though the neighbors got out a part of the household goods. The fire department got out in even quicker time than usual, but nothing could be done. There is a doubt as to the origin of the fire. His wife was absent on a visit, and he and his son were sleeping when the fire was discovered, There was a small lamp burning, and when the neighbors got in it was found extinguished and lying on the floor, so it is believed by some that the lamp was knocked off the table by a cat that was sleeping in the room. Others believe that the house was struck by lightning in the sharp thunder storm that came up and passed over about the time the alarm was given. The dwelling was a good one, one of the best in that part of town, and it will be quite a loss to Mr. W. He also lost about $65 in money, that in the confusion, he forgot to take out. There was an insurance on the property of $1,000, in L. J. Gengler's Garrett agency.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The numerous exciting events in the yachting world, and the keen popular interest shown this season in the noble sport, make the paper on "New York Yachts and Yachtsmen," in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for September, peculiarly interesting and timely, The illustrations include some spirited views of the wonderful new Herreshoff yacht Gloriana, and a fine portrait of the late Edward Burgess, the lamented designer of the Queen's Cup defenders, etc. This number of the magazine also contains illustrated articles upon the Mare Island Navy Yard, by Ensign J. M. Ellicott; "Under Four Flags" (old Cahokia) by M. C. Williams; "Through Central Asia in War Time," by David Kerr; "The Short and Simple Annals of the Poor," by D. V. S. Eyers; "Feathered Gems" (Humming Birds) by Nelly Hart Woodworth; the conclusion of Scott Campbell's serial, "John Maggs, Barbarian," etc.; together with numerous short stories, sketches, literary and scientific miscellany, and poems.

VALUABLE LETTERS.

About Next Week's Teachers' Institute.

The following letters from County Superintendents of schools who have had Dr. Hedley in their lecture courses speak for themselves:

FROM GEO. B. LORD, VENANGO CO., PA.

"The 'Sunny Side of Life' attracted a large audience, and gave the best satisfaction. Everybody was satisfied with his wit, humour and good hard sense."

FROM SUPT. F. H. SLYDER.

"Dr. Hedley has lectured twice before our annual Institute to the extreme satisfaction of all. His 'Heroes and Heroism' was a rich treat. It gives me no little pleasure in being able to recommend him to my brother superintendents as a man who will give value received every time"

FROM B. C. YOUNGMAN, CLEARFIELD CO., PA.

"Dr. James Hedley delivered his lecture on 'Heroes and Heroism' in our institute course Dec. 15, 1890, and gave excellent satisfaction. It was the Doctor's second appearance before a Clearfield audience, and the very favorable impression made the first time was not the least impaired by a second appearance, and we believe our people are competent judges."

FROM SUPT. S. TRANSOM.

"It affords me great pleasure to bear testimony to the eloquence of Dr. James Hedley. His 'Sunny Side of Life' is indeed a treat to listen to. He held his audience in the best of humor for about two hours."

Once More into the Breach.

The festive burglar is still at large and evidently trying to make the most of his opportunities. Saturday night there was a persistent attempt to break into the residence of Henry J. Shafer on West Seventh street. He and his wife heard a noise, at the window on the east side of the house, and struck a light which seemed to frighten them away. But later on, they returned, and this time, Mrs. S. only was awake, and she distinctly heard them raise and lower the sash so as to find just where the lock of the window was placed. Having located the lock, the fellow stuck the point of a knife, or something of the kind against the pane, punching a hole in it, and shivering the glass in such a way that the pieces could be pried out by getting under their points. This would have left a space into which a hand could be inserted and the sash bolt or lock drawn. But Mrs. S. roused her husband, and the fellows were again driven off. He'll be ready for the next one.

A Hard Legal Fight.

The Aldrich case closed last Friday afternoon by a verdict from the jury acquitting the defendants, Hubbard and Krum. The case as we once before stated, grew out of a trouble at Edgerton, Ohio, last March. The marshal was trying to arrest a man, and as the man resisted, the marshal called for help. Mr. Aldrich, who resides in Butler, on this side of the state line, helped the marshal to take the man to the jail. Friends of the arrested man got angry at Aldrich for this, and it was claimed that Hubbard, a well known horse dealer, said in the presence of several persons, that he would pay $10 to anyone who would thrash Aldrich. As Aldrich went to get on the train for home that evening, two men knocked him down, while a third threw a stone that struck him in the head before he could rise. For this, the men were arrested and punished in a criminal suit in that, Williams, county. Then Aldrich sued for civil damages, making Hubbard and Krum defendants, as there was a question as to the present ownership of nine horses Hubbard had on hand since the trouble. The point was to make it appear that the assault on Aldrich was caused by Hubbard's offer to pay $10. But the jury decided that Hubbard was not guilty. At least, that was the substance of the verdict. The evidence was very conflicting and it was believed by many, that the jury would fail to agree. It was a hard fought case from the start, able counsel being employed on both sides. Aldrich had Judge McClellan, W. L. Penfield and Judge Bowersox of Bryan. The defendant had Judge Allen Zollars, of Ft. Wayne, A. J. Baxter of Butler and J. W. Baxter of this place. All worked hard for their clients, and the pleas of the six men are reported to have been very strong. Scores of witnesses were examined, and many depositions read, the trial covering nearly four weeks. It is believed to be the longest jury trial ever had in the county, as they had been kept there 21 days. It was a very hard job, as the weather was extremely hot most of the time But they stood it very well, only one man getting sick, David Hough who suddenly took ill just after the verdict was brought in. The suit has been very expensive, the costs for jury alone will foot up nearly $600.

Three Cheap Harvest Excursions.

On August 25th, September 15th and 29th, low rate harvest excursions will be run from all stations on the Wabash railroad to the great farming regions of the west, northwest, south and southwest. ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

Mrs. Dr. Adams is improving slowly.

Remember the dinner at the M. E. church next Tuesday.

Peanuts, freshly roasted, nice and hot at Salyers'. Buy a package.

Attention of the ladies, is called to Miss Myers' new millinery goods, just here.

Try Salyer's fresh roasted peanuts. They are a treat. The fire is always going.

Hon. E. D. Hartman returned yesterday after several days absence on business.

Don't forget the sale of household goods at Mrs. Headley's on Thursday Sept. 3.

The Misses Eula and Mabel Bean, of Lagrange, are in the city the guests of Mrs. B. C. Robbins.

J. D. Rowley and Samuel VanZile, two of the COURIER's solid friends were in town yesterday.

We have a letter from Annice Leas at Cleveland, where she is studying the new styles in millinery.

Work on both the Shaffer block and the extension to the Draggoo building, is going forward satisfactorily.

See the big notice of Hoff, the grocer. He is in his new room on the old site from which the fire had driven him.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. Barns Friday from 2 to 5. All earnestly invited.

D. Y. Husselman and H. H. Weaver, had a big time fishing Tuesday, at Lintz' lake, and caught a fine lot of fish.

Mrs. Coder and daughter Isa, are in town visiting the family of Elias Zimmerman and other friends. Their home is in Cleveland.

Dr. Swarts is off to Kendallville to-day to advertise the fair. Big banners will be put up at all the neighboring towns. That means business.

G. M. Ralston was at Rome City over Sunday. It was a gloomy day and the time dragged wearily till at evening, a party of young people were gathered and time flew at a lively rate after that.

Price D. West, has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late D. C. Headley. Mr. W., is a rising young attorney, and capable business man, and we think the choice a good one.

Salyer's "ready roaster" for peanuts is always filled with nice hot "Goobers" the very fragrance of which will make one's mouth water. It don't cost any more to get nice warm peanuts than cold raw ones. Try them.

After a good shower or two in the last days of the week, Sunday morning came in with a rain that lasted all that day, all night and a great part of the next day, leaving the ground in good shape and the weather cooler, yet pleasant.

Sebastian Tustison, east of the St. Joe River, has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Dr. Shirey, of his neighborhood. Mr. Tustison is one of the earliest settlers in the county and has always resided in that part of it.

The Auburn friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Urie, will be pleased to know that they are once more located in DeKalb, he being now the Lake Shore agent at Butler. They write that all their old friends will be gladly received at their new home.

Miss Julia Hodge having recently graduated at the Wyoming Seminary, in Pennsylvania, is at home once more. We are told she passed with high honors. Her many friends will be glad to welcome her home and none more so than the members of her club, the L. L. C.

The social given by the ladies of the Catholic church on the lawn at Wm. McIntyre's residence Saturday evening, was a very pleasant affair, and was well attended. The pleasant grove and beautiful surroundings were made still more enjoyable by the courtesy and attention the ladies bestowed on their guests.

Miss Olive Nelson and Miss Florence Hollopeter, the latter of Garrett, returned last week from their trip to Niagara Falls. They say they had a most enjoyable time and pronounce the Falls a grand wonder. They also stopped off at Chautauqua, which famous resort, they say is the most beautiful they ever visited.

MEDICAL SUCCESS.

The Wonderful Work Achieved by Dr. Fruth and His Assistants.

As stated in last week's papers, Dr. Fruth, 89 East Madison street, has returned from his professional appointments in Jackson, Ann Arbor and Detroit, Mich., and has since been busily engaged with his extensive practice. That Dr. Fruth's popularity with the general public has not decreased, can readily be seen by a visit to his handsome offices at the above address, where large numbers of persons can be found at all hours, waiting to consult with him on the various diseases which he has made his specialties. By skillful treatment of the various cases brought under his care, Dr. Fruth has built up one of the largest practices in the west. The newspapers daily have an account of some individual case in which he has been eminently successful. They are only a few among the many hundreds of cases which Dr. Fruth treated successfully during the past year. He has gained for himself and the institute, an enviable reputation in this and adjoining states.—The Post.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

AND

Stomach and Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

Mrs. Ida J. Sherlock.

The Waterloo optician, C. J. Porter, will be at the Hollister House in Auburn on Tuesday of next week. Don't forget the date, Sept. 1. He will fit glasses for your eyes so they will be a benefit.

The K. & B., cigar is a winner. Good tobacco and first-class workmanship have gained for this brand, a reputation not to be excelled by any in this part of the country. Try one, and you will use no other.

If you want the highest grades of candy, nuts, oranges, tobaccos, cigars, pies, cakes, sandwiches, hot coffee and soft drinks of all kinds. You will find Cora Shugers' stock up to the standard of competition. 32t

The Waterloo fair has secured special trains over the Lake Shore, from Wauseon on the east to Goshen on the west. The Jackson road usually holds its local freight so as to accommodate those who cannot go on the passenger trains. tf

Rev. E. H. Shanks, of Ft. Wayne, made this office a pleasant call, Monday. Aside from his regular ministerial work, he is representing D. H. Baldwin & Co., in sale of fine musical instruments. He is a young man of marked musical ability, and will no doubt be successful in the field of labor he has chosen.

Rev. W. A. Perrins, of New London, Ohio, preached at the Baptist church, Sabbath morning and evening. The gentleman is a highly educated man and his discourse in the morning was exceptionally deep and absorbingly interesting. The congregation, however, was somewhat limited on account of the inclement weather.

Ft. Wayne business men are complaining that famers bring their grain to Auburn, from all the north part of Allen county. Of course they do. Auburn pays better prices, and farmers know the value of being permitted to choose their place of marketing. They know the advantages of free and unrestricted trade when it comes to any matter they themselves have to handle. And it takes a good market to beat L. J. Miller, the Auburn wheat buyer. Auburn is probably to-day, the best grain market in this section.

Artistic Furniture, Fine Carpets, Baby Carriages, Toilet Sets and Lamps. On the above lines of goods the Foster Furniture & Carpet Co., Ft Wayne, Ind., are the largest dealers in any of the Western states. Fort Wayne, LaFayette, Terre Haute, Ind., and Jackson, Mich. They handle only the best made goods. A poorly made article is never permitted to darken the door. Their business is done on the one price principle, so that a child can purchase of them as safely as the shrewest shopper. On purchases amounting to $25 and upwards they ship goods to any point within fifty miles of any of their stores with freight charges prepaid.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

Everybody should hear the annual institute sermon by Dr. F. J. Bassett, at the Opera House next Tuesday evening Sept. 1st.

Wm. Willson and family, who reside in Plymouth, Ohio, were here last week the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Salyer, who are relatives.

A Defiance county man was over here a week or so ago, and bought three buggies at the Kiblinger factory, one being a two seated rig.

Capt. Wm. Baughan died last Friday morning after an illness of several weeks. He had never recovered from a stroke of paralysis he had some time in June.

It is claimed a man in Fairfield has seven buggies or carriages, as he makes a point to supply each of his sons with one, while keeping one or two for himself and wife.

Bowlby, one of the burglars who shot Seitz, the night watch at Ligonier a few days ago, has given himself up. He says his partner, Smalley, did the shooting. Officers are hunting for Smalley.

We are continually receiving new goods of all kinds, and our trade is steadily increasing because, selling for cash, we can undersell all other dealers in our line of business, at the Fair, Garrett, Ind,

B. F. Stahl, the South Side barber, is a hustler. He now carries one of the most popular lines of cigars in the city, and puts on the board as a drawing card the Kessler Bros'. make, which are acknowledged to be the best.

Our little friend Birdy Spitler, is now clerking in the grocery store of Schnell & weeks. He is a bright, active and very intelligent lad, and we look some day to see him gain a highly remunerative competence in his chosen avocation.

We hope all our citizens who can, ladies and gentlemen, will give a part of their time to the institute next week. It will as usual, be a great literary treat and in every way as good as a term of school, a thing that few can afford.

Sunday morning loomed up dark and gloomy. The gentle rain came down so silently and penetratingly that going out on the street was next to impossible. In consequence the congregations at the various churches were alarmingly limited.

The M. E. ladies of the middle section will give a dinner Tuesday Sept. 1st. in the basement of the church. Dinner from 12 o'clock to 1. An elegant bill of fare will be placed before you, consisting of roasts, soup, vegetables and many other good things. Mite 15cts.

No court this week. The judge will be here next Monday to pass on certain points raised in the Aldrich case, but will do no other work. Saturday of next week is the last day of this term. The next term begins the first Monday in October, that is the 5th day of the month.

The L. L. C. will meet with Miss Julia Hodge, Saturday September 5. Program: Macaulay's Life and Letters, pages 201 210; Passion Play at Ober Ammergan, Mrs. Zimmerman; Reading, Merry Mount, Mrs. Hull; Composite story, Miss Ralston, Mrs. Leasure and Mrs. Hodge.

Several of our exchanges are publishing pictures of that "Kite shaped race track at Sturgis, Mich." It is a funny looking track, with the small end to be used only for "scoring." Judging from the great amount of "scoring" usually indulged in for so small an amount of real trotting, our opinion is the long end of the track should be used for scoring. The little loop would easily hold all the trotting.

We ought never to overlook or ignore a good deed, but we came near doing this when we overlooked the fact that our friend, Salyer, at the restaurant got up the "supper for the crowd," a week or so ago, when the new order was organized at the K. P. Hall. It was a very graceful thing for a brother K. P. to do, and we have no doubt the brethren all appreciate his and his wife's wholehearted hospitality.

Mrs. Fannie W. Leiter of Mansfield, Ohio, will lecture Monday evening of the county institute. Mrs. Leiter is spoken of in the following highly complimentary terms: "She has a carefully and exactly trained intellect, a finely cultivated taste, with manners at once simple and dignified. Her mind is awake and alive to the interests of the time; and, though cautious, she holds regarding them positive opinions and acts decidedly. As a christian woman she moves in the higher planes, loving and living in the noblest things. She is an eloquent and impressive speaker.

J. P. Widney came over from Ohio last week for a visit with the old neighbors. He takes a good deal of interest in the pioneer sketches in the COURIER, as he was among the very first to settle "on the river." Of all the married men who came into this county in those early days, he is probably the earliest settler now living. Mr. Samuel Wasson the earliest settler living came into the county a single man, while Mr. Widney was married. Though only 21 at time, he was picked up and made to serve as judge on the first election board there in 1837, and carried the first returns to Auburn. His list showed 30 votes. The only other voting precinct in the county was on Fish Creek, at the Houlton settlement in the nor heast part of Franklin township. Old Mr. Boyer brought in the returns of the nine votes cast there, and both sets were delivered to Mr. Parks at Auburn, he having been appointed sheriff for the new county, by the governor. Mr. Widney's recollection is, that the first election in the county, was thrown out for some sort of irregularity the nature of which he cannot now remember.

Col. Bain, the "Silver Tongued Orator of Kentucky" at the institute next week. He lectures Wednesday evening in place of Mr. Leland, who is sick.

Wanted! Wanted!! Wanted!!! at the Auburn Woolen Mills, all the wool we can get. Highest market price, don't forget it. 19tf

Now let us cut off the weeds in the odd places along the streets. Do it before the fair, so the town will look even cleaner than usual.

There will be a gospel temperance meeting at the court yard next Sabbath at 4 p. m. Good music and address by Rev. J. M. Davis, of Garrett.

PUBLIC SALE: There will be a public sale at Mrs. Headley's residence on North Main street on Thursday, Sept. 3 beginning at 1 p. m. She will sell a vast amount of household goods that day, and it will pay to be there.

Judge and Mrs. McClellan start to-day for a trip around the Lakes. They will also visit the friends in Detroit, making their visit last a week or two. It is a pleasant time of the year for such a trip and we hope it may prove enjoyable.

L. J. Gengler, of Garrett, was over here Tuesday, bringing with him, Mr. Armstrong, the adjuster of the Germania Insurance Company, to adjust the loss of the Wetowskie fire. Mr. W., gets the full amount, $1,000. That is encouraging.

Mrs. Frank Shugers, Mrs. Cory Shugers and Miss Della Shugers returned last week from their visit at Congress, Ohio. A sister of the former, Mrs. Palmer and her little daughter returned with them and will remain until after the fair.

Miss Lydia Teeters was visiting a few days in their old neighborhood last week. Among those on whom she called were Mrs. Michael Whetsel, Misses Olive and Estella Mason. Her visit was a pleasant one and brought up many memories of the past.

J. W. Doty has been agent for that excellent agricultural paper, the Orange—Judd Farmer, for several years. He will be at the Auburn fair as agent, and take subscriptions at reduced rates. Don't forget this, for it is an extra chance to get a good paper cheap. 34-36

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

Lovers of the useful, and the beautiful, will be gratified if they attend the Auburn fair that opens here Sept. 7. Ample accommodations are prepared for all who wish to exhibit at the Auburn fair. Send to the secretary, Cal. Husselman, at Auburn for information, or call on him and get the space or location you desire.

The entry books of the Auburn fair are now open and the secretary will be in his office in the Nicky & Gandy Hall, over the Boston Clothing store, every day for the transaction of any business connected with the fair. Make your selections now and make your entries early. This will be the first and largest fair of the season and the officers desire everything to move along smoothly and hum as they go. Remember the date Sept. 7 to 11.

Will Harris bought a package of meat of Scott & Wetowskie, Monday evening just after dark, and put it into his buggy. From there he drove up to Hebel's and stopped in there just long enough to get some groceries he needed. On coming out and getting into the buggy, he naturally looked to see if his meat was still there. But it wasn't. Some sneak thief had taken it and he went back and got another package. Some one in Auburn is living cheap.

Al. Umber was the means of preventing a conflagration in the south division of the Kiblinger carriage factory a week ago Sunday morning. He usually comes up town that day to get his morning paper, which is left there by the newsboy. After entering the factory he noticed smoke, and set about finding where it came from. After some search he found it originated in the trimming room, and had got to burning on the joists etc., at a lively rate. It was put out, and a serious loss avoided. It is beleived it was caused by the spontaneous combustion of some oily rags, accidentally laid aside.

Mrs. W. S. Silver, a former resident of Bluffton, died in Washington state last week. They had been living there but a short time, as Mr. S. had an appointment out there from the federal government. As she died of typhoid fever they were not permitted to bring her home, and she was buried in the far northwest. Our people will remember Mr. Silver, as a brother of Capt. P. W. Silver and he was a practicing attorney in Bluffton before going west. Waterloo people will remember Mrs. Silvers as Eva Lacey, daughter of Rev. Mr. Lacey who was pastor of the M. E. church there some years ago.

J. J. Higgins so long publisher of the Butler Review has sold out to O. H. Downey, formerly of Churubusco. This move was a surprise to everyone, as all supposed Mr. H. was suited with his business and its prospects. He certainly has made it a decided success, for the Review, under his management has been the best paper Butler ever had. We are sorry to lose Bro. Higgins from the profession, for he has been a courteous, wide awake editor and good democrat, one who not only voted as he wrote but wrote as he voted. We wish him well in whatever line of business his future may be cast. Mr. Downey comes to the county as a comparative stranger, but with a considerable experience in newspaper work. We have no doubt he will continue the Review in its career of success, and to that end the COURIER wishes his new venture all success.

Mrs. Morrison, who has been visiting her people, the family of Isaac Johnson, returned Saturday to her home in Chicago.

J. Beuret for screens that will stand the usage of more than one season. Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere. 19tf

Dr. Allen has sold his north lot to C. E. Emanuel who will erect a residence on it. It will make a pleasant place for a home.

A few dollars invested in screen doors will add greatly to your comfort during the hot months of summer. J. Beuret has them, and don't you forget it. 19tf

The commissioners met Saturday to see about some bridge matters. A new bridge is to be made over Cedar Creek, near J. C. St. Clair's in Grant township.

Geo. Hough, of Omaha has been here a few days, the guest of C. E. VanAuken and family. He was formerly a resident of Pleasant Lake and was once Sheriff of Steuben county.

The New Process Vapor stove sold by Beuret is the latest invention in household labor saving stoves. The simplest, easiest and safest. Go and see it for yourselves, at Beuret's, Auburn.

Dr. T. J. Bassett, Dr. George Brown ex-president of the State Normal, and Sadie Tarney of the chair of methods and psychology in the state normal, will be the day instructors at the county institute. 32tf

Parties who want printing done for the fair, should be hustling to get it done before the rush begins. They may need cards, bills, dodgers and similar work, that could be done as well now, as when the time comes and everybody is in a hurry. Bring on your work in time.

Secure your stables at the fair. The secretary will help you all he can. Make your entries with him and get as much of the work done before the fair opens, as you can. It will save delay and may save mistakes that may be made when business is rushing.

PLAIN SEWING: Mrs. L. Cone, will do plain dressmaking and sewing, and asks the ladies of Auburn to give her a share of the work, which she will do in a neat, substantial manner and at fair rates. Call on her at her rooms at T. J. Saxton's on South Jackson street.

Mrs. Alice Imler in the north part of town will weave carpets for those needing this work. Striped carpet for 10 cents a yard, hit-and-miss, for 9 cents. Good carpet made with 1¼ pounds of rags to a yard. If not convenient to call on her drop a postal and she will call on you and get the material. 32tf

It is funny, but nevertheless it is dame rumor's report that one of Auburn's vivacious blondes is receiving the attentins of a brave American, who experiences no little embarassment on account of the young lady's small brother who monopolizes the anxious suitor's time, thus compelling the fair damsel to chew her gum alone and talk to herself. Auburn is full of boys with conceptive brains and don't you forget it.

Auburn Fair, September 7 to 11.

Ladies call in and see the pretty new fall hats at Harter's.

James Griswold is putting up a large addition to his residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sheets had relatives from Butler visiting them Sunday.

Miss Laura Ober is off on her visit with friends in Nebraska and Missouri.

Miss Rosella Baker of Ft. Wayne, has been here a few days, a guest in the family of Wm. McIntyre.

Douglas Kelley and his sister Mary, together with Mr. Albert Smith, visited the family of Dr. Adams, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Hanna and Alza Ralston went up to Angola Saturday to spend a few days at Crooked Lake.

Mrs. Charley Klotz of Van Wert, has been here a few weeks, attending her father, Capt. Baughan, during his last illness.

Mrs. D. Y. Husselman is up at Petoskey, where she goes each fall, for her health, she being one of the sufferers from hay fever, so that she has to spend the early fall months there.

We have a late copy of the Ontario, Cal., Observer sent by our friend J. P. Ensley. It gives an interesting account of the rise and growth of the sugar beet industry near there. It bids fair to be one of the most profitable industries in the country.

A Slight Change.

Supt. Merica received a letter yesterday from Hon. Samuel Phelps Leland, stating that, owing to his own illness, as well as that of his family, it would be impossible for him to be at the institute here next week, as heretofore advertised. So there will be a change in the one lecture. Mr. Merica at once telegraphed to several other noted men and has secured one equally able, Col. Geo. W. Bain, known as the "Silver Tongued Orator, of Kentucky". He will take Mr. Leland's place. To give an idea of his strength, and hold on popular opinion, we quote this:

"Col. Bain has been invited to the great Ocean Grove Assembly twelve successive sea[illegible] and has given twenty-two addre[illegible]thin eleven years; also, recalled [illegible] times to the great Quakertown ([illegible]) Annual Meeting; ten times to Silver Lake, New York, and from four to eight seasons in succession in many other lecture courses."

Dr. Fruth.

Formerly of New York, now the celebrated Examining Physician of the Fruth Medical and Surgical Institute, Chicago, Ill., by request of many friends and patients, has decided to visit Auburn, Monday afternoon, August 31st, 1891. Consultation and Examination Free, and strictly confidential in the Private Parlor of the Swineford House. One day only.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A CHOICE SELECTION OF INTERESTING ITEMS.

Comments and Criticisms Based Upon the Happenings of the Day—Historical and News Notes.

THOUGH Mr. Pennington's airship would not go up, his stock company has.

THE man who introduced cigarettes to America is said to be worth $5,000,000, but the men who smoke them are not.

NEW YORK is about to put the oberlisk under glass. While they are about it they might put the Grant monument under a magnifying glass.

THE workhouse should be supplied with a treadmill for the benefit of "walking delegates" who are in durance for their interference with the rights of labor.

TWO CINCINNATI boys touched a match to an empty whisky-barrel and were blown up. This proves that Cincinnati whisky is dangerous, even after it is all gone.

THE managers of the cable in sending to this country an account of the dress and underwear of the German Emperor must think their strand is a clothes line.

NOTWITHSTANDING that Herr Most has "washed his hands" of the charges made against him, he goes to prison for a year, and, under prisen rules, will now have an occasional chance to wash his feet also.

IT may have been unconstitutional to shut John Most up in prison. It was not Most, but Most's mouth, that was to blame. Ergo, it was not Most, but Most's mouth, that should have been shut up.

PATTI will give another "farewell tour" in the United States next year. That is all right. The people are not tired of Patti, and she can say "farewell" and come again as often as she wants to.

THE papers pay much attention to the illness of the Shah of Persia. He is a despot, a voluptuary and a crank. The death of a good skilled mechanic is a sadder affair for America than the demise of a dozen such despots.

KENTUCKY distillers are puzzled to know what to do with 40,000,000 gallons of whisky that they have on hand. There are some people in Kentucky who could soon tell the owners what to do with this embarrassing stock of mountain dew.

A FRENCH mechanic of 53 committed suicide because he had lost the power to drink. He left a letter saying: "One small glass of liquor makes me ill now. As I can not live without drinking, I am killing myself." Good riddance.

A DRUNKEN man in Boston was fined because he snored. It is said that if a man keeps his mouth shut he can't snore. But if he does this he can't get drunk. There is an evident disposition on the part of the Boston Dogberry to curtail the rights of the people of his town.

SOMEBODY wants to know why great men always wear bad hats and men that are not great always wear good hats. The reason is that when a man has anything inside his head he is not so particular about the outside covering, while if he has a 10-cent brain it always needs a $10 hat to protect it.

SEVERAL engineers, a number of firemen, and trainmen were recently discharged from the road employing them because they had been smuggling beer into cabs and cabooses and drinking it while on duty. This is as it should be. Men who are rushing the growler should be promptly relieved of any responsibility.

A CRANK photographer scared the tourists about Niagara Falls nearly into a fit by crossing the falls on a wire and performing sundry acrobatic feats on the slender, swaying pathway. He escaped with his life, marvelously enough, and there is a growing impression that he pushed the button and the fates who watch over fools did the rest.

A CURIOUS instance of the clashing of diverse industries is afforded in the impending ruin of the fisheries of Saginaw Bay, Mich., where the famous fish supply is being destroyed by sawmills and salt block refuse. In the winter the salt factories deposit their refuse on the ice; in the process of time this waste has been deposited over the spawning beds.

BY virtue of authority in him vested, the Mayor of St. Louis sent the names of certain citizens to the Council for confirmation to offices named. The Council rejected the citizens as being unfit and is now threatening to impeach the Mayor. Without knowing anything of the merits of the case, the thought suggests itself that the St. Louis Council expects too much of its Mayor.

A FRENCH physician discusses an unpleasant but important subject—the cleanliness or rather the lack of it in most school closets, and to their unfitness he attributes the habit among sensitive children of a voluntary constipation. This is a matter which the school boards and health boards of this country may well give attention to.

A MAN is sure of a good wife if he finds a girl who is good to her mother, and boys make good husbands whose mothers receive kindness from them. This rule is so infallible that it is always absolutely safe for a girl to cut the acquaintance of the man who slights his mother, and for a man to look somewhere else when he finds his girl letting her mother wait on her.

WHENEVER a man does wrong, and the world finds it out, his wife is regarded with the greatest interest when she makes her appearance. People wonder if she believes in her husband's innocence; if she regards him as a martyr, or a villain deservedly punished. Some of the more inquisitive broach the subject to her, but whether they talk to her about it or not, all look at her curiously, and would like to find out all about the newest skeleton in her closet.

IT has long been the custom to call the woman who survives her husband his "relict." Now, for the first time on record this measure of disrespect is meted out to a man. As he is dead, he cannot make any fuss about it, either. His death appears in the Washington papers and after his name appears the ominous clause, "relict of the late Lydia——, in the 59th year of his age." This is an equality of the sexes sure enough.

TWO WOMEN were out driving on a country road in the interior of Illinois when they were met by an excited tramp who gesticulated widly and tried to stop them by indicating danger ahead. They were more afraid of the tramp than they were of the unseen danger and they whipped up their horses and round the turn of the road ran into a swarm of bees. It took the tramp an hour to get them out of the clutches of the enemy.

A MONTANA man who married a woman on sight has just sent his wife back to "her folks," in Ohio, because he discovered that she is 35 years old—eight years older than he is; that she is addicted to drink, and is inclined toward insanity; and that she has an ungovernable temper. Montana men should know that surface indications are not as trustworthy in matrimonial prospecting as they are in mine hunting.

BERNARD has rediscovered Encke's comet in about "four hours of right ascension and thirty-five degrees of north declination." As this comet comes around four times in thirteen years, and does so pretty regularly, the news of its "discovery" this time is hardly of sufficient importance to be telegraphed all over the civilized world. And it is only a whispy thing at that, deriving most of its importance to astronomers from the fact that its period of revolution about the sun is slowly decreasing, a fact which has been claimed to prove the existence of resisting medium in space.

SOME demands of the letter carriers who met in Detroit are just. They are entitled to pay if they become sick or disabled in the performance of their duty, provided they exercise due diligence in danger; but they are certainly exposed to perils not liable in other employments. They call at houses where people are ill of contagious diseases and they handle letters and newspapers that may transmit disease. But it is not equitable to ask for pensions after twenty years' service. Most men are just beginning to be useful after an apprenticeship of twenty years.

"ELECTROCUTION" as a word describing the infliction of the death penalty by electricity is widely objected to in the newspapers. The latest blow at the absurdity of the word and those who use it is that it is an etymological absurdity, because the criminal is not "cuted" or anything else (except killed). He is not even executed. It is the sentence of the law that is executed. That ought to settle it, but does not furnish an acceptable substitute for the term thus summarily displaced. Till something more appropos is offered the four letters, v-o-l-t, for the principal part of the new word occupy the pleading place in the contest. The meaning of volt is almost the same as electric force. Give a criminal enough volts and he will never know what hurt him.

Safeguards Against Fire.

It is the opinion of experts that much of the money which is spent by factories, mills, and stores in the introduction of pipes and valves for fire extinction might be saved by the adoption of a much simpler and more efficient method. Sulphur absorbs oxygen and forms sulphuric acid, the fumes of which are much heavier than air. The quantity required would be small, since seventy grammes of sulphur can render 100 cubic meters of air inimical to combustion. An effective sulphur-extinguishing apparatus can be made of a large iron box of moderate depth, and open at the top. It should be hinged at one end or side to a protracted ceiling and kept close to it by a cord or wire connected with a wire or strap formed chiefly of cadmium fusible at 144 degrees Fahr. Inside the box is to be placed a considerable quantity of cotton wadding, well saturated with powdered sulphur. On the heat of an incipient fire melting the wire or strip, the box would drop a short distance. By a simple device the cotton wadding is to be ignited at the same moment, and a strong cloud of sulphur acid gas is to be instantly evolved, which will extinguish the fire by rendering the air unfit for combustion.—Iron.

A Railroader's Remarkable Yarn.

Here is a railroad story which is related by an Atlanta man who, however, deprecatingly waves aside the immortality which would attach to the publication of his name:

"I was handling the throttle on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe in 1865," he said. "I had a fast express and was nearing the town of Fort Worth one day in May of that year. We were behind our schedule and were pushing the old steam hoss for all we were worth. So fast were we traveling that the telegraph poles looked like the prongs of a fine-tooth comb. We were just rounding a long curve. when suddenly I spied a little child playing on the track not over five hundred feet ahead. We always carried a stout leathern lasso made fast to the tender. Without more ado I grabbed that lasso and with a single throw circled it around a telegraph pole. My act threw the engine and seven cars from the track and saved the little one—but killed 300 passengers."—Atlanta Constitution.

A DISTINCTIVE feature of this season's hat for the ladies is an exceptionally low crown. Not so the price. It is as high as ever.

A FAMOUS TREE.

It Bore a Murderer's Head and Was Twice Struck by Lightning.

In conversation with some friends at the Willard the other night, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Hon. John Young Brown spoke of a famous oak tree in Webster County that was from 1811 till 1860 the object that marked the corner of Henderson, Union, and Hopkins counties. The tree has a history. About the beginning of this century two men and three women came into Kentucky from North Carolina. The men were the brothers Harpe, Micajah and Wiley. The elder was a man of gigantic stature, rawboned, muscular, and athletic; the younger rather small in size, but very agile in his movements, and hardy of physical constitution. Both were fiendish in disposition, passionate, ferocious, and bloodthirsty. Robbery was their trade and murder their amusement. The women who accompanied them were their wives—"Big" Harpe, as the elder was called, having two, and "Little" Harpe, the younger, one. A few days after their advent into Kentucky, on the upper Green River they murdered a man named Langford for no reason that was ever discovered, except their passion for shedding human blood. They were apprehended for the crime and lodged in jail at Danville, from which they managed to escape. Soon after they murdered a small millboy in Adair County, son of Colonel Trabue. Pursuing their way to Western Kentucky, they murdered in succession three men—Dooley, Gilmore, and Hudgeon. Finally they murdered a whole family of women and children named Stigall and a guest of the family, one Love, and set fire to the building. A posse, under the lead of Captain Leeper, a powerful and fearless man, pursued them, and a shot from Leeper's rifle brought down "Big" Harpe, near the foot of the tree mentioned by Mr. Brown. He was desperately wounded, when Stigall, the head of the family murdered by the miscreants, came up and dispatched him. The young Harpe escaped, and was afterward apprehended and hanged for a murder he had committed in Mississippi. "Big" Harpe's head was severed from his body, and some one, ascending the tree spoken of, then a slender sapling, severed the trunk near the top, and, sharpening the standing shaft, stuck the head of the miscreant on it, where it remained for years. The tree was at or near the point where the roads from Henderson, Hopkinsville, and Morganfield intersect, and the place is called "Harpe's Head" to this day. Soon after the head was gibbeted some one ascended the tree and carved the head of a man under Harpe's head, and the effigy yet remains. About four years ago the tree was struck by lightning, and nearly all its branches destroyed. Some months ago it was again stricken with lightning, and the current set it afire, and all that remains of it is a charred trunk, a shaft twenty or thirty feet high, with the carved effigy still plainly to be seen.

JAPAN'S LITTLE POLICEMEN.

Though They Are Small They Are Courageous, Efficient and Gentlemanly.

Those who have seen the policemen of Japan are at a loss to understand why Prince George, when attacked by one of them, did not turn him up and spank him. The Japanese policeman is a very insignificant-looking creature. He is immensely inferior in physique to the common coolie, but, as the Japs are a law abiding people, the arm of the law is not required to be particularly strong. The little policeman of Japan is everywhere. With chrysanthemum badge upon his cap he meets the traveler when he lands and follows him about during his stay. He is met in every room in the hotel, occupies the best box at the theater, and, the last thing at night, he walks into one's bed-chamber, gazes at one in his bed and silently jots his observations down in a note book. In the out-of-the-way places the Japanese policeman is ever in evidence—the pioneer of Western civilization and the guardian of morals. He is courageous, despite his small physique, and is thoroughly imbued with a strong sense of duty. The Japanese guardian of the peace is looked upon as a gentleman. How different is it with us!

STALE BREAD.

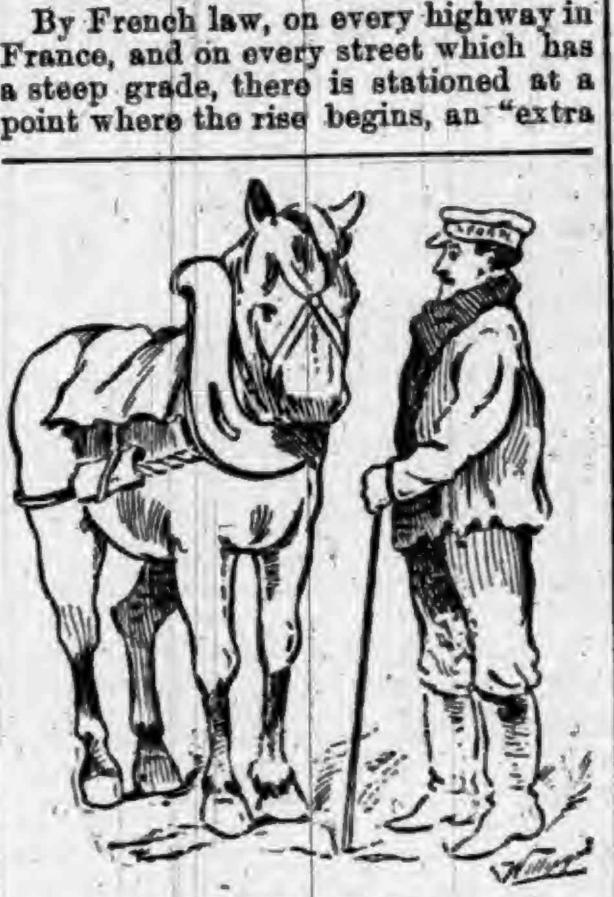
How a Shrewd Baker Established a Big Trade.

The following story of the success of a New York baker and his disposal of stale bread is told by the Herald: "It has been a question for many years what becomes of the many billions of pins that are made in all parts of the world, and a similar query might be made concerning loaves of bread which have become too stale for use by the ordinary consumer. When bread which has been bought and not eaten confronts the housewife she knows of various uses for it. There are many uses for bread crumbs in artistic cooking. The French cook can find, it is asserted, a thousand uses for stale bread crumbs. But stale bread in the shop is another thing. Large baking concerns who supply grocers with their product are now making a practice of taking back the unsold supplies of the day before. A few years ago a German-American started business with a borrowed barrel of flour. He had a well-defined idea of how he intended to secure trade. This idea took the form of giving the grocer a guarantee that all unsold loaves would be taken back at their full wholesale price. This plan worked admirably, for many grocers who had not heretofore handled bread saw an opportunity for a possible profit and no loss. What the baker's original idea for the disposition of his stale loaves was is not very clear, but it did not appear to be the kneading over of the old into new material, as a great many suppose bakers are in the habit of doing. Under the new order of things grocers began to make inroads into the trade of the small bakers, and the man who started with his owed-for barrel soon extended his business until it occupied a building half a block in length. As there is scarcely a product in the world to-day of which the waste cannot be turned to some profitable use, so it is with the baker's stale loaves. Many of the poor people of the neighborhood got their bread at a reduced rate because it was one day old, but the problem of disposing of the whole stock each day was finally solved by the Italians. One by one they dropped into the bread factory for stale loaves, until finally there was a regular colony of dealers, male and female, who took all they could get at a price which paid the maker for its extra handling, yet much lower than the price given grocers. The large Italian settlements in Williamsburgh and Brooklyn are fully covered by certain of the dealers. Others of them cover the Harlem district. The chief camping ground for the stale-bread venders, however, is Mulberry street and its intersections. This is the quarter where the man with the bag of bread can always be sure of selling out. In fact, the supply never equals the demand."

THE EXTRA HORSE.

A Beneficent French Institution Which Ought to Be Copied Here.

By French law, on every highway in France, and on every street which has a steep grade, there is stationed at a point where the rise begins, an "extra horse." The law compels the use of this horse until the summit of the hill is reached, and there is a heavy fine for refusing to hire the extra, at a small fixed rate.



THE EXTRA HORSE.

A placard by the roadside indicates the point where the extra horse must be taken on, and another, higher up, shows where he may be dispensed with. All truckmen and other teamsters in large cities pay strict attention to this regulation, framed in the interest of toiling animals.

The Diphtheria Bacillus.

The ardor with which the study of the causation of diphtheria has been pursued among those who are engaged in that branch of medical science has been at last rewarded by the discovery of the true diphtheria bacillus. The most eminent bacteriologists in the world with great unanimity announce the fact.

Doctor Klein, the eminent English bacteriologist, has published an elaborate report in the nineteenth annual report of the local government, in which he enters into the details of his methods of investigation and his tests. His paper contains several facts of prime importance, a knowledge of which should be generally known. Among them are the following: Some of the lower animals, particularly cows and house cats, are susceptible to the disease, and instances are cited in which the domestic cat has communicated the infection to the family to which it belonged, with fatal results. He has also demonstrated the presence of the infection in the milk of cows previously inoculated with diphtheria bacilli.

He takes occasion to emphasize another fact which is of great practical importance and should always be borne in mind by health officers, to wit: The contagion of diphtheria is to be classed with those which can exist and thrive outside the human body. "It is a matter of common belief," he says, "that a room may retain active the diphtheritic contagion for a very long period; that milk may be not only the vehicle but even the multiplying ground of the diphtheritic contagion; that sewer air and sewage may contain and be the means of distributing this contagion." These points are of much import in investigating new outbreaks of this disease.

Nervous Headache.

Nervous headache is, perhaps, the most difficult of all to describe or to treat, inasmuch as it is not a disease but a sympton, the cause of which may be in some remote part of the system. One form of nervous headache, which is unmistakable, though not always understood as such, consists of a dull grinding pain at the back of the head near the base of the brain, where the nerves of the spinal cord enlarge and ramify for the formation of the brain. Pain in this locality, frequently down the neck, is a sure indication of impaired nervous action, and should be treated accordingly. In another direction nervous trouble produces a violent headache—that is from the medium of the stomach. With many people any deep or sudden emotion, such as grief, fear, or even joy may partially or entirely paralyze the action of the stomach; there is an utter absence of appetite, and the serious headache which results is simply the indication of the trouble. When it is removed, and the stomach resumes its accustomed action, the headache will disappear.—Good Housekeeping.

Rest as a Medicine.

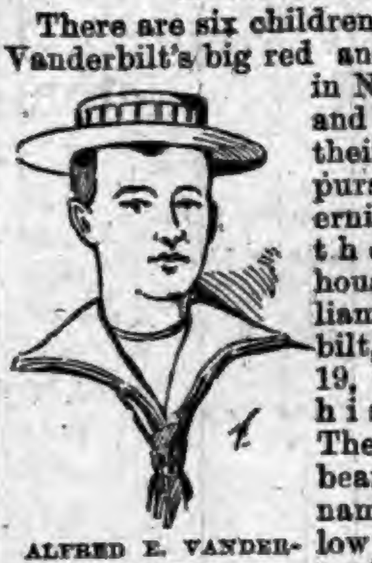
A physician, writing of rest as a medicine, recommends a short nap in the middle of the day, for those who can take it, as a beneficial addition to the night's sleep. It divides the working time, gives the nervous system a fresh hold on life and enables one to do more than make up for the time so occupied. A caution is given against the indulgence of too long a sleep at such a time, under a penalty of disagreeable relaxation. There has been much discussion regarding the after-dinner nap, many believing it to be injurious, but it is, nevertheless, natural and wholesome.

TRUST your fellow-beings and let them help you. Don't be too proud to ask, and accept the humblest work till you can find the task you want.—Theodore Parker.

THE VANDERBILT CHILDREN.

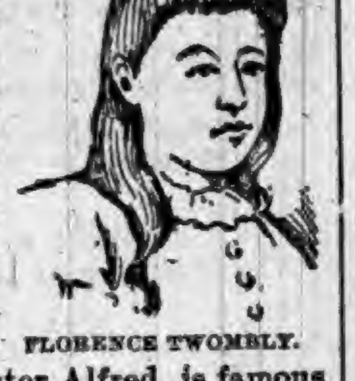
Little Ones Born with Solid Silver Spoons in Their Mouths.

There are six children in Cornelius Vanderbilt's big red and white palace in New York City, and they are, with their pleasures and pursuits, the governing thought in the millionaire's household. William H. Vanderbilt, now a lad of 19, was named for his grandfather. The second son bears his father's name. Then follow maid Gertrude, who was named for her aunt; Reginald, Alfred and baby Gladys—all fancy names.



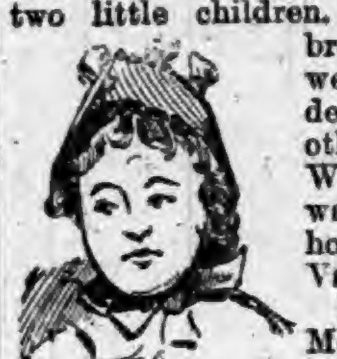
ALFRED E. VANDERBILT.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt always breakfast with their children, and not infrequently the father goes for a morning ride with the boys, all of whom are fearless horsemen. Alfred is the crack whip of the family, and rides and drives much and well. Gertrude is an accomplished pianist; the two elder boys play the banjo admirably by note, and Master Alfred is famous as a violinist. He played for little Josef Hofman at the time of his mother's musicale, when the little phenomenon was transferred from drawing-room to nursery. The nursery, by the way, is quite the most charming room in the house. It is a great, big, airy corner apartment, with a mammoth fireplace and a big piano.



FLORENCE TWOMBLY.

Mrs. Dr. William Seward Webb, who was Miss Lela Vanderbilt, has two little children. She and her brother Frederick were particularly devoted to each other, and Mrs. Webb's eldest child was named in his honor—Fredericka Vanderbilt.



FREDERICKA VANDERBILT WEBB.

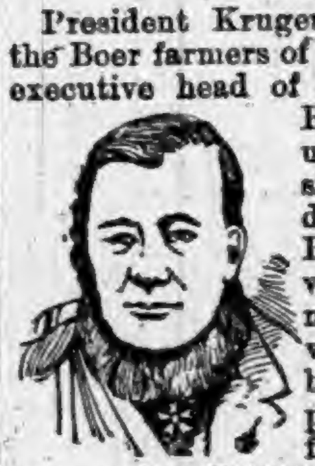
Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, who was Miss Florence Vanderbilt, has called her little daughter by her own name—Florence.

Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard's oldest daughter, now Mrs. Schieffelin, bears her own name—Margaret Louisa. The young girl, Alice, is a dark-haired, sweet-faced little maid.

Mrs. William D. Sloane, nee Vanderbilt, has two little girls, Adele and Emily—the latter named for her mother; the former, a name chosen simply because it was pretty.

SOUTH AFRICAN UNION.

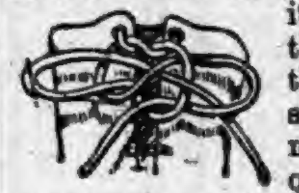
President Kruger, Chief Executive of the Transvaal.



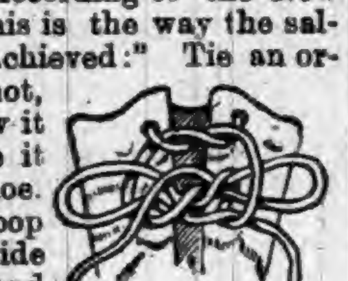
President Kruger, as the leader of the Boer farmers of the Transvaal and executive head of the South African Republic, occupies a unique political position. Formerly a dependency of Great Britain, the Transvaal still retains a nominal connection with that power, but is really independent. Cut off from the sea by the intervening British territory of Natal and Cape Colony, the Dutch farmers are playing each of the States against the other to secure the fullest advantages for their import and export trade. Recently Sir Charles Mitchell, the Governor of Natal, opened with much pomp the new railway from Pietermaritzburg and Durban to Charlestown, a new village on the Boer frontier. The road passes Majuba Hill, where, in 1881, General Joubert and the Boers inflicted a crushing defeat upon the British under Sir Pomeroy Colley. President Kruger and the homely Dutch farmers, who have no color of sympathy for England, are doubtless the pioneers in the movement for a "United States Africa," which was the premature dream of Sir Bartle Frere. Already the British Parliament has sanctioned a measure conferring complete self-government upon Natal, similar to that which now exists in Canada and Australia—a measure which is a long step indeed toward the political union of the southern portion of the Dark Continent.

How to Tie Your Shoe Laces.

The "Salmon tie" is the latest. It is so called because the energetic fish of the name couldn't possibly pull it it loose, although the fisherman could the instant need should come for a new fly or a better one. In the cut you see the old bow-knot, and beneath it a shoe with the salmon knot. According to the New York Tribune this is the way the salmon knot is "achieved:" Tie an ordinary bow-knot, but do not draw it tight, nor make it close to the shoe. Now take the loop and end of one side and put it over and through the knot. Draw tight, like an ordinary bow-knot, and it is done. To untie it simply pull the ends, as in the common bow-knot.



THE OLD BOW-KNOT.



THE SALMON KNOT.

Arab Proverbs.

Never tell all you know, for he who tells everything he knows often tells more than he knows.

Never attempt all you can do; for he who attempts everything he can do often attempts more than he can do.

Never believe all you may hear; for he who believes all that he hears often believes more than he hears.

Never lay out all you can afford; for he who lays out everything often lays out more than he can afford.

Never decide upon all you may see; for he who decides upon all that he sees often decides on more than he sees.

Relative Values.

The value of skilled labor is most strikingly shown by the following: A bar of aluminum that is worth only $5 in its natural state is worth $12 when it is made into household utensils; after it has gone through the different processes by which it is made into jewelry, its value is increased into $150. Made into match cases, it would be worth $300; put into the balance wheel springs for watches, $250,000.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.
Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.
After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause. Respectfully,

Frightful Loss of Life!

Of the many disasters with which mankind has been visited, one of the worst is that class of ailments which, originating simply with inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, causes such frightful loss of life. Under this appalling category come Bright's disease, diabetes, gravel, ordinary nephritis and catarrh of the bladder. No class of organic maladies, against which medical skill is pitted, so often baffles the expert practitioner and sets his skill at naught. Easy is it, however, to arrest these direful ailments at the start. The diuretic action of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is just sufficient to set the bladder and kidneys at work, preserve or rescue them from fatal inactivity without exciting them. The unmedicated stimulants of commerce excite without either strengthening or regulating. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters does both. It is unfailing for malaria, dyspepsia, debility, rheumatism, liver complaint and constipation.

The electric light can be made to give a very beautiful effect in illuminating garden fountains. For this purpose a chamber has to be excavated beneath them, and immediately under the jet a thick plate of glass is inserted, water-tight. An arc lamp directs its light directly through this plate into the column of water rising vertically above it, and the inclosed air, together with the broken surfaces of the jet, scatters this light in all directions, thus giving the liquid the appearance of being self-luminous. The color of the illumination is varied by means of tinted slides passed horizontally beneath the glass plate in the roof of the vault.

How to Help the Horses.

A lady hired a stranger to do some hauling the other day, on the recommendation of the man's horse. It was such a well-kept, fine animal that she thought the owner must be a good man, and so it turned out.

By never hiring any vehicle drawn by a lame, sick, or galled horse, you will be doing much to prevent cruelty, and also teach men that the care of animals pays. —New Orleans Picayune.

SPECIAL training is demanded for all important positions, whether on the farm or in the commercial world. In this connection we call attention to the announcement made in this issue, of the Indianapolis Business University, one of the oldest and most distinguished of strictly business training schools in our country. The proprietors, Messrs. Heeb & Osborn, are men of extensive and successful business experience, and spare no expense in maintaining the position of the University at the head of commercial schools. By mentioning this paper a handsome catalogue will be sent to any address by the institution. It is a pleasure to recommend to our readers the excellent work of the Indianapolis Business University.

Stealing Ripe Eggs.

A colored man stole eight eggs from a farmer near Canton, O., and put them in a basket to take to that town. When he arrived there and opened the basket he found, instead of the eggs, eight little chicks, alive and hungry.

An unusual offer —the one that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Unusual, but made in good faith. It's a reward of $500 for an incurable case of Catarrh. If you have one, the money's for you. But you can't know whether you have one, till you've tried Dr. Sage's Remedy. What's incurable by any other means, yields to that. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, it cures the worst cases, no matter of how long standing. That's the reason the money can be offered. There's a risk about it, to be sure. But it's so small that the proprietors are willing to take it.

The symptoms of catarrh are, headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once.

"German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief." ⑦

OUR COUNTRY ROADS

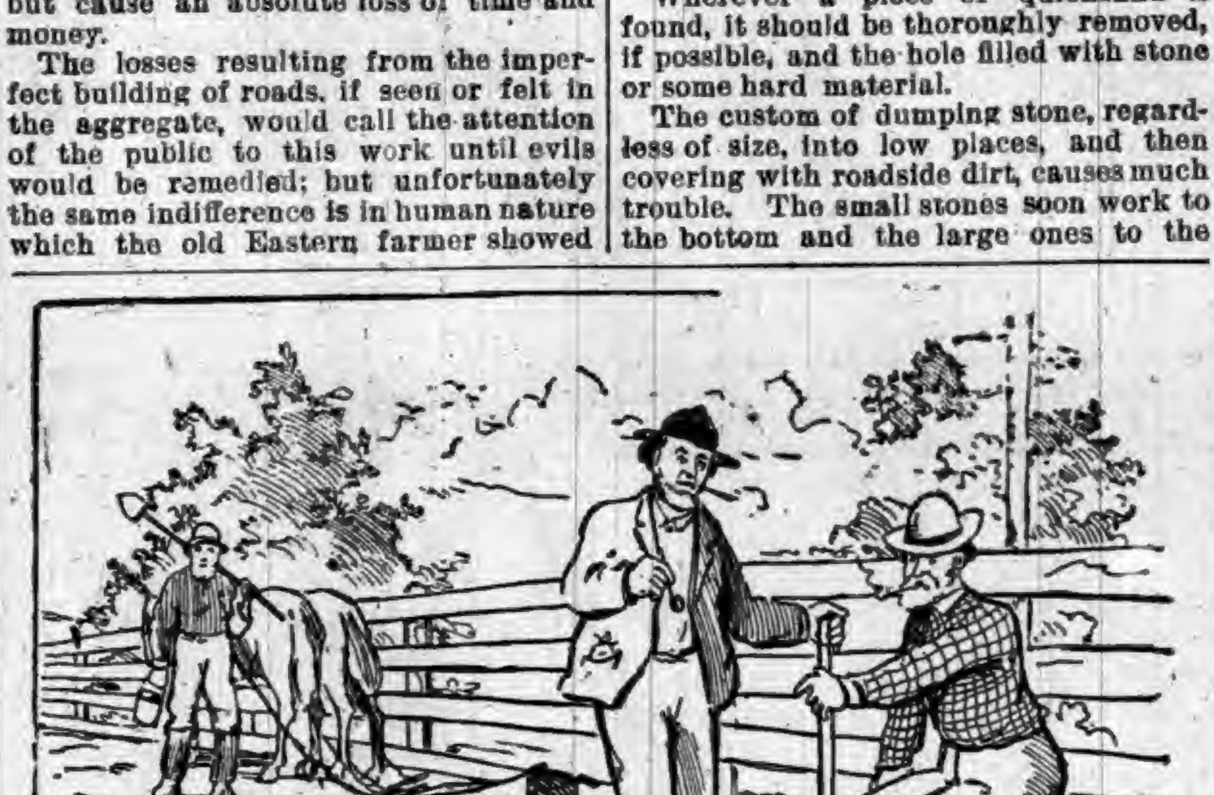
ARE SADLY NEGLECTED PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

A Few Suggestions Concerning Their Structure and Maintenance—Illustrations of the Effects of Both Good and Bad Causeways—Good Roads Are Profitable.

A prominent English gentleman, who, while traveling through the States, had occasion to do considerable riding through the smaller towns and country districts, once remarked that while the buildings he saw represented a high standard of civilization, the roads were still frontier highways, on which little thought or money had been spent.

To the expeditious traveler the winding roads so often seen seem to be the greatest possible distance between two points, and are not only an annoyance, but cause an absolute loss of time and money.

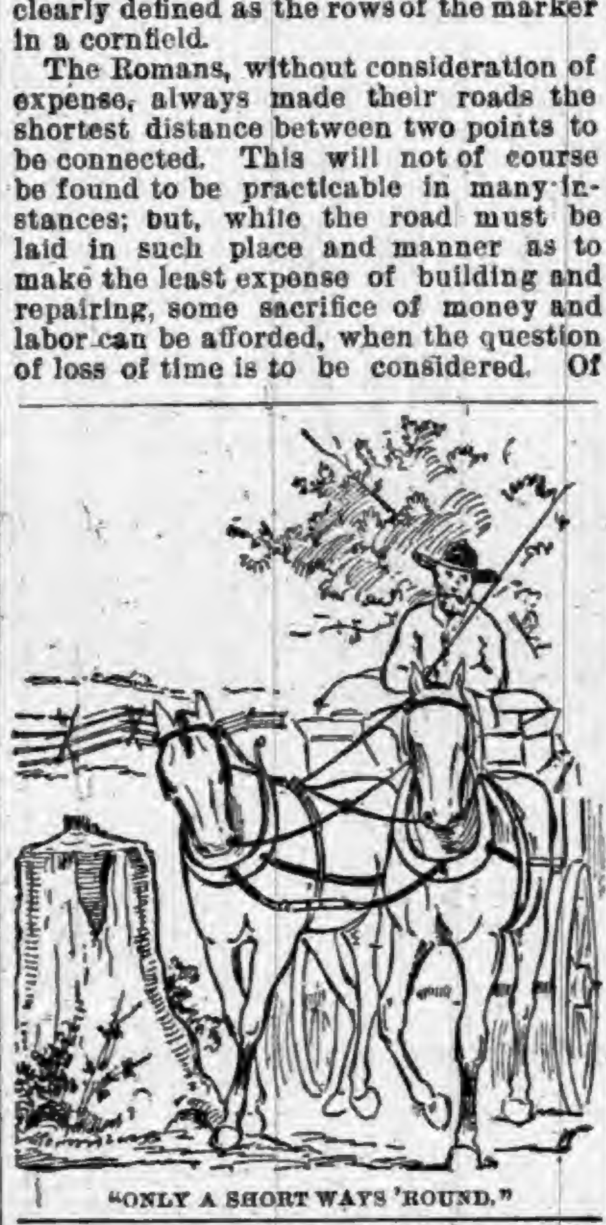
The losses resulting from the imperfect building of roads, if seen or felt in the aggregate, would call the attention of the public to this work until evils would be remedied; but unfortunately the same indifference is in human nature which the old Eastern farmer showed when he drove every day around the great stump in his driveway. Instead of trying to remove it, he said: "Oh, it's only a little bother to drive around it, but 'twould take a day to dig it out." In building roads in this country too little attention is paid to two important things, viz., good surveying and proper drainage.



WORKING OUT ROAD TAX.

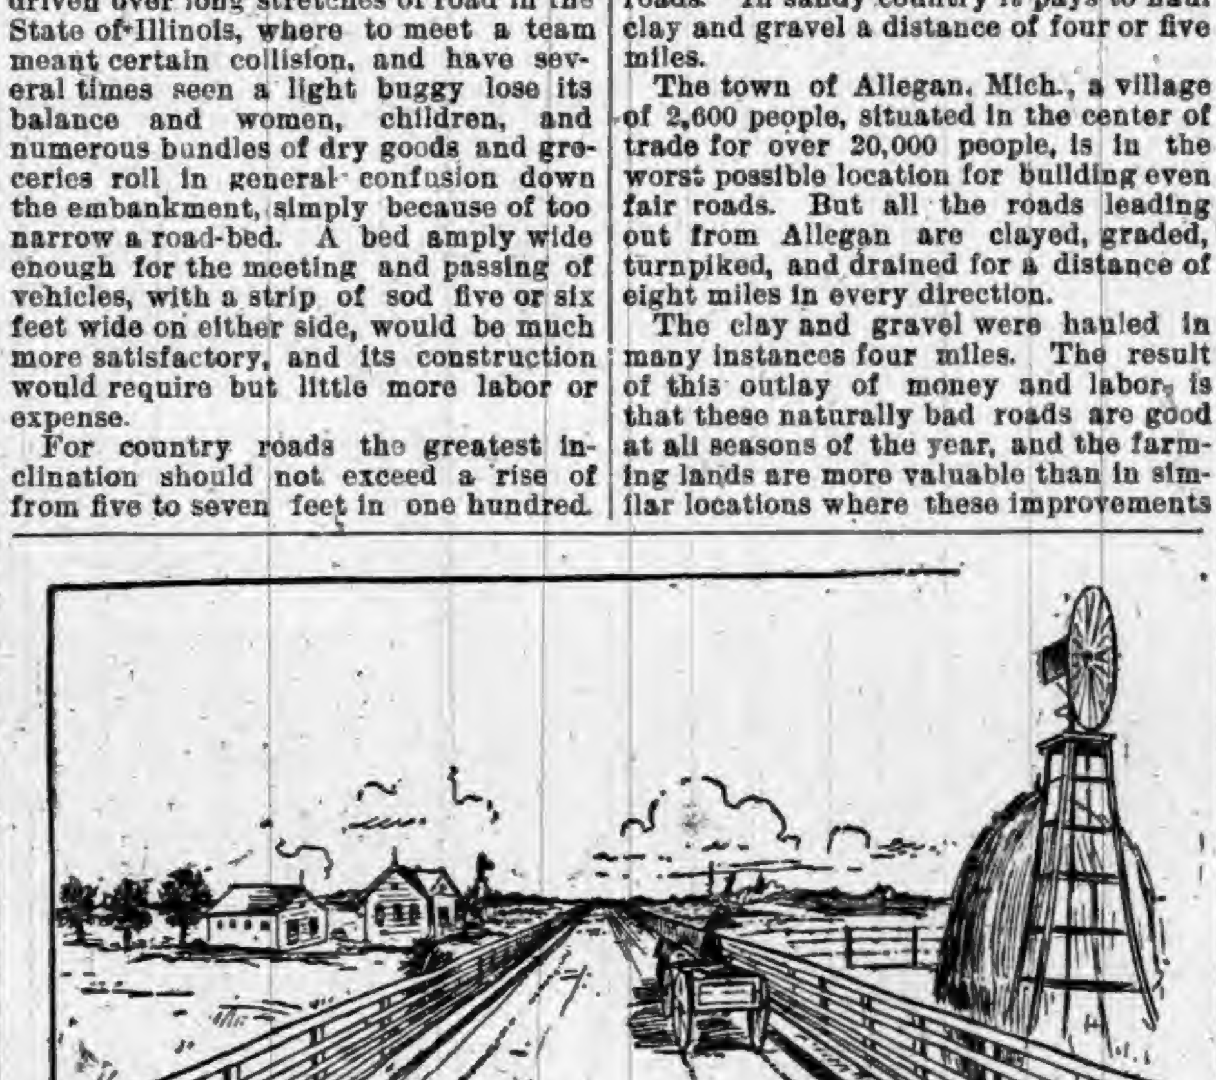
Road limits should be as straight and clearly defined as the rows of the marker in a cornfield.

The Romans, without consideration of expense, always made their roads the shortest distance between two points to be connected. This will not of course be found to be practicable in many instances; but, while the road must be laid in such place and manner as to make the least expense of building and repairing, some sacrifice of money and labor can be afforded, when the question of loss of time is to be considered. Of course there can be no arbitrary rule in regard to width, but many country roads are inconveniently narrow. I have often driven over long stretches of road in the State of Illinois, where to meet a team meant certain collision, and have several times seen a light buggy lose its balance and women, children, and numerous bundles of dry goods and groceries roll in general confusion down the embankment, simply because of too narrow a road-bed. A bed amply wide enough for the meeting and passing of vehicles, with a strip of sod five or six feet wide on either side, would be much more satisfactory, and its construction would require but little more labor or expense.



"ONLY A SHORT WAYS 'ROUND."

For country roads the greatest inclination should not exceed a rise of from five to seven feet in one hundred. For heavy teaming a road rising ten in one hundred is supposed to be injurious. Near the highest point the grade should either be decreased or the plan adopted by Telford practiced. Where the expense of making a piece of road a mile long on a less grade than five in one hundred was too great, he provided for the increased fatigue of the horses by building a mile of much smoother and better road than that of the first part of the ascent. There are few localities which are not provided with some suitable material for building or repairing, yet in localities where such material abounds may often be found the worst possible roads. The loss by wear and tear on horses and vehicles on a stretch of poor road in one month, where constant traffic is to be supported, would cover the expense of building a road which, with slight repairs, would last for years. In St. Joseph County, Michigan, a strip of corduroy through a marsh thirty rods long caused two deaths years ago. The township paid $5,000 in one instance, and losses resulting from accidents from time to time would make no small sum; yet the road remains in an unsafe condition, while at either approach to this strip is material enough to make a road sixty feet wide, and its use would remove two long, heavy grades.



MONTEREY ROAD LEADING NORTH FROM ALLEGAN, MICH.

The indifference and ignorance of farmers in working out a poll-tax is unexplainable. A half-dozen men, with two or three teams, meet to repair a road which is used for heavy traffic. These men are obliged many times to haul loads over roads which have no foundation drainage and imperfect surface drainage, full of holes and washouts; yet without plan or method they gather, and by the use of the scraper the dirt from the roadside is dumped onto the roadbed, which has not been prepared to receive it.

One or two enterprising citizens fill up two of the ten holes without removing the cause, while the others sit about on the rail fence and discuss the tariff and similar subjects, upon which these public spirits are so well versed.

"A stitch in time saves nine," applies to road-building as well as to feminine employment.

To simply fill up a hole with the substance nearest at hand generally proves about as satisfactory as trying to fill a sieve with water.

Wherever a piece of quicksand is found, it should be thoroughly removed, if possible, and the hole filled with stone or some hard material.

The custom of dumping stone, regardless of size, into low places, and then covering with roadside dirt, causes much trouble. The small stones soon work to the bottom and the large ones to the surface, where they become slippery, and as they are net bound together they cause a jolting which is harder on horses and vehicles than hauling through mud would be.

The Chinese roads are built, many of them, of solid rock. If some system which was a compromise between the macadam and Chinese systems could be carried out, the problem would be solved. The macadam roads, where they can be afforded, are undoubtedly the best. A study of the Telford and macadam methods by all citizens interested in public affairs would be very helpful.

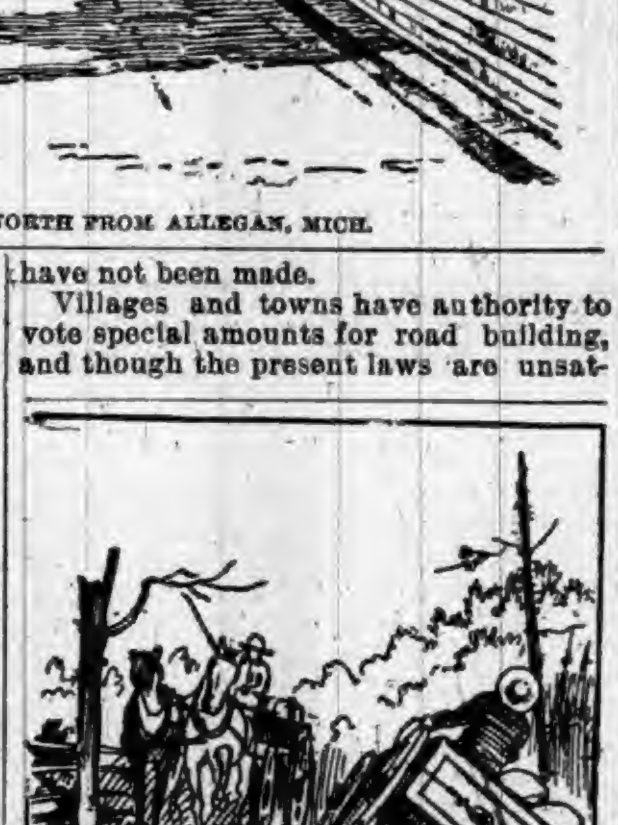
The width, depth and method of construction must be governed by circumstances, but the depth should, of course, depend upon the amount of traffic the road is required to support. For heavy traffic a depth of from twelve to eighteen inches should be observed. The stones should be small, with sharp edges, and should be closely packed. The roadbed should be dug in the form of a trench the required width, where thorough work can be afforded. After packing the stone the interstices should be filled with chips, and finely broken stone placed on top. This should be packed and pulverized with the roller, then covered with a layer of gravel or screenings. Of course the expense of a road of this character would prevent its use at the present time in country districts except in the worst places, and in such contingencies the most thorough method is the most economical. Considerable attention has been given to surface drainage, but many well-built roads are watersoaked until ruined for lack of proper sub-drainage. Good drainage should be obtained regardless of expense; the necessary ditching may be utilized for draining adjacent lands.

In many places in Illinois swampy meadow lands have been redeemed by the ditching made for road drainage. It is hard to estimate the addition which good roads give to land values, but farmers especially are becoming awake to the fact that improvements in property consist not simply in trees and buildings but in building and maintaining good roads. In sandy country it pays to haul clay and gravel a distance of four or five miles.

The town of Allegan, Mich., a village of 2,600 people, situated in the center of trade for over 20,000 people, is in the worst possible location for building even fair roads. But all the roads leading out from Allegan are clayed, graded, turnpiked, and drained for a distance of eight miles in every direction.

The clay and gravel were hauled in many instances four miles. The result of this outlay of money and labor, is that these naturally bad roads are good at all seasons of the year, and the farming lands are more valuable than in similar locations where these improvements have not been made.

Villages and towns have authority to vote special amounts for road building, and though the present laws are unsatisfactory in many ways, a proper use of existing laws would bring about a state of affairs more fitting to our present civilization. Let road districts unite in a proposition to begin at a certain point and make thoroughly good roads for certain distances each year.



MEETING IN A "BAD STRETCH."

A small stretch of road, well built, with proper drainage, would furnish an inspiration to all who had occasion to use it, which might lead to an enthusiasm for this too often neglected branch of public work. No method of building can do away with the need for constant repairing. Much labor and expense could be saved by taking the work in hand soon enough. The covering wears away and the road, whose rounding surface should always be preserved, is in need of a new, small supply.

If this work could be done oftener, the new material would quickly join with the old, if put on in small quantities, and the hindrance to traffic over patched places would be in a degree avoided. In filling holes the work should be so thoroughly done that the rounding surface of the road may be observed, instead of burdening traffic with a heap of stones in the roadbed.

Unless strong reasons exist to the contrary the work should be done when the ground is wet. In filling long ruts only short pieces should be filled at a time. If work is all done at once, vehicles avoid the place, and new ruts are formed. The use of the roller in the building of roads is too well known to need mention, but a section of patched road, which is practically useless for six months in a year, could be made much more suitable for traffic by its use.

The Yankee in London opens his eyes at the unusual speed with which he is whirled through the busy streets of that city. He grasps his carpetbag tightly in both hands and bends his long body forward as he rides to what seems to him certain death.

Such speed would be checked by a policeman in New York or Boston. The carriage in which he rides is heavier than those he has seen at home. The horses are much better-looking than those seen in our cities.

Says Dr. Holland, in a letter to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican: "I have never seen but one lame horse in London during all my stay here. The English horse does twice the work of an American horse similarly employed. The simple explanation is, that the Englishman has invested in perfect and permanent roads what the American expends in perishable horses which require to be fed."

500,000 MILES A MINUTE.

An Electric Current Girdles the Globe in Three Seconds.

Philadelphia scientists are preparing to find out how fast an electric current travels. An experiment will be made, probably from the Franklin Institute, by connections over the Atlantic cable to Liverpool and return. A recent test appeared to show that an electric current is a slow coach as compared to light, being only able to get over to Europe and back in something like a second, or at the rate of only some four hundred thousand miles a minute, while light ambles along at a million-mile-a-minute gait. The Philadelphia scientists who are proposing to make further investigation are not satisfied to give up the record to sunlight, and hope to prove that the electric current, if not handicapped, is the swifter element. The most recent experiment was tried at McGill College, Montreal, says the Philadelphia Record. The current was transmitted in Montreal, was transferred to the cable at the Newfoundland cable station by means of Thomson's mirror galvanometer, sent across to the station at Liverpool, and returned to Montreal by the same method. The distance traversed, partly by overhead wire and partly by cable, was 8,000 miles. From the time the current left the key in Montreal until it returned to the receiver in the same office just 1 second and 1-20th of a second had elapsed; but the conditions were not as good as they might have been, hence the further experiment to be made here. The rapidity with which the current travels over short wires with no delay indicated unlimited possibilities in the direction of practical tests. Prof. Marks, of the Edison Electric Light Company, is authority for the assertion that if the globe was encircled with a continuous cable a current would travel the entire distance in a trifle over three seconds. At this rate a curent would travel to the sun, covering the entire distance of 96,000,000 miles in three and a half hours. "In this age of science," said one of the gentlemen who will participate in the experiments, "people have an idea that we know so much now there is nothing more to be discovered. Why, we are yet in our infancy as far as electricity goes. New discoveries will yet be made, and we will live to see them put into practical use, which will revolutionize the entire world. The experiment which we are about to make in telegraphy is only a feeler which will lead to other and more startling experiments. The establishment of telephone communications between the hemispheres is already being seriously discussed."

An Ex-King's Story.

"You think," said the king in exile, "that it is a glorious thing to be a king. Listen, I will tell you what happened once to me. You will then see how delightful a thing a crown can be sometimes." It was midnight, and in the smoking-room of a West End club, and his ex-majesty was alone with one man. "I was giving a dinner party to my ministers and my officers. At the moment of sitting down an aide-de-camp came hurriedly into the room. 'Sire,' he said, 'there is a dispatch which must be signed at once. Pardon my disturbing you.' I saw that there was something more than a dispatch, and I left the room with an apology. 'What is it?' I asked. 'Drink no wine,' he whispered, 'it is poisoned.' 'Who is the chief conspirator?' 'Your Prime Minister.' I returned to the table, and during dinner I drank nothing. After dinner the Premier proposed the prosperity of the country. I rose to drink it, my glass in my hand, my poisoned glass. I said that so deeply did I appreciate the sentiment of his excellency that in drinking the toast I would honor him by exchanging glasses. He turned white, he turned green, but he could not refuse. I drank his glass, he drank mine. I assure you that it took twenty minutes at least before his writhings—in his chair—were over. Then they carried him out. And yet you think it is a fine thing to be a king?"—English paper.

Business Women's Dress.

The Executive Board of the Women's National Council, in Indianapolis, appointed a committee to prepare a symposium on dress, to be published under the auspices of the National Council in one of the popular magazines during the coming year and report to the conference of the Executive Board of the Council of May, 1892, its idea of a business dress for women, accompanied by a model of the same. The Corresponding Secretary was authorized to correspond with Marion Harland about a stone to be placed in the monument to Mary Washington and to collect the money for the same.

Spelling "Reform."

English spelling is, more than that of any other living language, a beautiful history, as it now stands, of the rise and growth of the language itself. In our apparently awkward assemblages of now silent consonants, in many of our phonetically useless double letters, we recognize the delicate threads by which we can trace hosts of words back to their origin; our spelling is, in itself, a practical and living treatise on etymology. To know the meaning of a word thoroughly, one must know its derivation, its past history. Now, which is the better—a spelling which can easily be mastered by the veriest blockhead, or one which epitomizes, as it were, the whole meaning of a word, its history, its subtle affinities with parent tongues? Our spelling is difficult, you say; well, what of that? Most good things are. We no longer pronounce words as they are spelled. The more shame to us! Here lies the real and most grievous fault in our language. We spell right enough for the most part, but we pronounce badly. The English-speaking race has done its utmost to bedevil its own language, by slip-shod habits of pronounciation. But, because our spoken tongue has unworthily drifted away from its honorable beginnings, shall our written language follow it, cut loose from its fellowship with the other great languages of antiquity and modern times, and so throw away the last trace of its paternity? The man who first stopped pronouncing the gh in daughter, and began to sound the same couple of consonants in laughter as if they were a single f, did a most slovenly, lazy, and utterly contemptible thing.

It is wholly incomprehensible, to the present writer, at least, how people can point with admiration at such infantile barbarisms as the Italian filosofia, fantasma, and the like. Such spelling is for ignoramuses and commercial travelers; it is written baby-talk. So far from phonetic spelling of this sort being a "reform," it is a downsliding into the vulgarest mediocrity. A true "reform" would be to reinstate a worthily etymological spelling wherever time and carelessness have obliterated it. To leave the meaningless subtle and return to the expressive subtile; to put two m's into amount, so that its derivation from ad and mons shall stare readers in the face; to put two l's into literature, as the French do, so that one may be absolutely sure that the world does not come from the past participle of linere, to besmear. It may be said that such etymological spelling is of advantage only to cultivated people, who "know Latin and Greek," as the phrase goes. Admitted! But, in Heaven's name, who are to govern language—the educated or the vulgar? Is a spelling which speaks volumes to the educated man, which is surpassingly rich in the most pregnant associations, to be ousted by a system which tells him nothing whatever, and the only advantage of which is that foreigners and stupid bumpkins can learn it in one year instead of six? Is the mountain to go to Mohammed, or Mohammed to come to the mountain?—Boston Transcript.

Music Boxes of Geneva.

The River Rhone flows into Lake Geneva at its east end, and then flows out again on the west. I learned that in the geography, but I had to cross the Atlantic ocean to fix the fact in my mind. Geneva is situated on both sides of the rushing Rhone, at the point where it flows out of the lake on the west. It is a brisk, bright, pretty city of nearly fifty thousand inhabitants. Many English and Americans are always to be found there. Geneva is known to fame on account of jewelry, music-boxes, John Calvin and Jean Jacques Rousseau. As a part of the regular programme, you will be shown the Protestant cathedral whose walls once echoed to the tread of that great man, John Calvin, who burnt Michael Servetus at the stake to make a good orthodox Christian out of him. The final result is not known.

But the Geneva music-boxes of to-day will interest the modern tourist far more than the bones of John Calvin will. The most wonderfull small clock in the world is shown here at a watchmaker's, an exquisite little affair in silver—clock and jewel-box in one. When the hour strikes, a tiny, jeweled bird opens its throat and sings till a mite of a cat makes a dash at it, then it suddenly disappears. The music-boxes are of all sizes, from one which you can slip into your pocket to another as large as a piano. When some of these large ones are set going, they give the effect of a whole orchestra playing. The sound of drum, horn, violin, harp and cymbal is quite as distinct as if they were so many separate instruments. These music-boxes are, in fact, called "orchestrions." It is not uncommon to have them in the Swiss hotel dining-rooms, to play during meals.

There seems a sort of magic in these strange music-boxes. They are of all imaginable shapes. You enter a shop and ask to look at them. A monkey begins to sing to you like a mocking-bird. You are politely asked to sit down while you wait. Suddenly you start as if you had been shot. The very chair is singing, as though the demon was in it, a weird melody as sweet as the song of the Lorelei. In point of fact the enchanted chair is a music-box. Sitting down in the thing sets it going.—Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

The Wrong Box.

A vicar, who is not accustomed to a very large audiance, was startled the other Sunday to find his church crammed to suffocation. There seemed nothing to account for the sudden influx, until, upon inquiry, it was discovered that a new wall box for letters had been attached to the adjacent house, bearing the legend, "No collection on Sundays!" —Judy.

Nervous

Dyspepsia in severe form, tired and languid, no ambition, sleep irregular, no appetite—this was my condition when I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. From the very first it seemed to be just what I needed. The nervous dyspepsia has now entirely gone, my appetite is excellent, I can eat heartily without distress afterwards; I sleep well, and can now go about my work without having that tired feeling so frequent before I began taking the medicine. Land of Suicides.

Germany is the classical land of suicides, and Saxony is its most suicidal province. To every 1,000,000 Saxons there are 400 suicides, although the rest of the empire has an average of only 150 to 160 to the 1,000,000. In Leipsic the ratio is the highest in the civilized world, 450 to 1,000,000, or 50 more than in Paris. In London the number per 1,000,000 is 85; in St. Petersburg, 160; in Berlin, 280; in Vienna, 285. In Prussia the number of suicides increased between 1850 and 1878 from 1,436 to 3,889. In France, fifty years ago, the annual number of suicides was 1,739. In 1878 it had increased to 7,434, and in 1886 to 8,187.

Wash Your Socks.

A pair of new socks, fresh from the store, feel very comfortable to the feet, but the man who wears them before they are washed makes a mistake. Hosiery should always be washed before being worn, as the washing shrinks the threads and makes the socks wear as long again, besides preventing the feet from being injured by the coloring. When put on before washing they stretch out of shape and can never be restored to the original form.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

NEGRO PREACHERS AND TEACHERS READ.

Tell all ex-slaves to send $4 (money order) for a gold emblem badge—Vaughan's new book (containing letters from Negro Bishops, Frederick Douglass, Bishop Newman, Senator Cullom, Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison, Judge Thurston, and many others; 160 pages, illustrated), blanks, papers, etc., fully explaining his EX-SLAVE PENSION BILL. Clubs are now forming every where and are endorsing "Vaughan's bill," as introduced in the Fifty-first Congress in their behalf, asking $500 cash and $15 per month for some and different amounts for others. Mayor Vaughan's new book, that is the best history of the race ever written, gives cogent reasons why the Government should and must grant the former negro slave a pension. Write at once and get your names, etc., in his pension register. No charge except as above until the bill becomes a law. Add. W. R. VAUGHAN, (Ex-Mayor) Washington, D.C. P. O. L. Box 271.

Wheel Trust in the Soup.

The great wheel trust, called the "American Wheel Company," was last week put into the hands of a receiver. It will be remembered that a year ago, about all the wheel making factories in the country, went into a combine, or trust, and after the consolidation, they raised prices, of course. That is what a trust is for. But consumers of wheels, that is carriage and wagon makers, like ours in Auburn, objected to higher prices and there was a strong effort to get up a new wheel factory that would keep out the trust. It did not get started however, but the manufacturers of carriages etc., proceeded to buy the wheels they needed, of other parties, leaving the great "American" combine to get along with its high prices, the best it could. Business with the combine was good as long as they could make sales at the high rates, but when sales began to drop off, hard times came on. They took in additional stockholders, till the amount is said to have reached over four millions. This of course includes their valuation of the old factories that went into the combine, some that were soon after built, and the new stock taken. But matters did not go on right and they soon found they could not borrow money. So they asked for a receiver, in order that they might not be forced into bankruptcy and be compelled to sacrifice their property at forced sales. The debts are only about $1,800,000. So it is likely the combine will eventually start up its various works again in a few months. In the meantime about 2,500 hands will be thrown out of employment. The White wheel works at Ft. Wayne, and the Olds, were in the combine. The destruction of the White factory by fire, a short time ago, is reckoned as one of the causes of the trouble. Our readers may feel assured, that carriages and wagons will be made right along as usual, for wheels can be made by ordinary and honest factories, and will be so made.

MARSHALL'S HOOF CURE cures sand and quarter cracks, split hoofs, sore and contracted feet, corns and all hoof troubles. Stops cracking, shelling and scaling hoofs. Softens and toughens brittle hoofs. It is better than soaking with oil, meal, etc. Should be used on all horses standing on hard floors or driven on hard roads. It also cures scratches, tetter, galls of all kinds, bruises, etc.

TOLEDO, O., April 6, 1891.

I had a horse in my stables that had hoofs so brittle that it was impossible to keep a shoe on his feet. I have used one can of Marshall's Hoof Cure on his hoofs and the horse has been shod for four weeks and the shoes stay on all right. I consider it the best hoof cure I have ever used.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Josie Metevier of Blufton, is visiting friends here.

Mr. Alexander of Kendallville, was in town last week.

Mr. McMichael of Chicago, was in this city over Sunday.

Several days ago, W. R. Barnes of Chicago was in Waterloo.

J. C. Boyer made a business visit to Chicago a few days since.

Mr. Wilson and family, of Plymouth, Ohio, are visiting friends in town.

Some of our people attended a picnic at Hamilton last week, Wednesday.

Monday Mr. Baker of Mishawaka was in our town on his way to his home.

Mrs. J. B. Taylor, of Kendallville, has been here for a few days visiting friends.

Some of the members of the Epworth League attended the convention at Garrett.

J. M. Waterman and family returned from their trip around the Lakes some days ago.

Next Sunday evening Rev. Loudy will preach his farewell sermon for the conference year.

Mrs. Probst, of Wawaka, spent Sunday in Waterloo, the guest of Rev. J. M. DeWeese's family.

Mrs. Lizzie Kelley and daughter Pearl, of Auburn, spent Sunday with Willard Fee and family.

Rev. Keller will be present at the laying of the cornerstone of the new U. B. church at Hicksville, Ohio.

Next Sunday a mass temperance meeting will be held in the M. E. church. Rev. Marshall will give the address.

On Friday evening Rev. DeWeese will entertain the Epworth League in honor of Rev. R. Locke who will go Sept. 1, to Boston.

Our people will remember Miss Eva Lacey, later Mrs. W. S. Silver of Bluffton, and will be pained to hear of her death, as noted elsewhere this week.

Sunday and Monday it rained all day and during the night it became so cold, fires to sit by were a necessity. Tuesday the sun made its appearance, and was very welcome.

A. L. Faucett has quite a thicket of young plum trees in variety, the first bearing quite full this year. The plums are of the blue variety, and there were no no indication of worms.

Saturday evening Mrs. DeWeese and Mrs. Carpenter drove over to Butler for Mrs. Price, who returned with them and spent Sunday with her daughter, Mrs. DeWeese and family. Mrs. P. has quite recently become a resident of Butler.

Saturday an accident occurred in which fortunately no damage was sustained. A farmer was on the incline with a load of wheat, when on account of the cars, or some other cause, his horses became unmanagable, and backed off the incline.

C. P. Urie and wife have located among us, he having a position with the Lake Shore road, and will make this their home. Our people will give them a cordial welcome as they are former DeKalb people, though for a few years located at Burr Oak, Mich.

John F. Shuman, delivered a very acceptable address to the K. P. folks at the Hamilton meeting last Wednesday afternoon. There was a large attendance, and in spite of the very hot weather, the attention was good from the beginning to the close. It was a meeting for the two counties.

Mrs. Winslow has a night blooming Cereus in bloom, with its sweet scented and beautiful white blossoms. It blooms at intervals all summer, usually opening about four o'clock in the afternoon, and remaining unchanged nearly twenty-four hours. Now it has two blossoms on, and has had the same number once before this season. A number of buds have blasted from its exposure to the driving rains early this summer.

Saturday evening as the writer was returning home about 9 o'clock a great noise on the right was heard, caused by the severe shaking of a loose window sash, where in the well lighted room the family were assembled. A boy some fifteen or sixteen years of age sprang from his concealment in the shadow under the window and ran to the walk where his companions were looking on. The occupants of the room were probably startled, if nothing more; but a nervous person might have received a shock that would not be recovered from in a long time. Parents should teach their children, that whatever annoys, causes alarm, is a shock to the nerves, causes loss to others, or expense, is not innocent fun. In this instance the lawn was open to the street, furnishing easy success for mischief, and also easy escape.

BUTLER.

No word seems to be received from the absconding P. I. merchant.

A large quantity of stone is being hauled to build the abutments of the new Webster bridge.

Our city authorities talk of putting down a test well on their own grounds on West Ninth street.

A. D. Morse will occupy the vacated P. I. store with a stock of queensware and like merchandise.

J. H. Aldrich seems to take his crushing defeat in the jugglery of the law with philosophic equanimity.

Nearly all our dealers report a good and growing trade, with an increase of cash sales and a reduction of old debts.

Last Sunday was our first rainy Sunday for many weeks. The churches and Sunday schools suffered almost to depletion.

Our new democratic editor seems to have secluded himself within the sanctum of the Review office. We fail to see him on our streets.

The M. E. Sunday school excursion is to take place the first Wednesday in September, and will be at Pleasant Lake, instead of Troy woods.

The Lake Shore elevator is full of grain, and although wheat demands $1 or more per bushel, yet load after load is hauled home again on account of inability to unload.

J. A. Campbell and wife visited in Steuben county last week. He reports a very successful catch of fish, about one hundred fine perch and bass, in a couple of hours.

CONCORD.

Nearly all of our boys took in the show at St. Joe on Tuesday night of last week.

Cora Draggoo of Allen Creek, Mich., is visiting her aunt Mrs. Wayne Scott and other relatives.

Nora Harris is resting from her duties at Mr. Hines' this week and visiting relatives and friends.

Mrs. Wayne Scott was in attendance at the bedside of her sick father, William Draggoo, of St. Joe, on Sunday and Monday.

We are informed that a singing class has been organized at this place. It is to be conducted by Frank Hart, of St. Joe.

A number of young people intended visiting Hamilton Lake last Sunday, but on account of the weather postponed the trip.

Wayne Scott and Henry Baker went fishing Monday, and kindly remembered a number of their neighbors with a nice mess of fish for breakfast Tuesday.

There was no preaching here Sunday, owing to the small attendance at Sabbath school on account of the rain. Mr. Evans was here but so few being present he had a social meeting instead of a sermon.

Mert Johnson's moved last Thursday to Huntertown. They had intended to go to LaGrange but owing to some difficulty in procuring a house, they went to Huntertown instead. Mert will work in the sawmill at present.

The light fingered gentry are getting in some work at the corners. Wayne Scott had a ham stolen one night last week, and some one has been helping themselves very liberally from a couple of choice apple trees belonging to Grandma Wyatt.

GARRETT.

Rev. A. S. Wooton of Auburn, was over here yesterday attending the meeting of the Epworth League.

Father Young was at Milwaukee last week to attend the great meeting at which the new archbishop, Katzer, was inducted into his holy office.

The adjuster of the Germania Insurance Company was here Tuesday, and he and Mr. Gengler our insurance agent, drove over to Auburn, and settled the loss of Mr. Wetowskie, paying him the full $1,000. That we call quick settlement of a fire loss. It will do the Germania good.

Last Friday morning, as a big excursion train of several coaches, was on its way east to Toledo, it ran into the yard engine of this place, on the sidetrack just west of town. The yard engine had just run onto the sidetrack to get out of the way of this extra, but had not got the switch closed, and the extra ran full tilt onto the sidetrack, its engine striking the yard engine, and both being demolished. The men on the yard engine jumped off when they saw the other train come onto the track and so escaped. Several were hurt on the excursion, but none seriously. Two of the forward coaches were forced into one another, and in them a newsboy was pinned so he had to be cut out. But strange as it may seem he was not hurt. The two cars were nearly empty, but he was almost paralyzed with fear as he saw the forward car come crushing back toward him, but he crouched down enough to prevent being crushed.

The Epworth League meeting here has been a grand success and our people have greatly enjoyed it. Among the visitors present, your correspondent noticed Rev. W. M. VanSlyke of Ft. Wayne, and Co. Supt. Merica of Auburn. The program was properly made up by calling on each league represented, to furnish some work, and this was cheerfully done. Auburn league gave a fine quartet by Minnie Zimmerman, Nettie Willis, Della Weaver and Mrs. Callie Zimmerman, with Stella Merica as organist. Mrs. Allen and Miss Rummel of Spencerville sang a sweet duet. A lady from Huntington gave a fine declamation, a medley, proving her to be an elocutionist of ability. There was a most affecting recitation given by a lady from Bluffton, and Mrs. Schrader of Ft. Wayne sang a fine solo. The evening lecture was by a young man from Summit, whose name was not learned. His address was good, and well received. Every exercise was good, and the audience was highly pleased. Too much praise cannot be given to the Garrett Epworth League chorus for their music. It was fine, and they and their leader, Mr. Ryder, were highly complimented. A similar program of work was arranged for Wednesday, and that evening's lecture was to be by Rev. Mr. Driver of Ft. Wayne. We should not omit here, a mention of the fine selections on the violin, given by a young man who has had the advantages of a full course of instruction in Germany. His music is grand. We are told he will be present at the teachers' institute in Auburn next week and give some of his finest selections. There was also a sweet song by a little girl from Churubusco. In fact the whole meeting has been a most pleasant one, and proves that Garrett people not only enjoy such gatherings, but are well qualified to make them a success.

SPENCERVILLE.

G. B. Erick is traveling in the south, in pursuit of health and business.

A number of masons from this place attended the funeral at Auburn Sunday.

Rev. J. J. Fred and family are at McCordsville, at the bedside of his aged father.

The picnic in Baltz's grove Thursday, was a success notwithstanding the threatening weather.

David Gratz one of our leading stock men, died Wednesday, and was buried in the Leo cemetery.

Rev. W. W. Waltman, of Kendallville, occupied the pulpit in the Lutheran church Sunday morning.

George Barney has repainted and otherwise improved his store buildings, occupied by Beams' Brothers.

Rev. Dr. Ort, of Springfield, Ohio, delivered an entertaining lecture in the Lutheran church Thursday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. John Bishop of Painwell, Mich., have been here visiting their many friends during the past week.

She Suffered for Fifteen Years.

My wife has suffered for fifteen years from congestion and painful menstruation. After using three bottles of Bradfield's Female Regulator she is now able to do her house work and go where she pleases. J. W. DAVIS, Moravian Falls, N. C.

Our Baby Boy.

The pride of our home should have proper care and during certain seasons when the air is damp, children are often taken with a severe cough that should be attended to in time. The best remedy you can use is Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. It is pleasant to the taste and can be given to the smallest child without danger. Mothers, send for Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup and use no other. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Waiter "Very fine chicken that, sir." Guest "Yes. I wonder how it escaped being killed for such a long time."

The Secret of Success.

Davenport the druggist, believes that the secret of success is perseverance. Therefore he persists in keeping the finest line of perfumeries, toilet articles, cosmetics, drugs and chemicals on the market. He especially invites all persons who have palpitation, short breath, weak or hungry spells, pain in side and shoulder, oppression, nightmare, dry cough, smothering, dropsy or heart disease to try Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, before it is too late. It has the largest sale of any similar remedy. Fine book of testimonials free. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is unsurpassed for sleeplessness, headache, fits, etc., and it contains no opiates. 2

The men who took Jonah's money were the same who threw him overboard. Things like that still happen.

A Husband's Mistake.

Husbands too often permit wives, and parents their children, to suffer from headache, dizziness, neuralgia, sleeplessness, fits, nervousness, when by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine such serious results could easily be prevented. Druggists everywhere say it gives universal satisfaction, and has an immense sale. Woodworth & Co., of Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Snow & Co., of Syracuse, N. Y.; J. C. Wolf, Hillsdale, Mich.; and hundreds of others say "it is the greatest seller they ever knew." It contains no opiates. Trial bottles and fine book on nervous diseases, free at F. E. Davenport's. 2

The reason some people "love at first sight," is because they don't know each other then.

Guaranteed Cure.

We authorize our advertised druggist to sell Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, upon this condition. If you are afflicted with a cough, cold or any lung, throat or chest trouble, and will use this remedy as directed, giving it a fair trial, and experience no benefit, you may return the bottle and have your money refunded. We could not make this offer did we not know that Dr. King's New Discovery could be relied on. It never disappoints. Trial bottles free at Robbins & Mather's drug store. Large size 50c and $1.00. 2

Crookedness in banks is always associated with the amount of hooking done.

Rheumatism can be Cured.

Mrs. C. H. Howard, of Chicago, Ill., speaks thus highly of Chamberlain's Restorative Pills as a cure for rheumatism: "Please send me some of your pills. I think them invaluable for rheumatism. They always stop it in me at once." Chamberlain's Restorative Pills can be had of all druggists.

"This is a cold snap," said the young girl as she partook of the ice cream.

At an adjourned meeting of the Board of trustees of Auburn held April 30, '53 at the store of S. B. Ward at which W. Griswold J. Leonard and S. B. Ward, trustees were present and S. W. Dickinson town clerk, it was resolved, "That in and from this time and henceforth this town be incorporated and governed as provided in Sec. 56, of chapter 108 of the revised statutes of 1852."

If any one is curious to know the language of the section then referred to he will find it as follows: "Any town heretofore incorporated may, by a resolution of the board of trustees or other municipal board thereof, entered upon the record book of the corporation, become incorporated under this act, but the same shall be deemed a surrender of all the rights and franchises acquired under any former act of incorporation or acts amendatory thereto. A copy of such resolution shall be filed with the clerk of circuit court of the proper county and be entered by him on record.

Trustees or other officers of such incorporated town by whatever name designated, performing duties of a like nature to those required of officers created by this act shall continue to be an officer of such town by the name as specified in this act until superseded by the annual election."

It seems by this that Auburn was a second time incorporated but to what intent or advantage does not appear.

At the general May election, 1853, held at the court house, the assessor, treasurer and marshal, heretofore appointed by the board of trustees were chosen by popular vote. The whole number of ballots cast was 51. James W. Case received the full vote, having no opposition.

The other trustees chosen were Wyllys Griswold, George R. Baker, Ephraim Berry and James Brinkerhoff. S. W. Dickinson was elected clerk, W. B. Dancer, assessor; John McCune, treasurer and Isaac Brandt, marshal.

Mr. McCune found a competitor in John Ralston, who received 17 votes. Mr. Ralston was elected clerk of DeKalb county and served as such from 1859 to 1867 when he was succeeded by J. R. Lanning. He sold his property at the north end of Main street to Jacob Grogg the present owner and removed to one of the southern states to live. He is now at Waxahatchie, Texas.

It was deemed necessary to have a special marshal and A. O. Espy was appointed to and accepted the office.

We come now to a consideration of one of the two highly important features in the development of the community which had their origin as regards Auburn during the year 1853.

The measure first in order, was the inauguration of our general and uniform system of common schools in Auburn and in DeKalb county under provisions of the act passed June 14, 1852.

The school law of 1852 was in force in August of that year, at which date its provisions were circulated in pamphlet form in the different counties of the state by authority, but it did not become practically operative until the first Monday in April, 1853 when township trustees who are also trustees for school purposes were elected in the several townships of the counties.

The first duty of town and township trustees in this connection was to establish and conveniently locate a sufficient number of schools for the education of all the children within respective limits.

Heretofore shabby rooms had been hired and the character of the school house had been left to the enterprise of the settlers. We have seen a room of the court house used by Mr. Hendricks for school purposes and an idea of the school house of that day might have been gained by a look at the old building on the east side of the north end of Cedar street. This shabby frame long known as the home of old Samuel Moore, the wood sawyer, was a type of the school building in vogue in 1853. It was torn down in the spring of 1891 by the present owner, J. N. Grover, who will soon erect thereon a modern dwelling.

Here and there in DeKalb county, the people had put up houses and June 14, 1853, there was formed in Butler township at the farm house of Orrin C. Clark, an organization known as the "Union School House Educational Society." Three trustees for the society were elected, namely, Henry Clark, Harris and Jacob Dahman, and it would be of interest to hear from Mr. Rodgers or Mr. Clark as to what they accomplished by their society.

It is stated on good authority that in some townships in counties of Indiana, there was not in 1851, a single school house of any kind to be found, and viewed by this light the term "hoosier" was no misnomer for lack of scholarship.

In other townships, there were a few old, leaky, dilapidated log cabins wholly unfit for use in summer and in winter worse than nothing.

Even at the best, where there were houses, the change from district to the township system rendered locations inconvenient and necessitated sales, removals and erection of new houses in places more convenient.

It was estimated that to secure even tolerable school accommodations would require the building of at least 3500 school houses in the state.

The then existing common school fund was solely intended for payment of teachers and hence all expense connected with building and repairs of school houses could be met by the levy of a special tax on the polls and property of the people.

By provisions of the new constitution, each township was made a municipal corporation of which every voter was a member. The state had provided a system of public instruction and now intrusted its execution to its cities, towns and townships.

No authority had been given to levy a special school tax without the consent of the voters to be given at a general or special meeting and this latitude in localities, defeated the ends sought; for while the many freely or reluctantly gave this consent, there were localities where no meetings were held and there were others where the vote was adverse.

The authorities, of Auburn were progressive men and most favorably inclined to the new law and at the proper time, ordered the clerk to post notices of an election for school trustees and for a vote on tax or no tax for school purposes in and for the said town.

On May 14, the polls were open and the apparent want of public interest in this important question is shown by the few votes cast.

At this time when the conservatives were allied with the opponents of free schools and the greatest difficulties were encountered, it is well to make honorable record of the names of Auburn townsmen who to the number of 25 voted at this meeting.

As 22 votes were for the tax, two opposed and one voted blank; we will leave it an open question as to who the last named were and give them the benefit of the uncertainty.

The voters were W. Griswold, G. W. Stahl, J. T. Bliss, T. R. Dickinson, W. W. Griswold, M. Waterman, J. Morris, T. J. Freeman, W. McDonalls, E. Berry, W. K. Straight, S. W. Dickinson, John Palmer, S. B. Ward, G. R. Baker, A. Hutchinson, A. Hall, J. Brinkerhoff, T. Finney, G. W. Teeters, J. McCune, J. P. Widney, S. Sanders, G. Brandt and J. Johnson.

(To be continued next week.)

Obituary.

Elizabeth Sanders was born in Lancaster county, Pa., Dec. 10, 1805 and died at her home in Richland township DeKalb county, Ind., August 22, 1891 at the age of 85 yrs. 8 mos. and 12 days. She was married to William Bishop in the fall of 1831 and in October 1845 they moved to Jackson township, DeKalb county and settled on a farm in the Lawhead neighborhood. There her husband died on the 4th of January 1846 and was buried at the Tarney graveyard. In October 1848, she was married to George Deter, and moved with him to Richland township, and here both lived till their death, on the farm he had entered from the government. Mr. Deter died Sept. 15, 1860, leaving her again, a widow. She lived on the home farm till her death. The funeral was held at the U. B. church at Richland Center, and she was laid to rest in the cemetery there. The services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Elson and Elder James Barton, in the presence of a large concourse of friends. She leaves 8 children, 16 grandchildren and 8 great-grand children to mourn her loss. In early life at the age of 17, she united with the Albright church, and 34 years later, she united with the German Baptist church, of which she remained a faithful member till her death. She was a worthy woman and esteemed by who knew her. She has gone to her rest and to her reward.

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Sedan Sunday School upon the death of a sister and fellow worker, Mrs. Emily Farrington Guthrie:

Resolved; That we, each one, will do all we can to fill her place, by more constant attendance and more diligent labor in the Sunday school; and that we, her friends and fellow workers, while we feel the loss of our departed sister, and sympathize with her sorrowing husband and sons and daughters, do resolve, that we will bow to the dispensation of Him who understands all our losses, and will say, the Lord is good. His mercy endureth forever.

"'Tis Jesus calls his children home,
To perfect peace and rest;
Our loved one heard that tender call,
And crossed the shades of death,
To join a bright and happy band,
And there to stand at God's right hand
And be forever blest."

THE SCHAAB FURNITURE COMPANY.

Auburn has a Big, New Business House that will Open about Oct. 1.

We give space this week for an important announcement, the early opening up of an additional business house in Auburn. We refer to the

that will begin business about Oct. 1, in the large room next north of their store. They will put in the largest and best stock of furniture of all kinds, including a full line of undertaker's goods, and in connection with this will have the finest funeral car ever in this part of the state. No pains or expense will be spared to make the establishment complete in all its details. A door will communicate between the great dry goods and carpet store already occupied by Schaab & Brother, and the new furniture rooms. The furniture store itself will be under the personal control and direction of Wm. Crane, a man of large experience and good taste and judgment, while the mechanical department will be in the hands of G. S. McCord, also an experienced and capable man. He takes charge, especially of the business in the funeral department. Members of the company have for some weeks been looking over the various factories and wholesale establishments in the large cities, getting new ideas and laying in stock of the best and latest paterns. It will be seen that this new house is going into the business full handed and in the best possible shape. There is no element of success lacking and it is bound to boom from the word go. Keep your eye on the new company Remember the time Oct. 1, and the place the room so long occupied by Schaab & Murphy with their clothing store.

That Seventh Street Bridge.

If the Dispatch had a little more judgment and would exercise it at the proper time, it would be a grand thing. Its chronic habit of grumbling and complaining, objecting, advising, and getting up a scare in season and out of season, is one of the remarkable freaks of the century. We have often stated our objection to this thoughtless habit that has more than once subjected our county and our city to needless and unjust criticism, but of no avail. It seems to be in the grain and can't be got out.

Now, just as people are getting ready to come to Auburn and attend the fair out comes a scalp-raising article about Seventh street bridge, the one over which so much of the business will go. The commissioners have not only had all needed repairs made, but have had two of the most competent bridge builders in the country to examine the bridge in all its parts and in detail. Alpheus Wheelock and G. W. Werntz know more about this make of bridge than any other men in this part of the country, and they say the bridge is perfectly safe, and will be for many years to come. The fact that a brace or two came loose, does not, in the least affect the structure. At the time they examined the bridge the county commissioners and two members of the Auburn town council, Mr. Harter and Mr. Sheffer, were present, and all feel at ease about the bridge. Of course, if people prefer to go over the new iron bridge on Ninth street they are welcome to do so, but we feel like disabusing their minds of any scare the Dispatch, innocently perhaps, has caused. If that paper could see any sort of thing going on and not attempt to boss it, it would be more to its credit, and better for the peace of mind of the public.

THE ANCIENT HORSE.

It has Seen Many Surprising Changes.

The doctrine of evolution is now universally accepted by the learned world as regards the production of families of animals, if not of species. Among the most striking evidences of the truth of the evolution theory is the horse. Let us state some interesting facts of his history.

It is now conceded that the horse originated on the American continent, and thence spread all over the world. But few could recognize the original horse if we could see him. He was an animal not much larger than a common fox, with only the rudiments of a mane—short hairs that bristled along the top of his neck—a bob and comparatively short haired tail. His body was thick and sturdy. His feet were each divided into five long and widely spreading toes, like fingers, each with a thick, horny claw at its tip. He inhabited great shallow marshes, near the present base of the Rocky Mountains, which were then just heaving their heads above the universal ocean. The habitation of the horse being marshy, over which the sea tide ebbed and flowed, he lived upon coarse grasses and herbs. His wide-spreading toes enabled him to walk upon the grassy tufts and hammocks that showed above the water, and to get over bogs without sinking, and thus escape from his foes. So he grew and multiplied.

NATURE IS A GREAT INVENTOR.

She is very like a human inventor. When she created the original horse, or cat, or wild ox, they were no more like the horses, cats and oxen of to-day than the first crude steam engine is like the modern locomotive. But the first horse was a crude success. The principle was there, and the patent a good thing. So nature went to work making improvements from time to time, as the environment—the habitat, food, climate and habits of the horse—changed. The mountains and continent rose; the sea receded; the marshes dried up; the climate changed slowly, through how many centuries conjecture hesitates to guess. The coarse marsh grains and herbs became finer, jucier and richer. Forests grew. The horse's enemies became different also. Gradually, therefore, he had little and thus no use for his long hind toe, which projected from above the rest. It became first a limb appendage; thus it shrunk in length and size; finally it disappeared completely, except a bare rudiment, now only to be found by the skillful anatomist. The claws or nails of the other toes thickened and enlarged, as the horse now walked upon firm earth or ground. His body grew larger and more graceful, as his food was richer. His speed increased, as he now had to escape his foes partly over fair running ground.

So the change went on for many more centuries. Having less and less use for his still spreading toes, they shortened and thickened slowly. By and by

TWO OF THEM BECAME JOINED IN ONE.

The nails became more like hoofs, and now there was the three-toed horse. He was about as large as a good common sheep of to-day, and still stocky, but much fleeter than his grandfathers. His mane had grown into a thick, hairy ridge, and his tail hairs had lengthened. Now he began to speed marvelously.

Again a period of centuries. Now the earth was clothed with rich meadow grasses, or savannahs, generally bearing dry berries. Climate had changed also. The horse now had to travel and feed on dry, sandy, gravelly and sometimes rocky ground. He had to fly from wolves and other fleet enemies. His legs grew longer, his proportions slimmer, but larger; his toes shortened still more, and his hoofs thickened. By and by his smallest toe joined its next neighbor. He was now with a cleft hoof like the deer, the sheep, the hog, and the ox, and as large as the wonderful little mite of a fairy pony — But he wasn't as handsome as the midget pony—bless you! No. His mane and tail were still thick, short and coarse. His body was still comparatively stumpy. But he was a real, genuine, no-mistake horse.

But now for another cycle of centuries the horse went on changing. He forsook the morasses and marshes. He preferred the dry, hard, plains and prairies, the forests and the mountains. The climate made him acquainted with snow and ice, as well as summer heats. Evidently his split hoofs were a disadvantage. Pebbles got into their clefts and clogged them. So they slowly closed up; the horny hoof grew, and presently there was the single-hoofed horse, as he is to-day. He was in heathen Asia and in Europe for food, like other wild animals. His charred bones are found in caves where the wild man—the aboriginal savage—dwelt. Still the first wild horses were small, shaggy, rough-maned and rough-tailed ponies. They were fleet, cunning and bold, as they should have been, having the future before them. And in favorable climates and countries they grew in size and beauty, until their manes and tails spread like shining silk to the free winds of the plains, as they became fleet, strong and beautiful, with their necks "clothed with thunder," as mentioned in the Holy Writ.

For now, in some unknown country, by some unknown race, man interfered, and began to aid nature in improving the horse. He became the slave, the servant, the friend, the companion of man. The very earliest teachings of Egyptian art, probably show the horse already a war charger, and already developed generally in strength, beauty and fleetness.

So now there was a new tendency in the horse. The oftner animals are improved by either nature or man, the easier improvement becomes. Of all animals, except dogs, horses have the strongest inherited faculty for improvement. We now breed a new variety of a horse in a century, when once it required 1,000 years. The thoroughbred race horse is the product of about 200 years of breeding; the fast trotter of less than 100 years—mainly of the last fifty years.

The greatest measure of variability in the matter of lopped ears is to be found among dogs. Spaniels, setters, pointers, bloodhounds, beagles and foxhounds all have long, pendulous ears; bulldogs, terriers, collies and greyhounds droop only the tips of their ears; the spitz has erect ears, while mastiffs and many other breeds have short, pendulous or semi-pendulous ears.

The elephant probably came of an ancestral stock that had erect ears, but for ages past there has been no creature powerful enough to cause it alarm, and for want of exercise the muscles which move the ear have lost tone and wasted away, leaving the ear to lop or hang pendulous.

Directly one enters a room there is a sense either of cheer or the reverse. After leaving the apartment one may not be able to tell how it was furnished, but every one knows the effect produced.

GOOD NEWS AND BAD.

IT COMES FROM ALL QUARTERS OF THE WORLD.

Road Agents Hold Up a Train in Colorado —Affairs in Mexico—Steamboat Collision —Another Strike on the Lake Erie.

ROBBERS' PICNIC.

The Gay and Festive Road Agents Relieve the Express Companies of a Little Cash.

Texas Creek (Col.) special: The Denver and Rio Grande train No. 4, from Ogden, was "held up" four miles west of this station Wednesday night by seven masked men, and the express car robbed of $6,600. None of the passengers were molested. The night track walker was overhauled by the robbers at 9 o'clock in the evening and compelled to flag the train. Torpedoes were placed on the track. Sheriffs of neighboring counties have dispatched posses in pursuit of the robbers.

One of the robbers was described as a man of 40, wearing a dark stiff hat. A second member of the party was a man of about the same age, a third was a smooth faced boy, apparently not over 20 years. A detective agency at Denver was at once called upon and a car load of operatives were quickly started for the scene of the robbery on a special train, accompanied by the surgeon of the road.

A Bogus Nun.

Sister Beatrice, the notorious bogus nun, who has been frequently exposed in the newspapers, was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court at New York, on the charge of vagrancy, preferred by Agent Jerome of the Charity Organization Society. She was committed for examination. The woman has a history. She is the same woman who sued the late Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, for $50,000 for breach of promise of marriage. Gen. B. F. Butler was counsel for Senator Cameron, and the trial which lasted about two weeks, resulted in a verdict against the woman. She is said to be Marie Oliver, wife of Thomas Marshall Oliver, of Louisville, Ky., who discarded her. Senator Cameron first met her in New Orleans in 1876. She followed him to Washington and he secured her a position in the Treasury Department. While she was living at the Tremont House Gen. Cameron advanced her $1,000.

Affairs in Mexico.

St. Louis special: The sensational news from the City of Mexico in relation to the impending revolution was read with more than passing interest in St. Louis. George F. Miller, formerly private secretary to Samuel J. Randall when Speaker of the House at Washington, had an extensive acquaintance with prominent Mexicans and Mexican affairs. He pronounced the charges against President Diaz the veriest bosh. Gen. Francisco Olivares, of the Mexican army, was in St. Louis in June last, and Mr. Miller had quite a lengthy conversation, during which the General told him that President Diaz had not antagonized any party. That his course had been such as to win him friends of all political color. Gen. Olivares is a Catholic, and he had no hesitancy in saying that the President had done nothing to arouse the enmity of the clerical party.

A Brother's Vengeance.

A terrible tragedy occurred on a farm near Chane's Crossing, Ohio. Two young men were standing on a threshing machine, one cutting bands and the other feeding. The band cutter accidentally cut the hand of the feeder, which so enraged him that he threatened to throw his fellow workman into the machine. A few minutes later the knife came in contact with the feeder's hand, and in a rage he picked up his companion and threw him into the machine. The murdered man's brother witnessed the act and plunged a pitchfork through the murderer's body, killing him instantly.

A Steamboat Collision.

Detroit special: The steam barge E. H. Jenks was sunk, having collided with the steamer Morley, on the west bank of Ballard's reef, and lies in twenty feet of water. Three persons were drowned. Six of the crew of the Jenks, who were on the decks when the collision occurred, jumped into the water as the boat sank and were rescued by the crew of the Morley. The three who perished were below. The Jenks is owned by the Jenks Shipping Company, of Port Huron, Mich., and was valued at $10,000. A diver has gone down to rescue the bodies of the dead.

Struck Again.

The freight brakemen and conductors on the Lake Erie and Western road struck at Lafayette, Ind., again, and have notified the men at Peru, Lima and Indianapolis of their action. The new schedule did not prove satsifactory to them, and the committee waited on General Manager Bradbury at Indianapolis. The conference did not prove satisfactory and a strike was inaugurated.

Soldiers' Reunion.

The veterans of the Seventy-fourth Indiana Infantry will meet in reunion at Goshen, Ind., Sept. 15-16.

Newspaper Burned Out.

The office of the Sunday Observer at Troy, N. Y., was destroyed by fire. Many valuable papers and files were lost.

Public Debt Statement.

The public debt statement for the month of August shows an increase of $4,490,679,05.

Eyesight Probably Destroyed.

The 13-year-old son of Henry Dickinson, five miles northeast of Lebanon, Ind., was shot in both eyes by an unknown party while he and his companions were playing tick-tack at the residence of a neighbor. His eyesight is probably destroyed.

Killed by the Cars.

Anton Kohlbacker, a shoemaker of Rockport, Ind., was run over by a train and killed instantly. Both legs, his right arm and his head were severed from the body, and his brains were scattered along the track.

Collision at Sea.

Melbourne special: The steamer Gambier and Easby collided in Fipplis Sea. The Gambier was coming in from Sydney and the Easby was bound out. The Gambier's side was crushed in and a panic ensued among the passengers, most of whom had been asleep in their berths, and who now rushed on deck. The Easby rescued many of the Gambier's passengers and crew, but before she could reach them all, the Gambier sank, carrying down five saloon passengers, fifteen steerage passengers, and six of the crew. The Easby's boats were unable to find any survivors on the water. The Easby was not much damaged. The night was clear and many assert that the lights and lookouts were not properly kept on either vessel.

AWFUL SCENES.

A Passenger Train Wrecked Near Troy, Ind.

A terrible accident occurred on the Canneiton branch of the L. E. & St. L. Railway, by which four persons were killed, thirteen seriously injured, and eighteen others more or less. The flange of one of the forward trucks of the engine broke while the train was running at a rate of about thirty miles an hour. The train at the time was on a trestle about two miles from Troy, Ind. The engine passed over the trestle and plunged down the embankment. The train was a mixed one, the passenger coach being next to the engine. The coach followed the engine into the ditch and rolled over on top of it. It was occupied by about thirty people. The steam pipes gave way and the scalding steam entered the coach. Many of the passengers were women and children. Their screams were appalling. As soon as those who were slightly injured extricated themselves, they began the work of rescue. All were gotten out, but none escaped injury. Many were so badly burned that their flesh was cooked in places until it came off. Barbara Neimeyer, aged 18 years, daughter of a wealthy farmer of Perry County, was taken out dead, having been terribly scalded. Mrs. Canaugh, of Troy, Ind., was horribly burned and will die. Her little 10-year-old son died before reaching home. Emma Schue, 10 years old, died from her terrible burns. Jacob App, engineer, and his fireman, John Toll, went down with the wreck. Both are scalded, but not fatally. Conductor James Gordon is dangerously hurt, having a number of ribs broken. The scene of the wreck is isolated and the information is meagre. Only one telegraphic wire reaches it, and that has been down for hours. It is impossible to learn the names of the injured. A physician at the wreck said the death list would probably reach ten or twelve.

CLOUDBURST IN NEW YORK.

A Flood Followed by Unparalleled Damage.

Berlin (N. Y.) special: A cloudburst over this town and the town of Petersburg, was followed by a flood and did damage unparalleled in this city. Those who were in dangerous locations sought places of safety. Had the cloud burst after the people had gone to bed, the loss of life would have been awful. As it was, the wife of Thomas Taylor was drowned in her home in sight of her husband, who was outside, but could not get through the current to save her. Her two children were saved.

James Smith was found dead, standing in mud up to his neck horribly mangled, about half a mile from a barn in which he was last seen alive.

The Lebanon Springs railroad for a distance of about five miles, is washed away into the meadows for many rods in half a dozen places. A large railroad bridge is also gone besides a score or more highway bridges. The valuable outbuildings of Mr. Tiller are wrecked and several acres surrounding are covered to a depth of four feet with large stones; the residence of Chief Chas. Park was turned upside down. The entire family was absent at a campmeeting. All the mountain streams were so much swollen that seemingly irreparable damage has been done. Meadows are ruined and crops in the vicinity are lost.

A score of residences and workshops at Petersburg are washed from their foundations and a large amount of personal property destroyed. No lives were lost there, but there were several narrow escapes from death. The loss in crops will be a very serious matter to farmers along the line of the flood through this valley. It is thought here that railroad communications to points north will not be resumed for several weeks, as facilities for repairing the damage promptly are not at hand.

HOGAN DROPS

A Thousand Feet to Earth and Is Mashed Into a Horrible and Sickening Mass.

Detroit special: The balloon ascension at the Exposition grounds ended in a frightful tragedy. Prof. George Hogan, the Jackson aeronaut, made the ascension, performing the while on the trapeze. He had reached a height of probably 1,000 feet, and was preparing to cut loose for his descent in the parachute when he lost his head and fell, striking without the grounds. Thirty thousand people were witnesses of the horrible spectacle, but no one seemed to comprehend the accident to the doomed man until he had nearly reached the earth. The body shot through the air with frightful velocity and struck a plank sidewalk head downward. So great was the force that the two-inch planks were broken and splintered. Blood spurted 100 feet from the corpse. Not a bone in the body escaped being broken, and the head was mashed beyond recognition.

Prof. Hogan was about 40 years old and a most daring fellow. He was very skillful in making ascensions, and although he has made a great many has never met with any serious accident. He was a brother of Prof. Ed. Hogan, who made the trial trip of Campbell's air ship two years ago.

The air ship was subsequently found stranded on the Atlantic shore of Long Island, but Hogan was never after heard from, and it is supposed he was drowned in the ocean.

Dashed to Death.

J. Herman Hobrock, a gang foreman in the car shops of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway at Fort Wayne, Ind., was dashed from a scaffold to his death. The structure that sent the man to his doom was about fifteen feet in height. It was erected under his supervision and seemed so poorly constructed when finished that some of the workmen expressed unwillingness to trust the chances by climbing upon it. Mr. Hobrock ascended to the top to inspect the cause of the weakness, when the timbers loosened and the entire structure collapsed. Mr. Hobrock fell head foremost and struck the plank floor with such force that three ribs were broken off at the spine, and, penetrating the lungs, produced internal hemorrhage from which he died.

Afflicted With Carus.

An extraordinary case has been developed at Whitehall, near Muskegon, Mich. George Beard, a young man, aged 21, has been confined to his bed for the last three months, during seven weeks of which time he has been in an unconscious condition. He seems to have lost all sense save that of feeling. When he is touched on the arm with a slight downward pressure he will raise his arm. When an attempt is made to move his head to the right he will turn it to the left. In order to feed the patient four teeth had to be knocked out, as it was impossible to open his mouth, either to insert food or extract the teeth. Through this opening he receives his liquid nourishment. The attending physician pronounces it a case of carus.

The Sultan Apologizes to the Russian Bear.

The Constantinople correspondent of the London Standard says: "The Sultan has yielded to all of Russia's demands respecting the Dardenelles, which henceforth will be open to Russian vessels when closed to others. The Sultan has abjectly apologized for the recent detention of a Russian vessel; has dismissed the officers responsible therefor, and has promised indemnity forthwith."

Our Hog in Germany.

Berlin special: It is reported in Hamburg, that all restrictions on American pork will be removed immediately. The United States Minister, Hon. William Walter Phelps, when questioned on this subject smilingly refused to confirm the report, but said he would repeat what he said six months ago, to the effect that the American hog would enter the Bradenburg gate before this year's acorns fell. It is known, however, that Mr. Phelps, in his last dispatch to the German Foreign Office, intimated plainly to the officials of that department that the patience of President Harrison and Mr. Blaine would not last beyond September.

Saved from the Wreck.

The steamship Arizona, which has arrived at New York, brought with her eight members of the crew of the ship Sea Gull, which was wrecked in a terrific gale of wind on the African coast. There were twenty-six, all told, in the Sea Gull's crew, and they were all drowned save the eight men picked up by the Arizona. When the Arizona found them they were floating on a small raft in the middle of the Atlantic ocean, and frantically waving signals of distress. All of them were terribly emaciated from hunger and exposure. The eight survivors are the first mate, cook and six of the crew.

The Sea Serpent Seen Again.

Shediac (N. B.) special: Two pilots and three other men just back from a mackerel-fishing expedition report that when eight miles off Richibucto shore, they saw a see serpent. It was 200 feet long, about the size of man's body, and had a flat-shaped head, with eyes on top like a frog. It resembles a snake, and sometimes raised its head six feet out of water, and its body curved like an immense hawser. They were near enough to see scales on its body and were within view of it for an hour or more. The parties are all reliable.

Farmers Ruined.

All the northwestern part of Faulk County, South Dakota, was burned over by a terrible and most destructive fire twenty miles wide, and extending from Faulkton fifty miles northwest. As far as the eye can reach the sky was lit up with burning stacks of hay and grain. The farmers are ruined. For a space of twenty miles not a foot of grass is left for stock that escaped the flames. The damage cannot be estimated yet. A heavy gale fanned the flames.

A Duel Probable.

A prominent citizen of North Carolina who is well acquainted with Ashe, the editor of the News and Observer, who has been having a war in the newspapers with President Polk, of the Alliance, expressed the opinion that there would certainly be a duel between Ashe and Polk unless Polk's courage failed him. In the event of Polk's declining a duel he said Ashe would either cowhide him or they would have a fist fight on the street. He said there was bound to be a fight, and he believed there would be bloodshed. He says that Ashe is a man of great courage.

The Guillotine.

A dispatch from Doual says that a youth named Baillett, convicted of a number of murderers under circumstances of exceptional atrocity, was guillotined there. He joked and laughed during the march to the guillotine. He refused the spiritual offices of the priests and shouted, "Vive la Republique." He was seized and flung beneath the knife, and two seconds later the murderer's head toppled into the basket.

"Money or Your Life."

Ironton (O.) special: The other day in a joking way, Mrs. Tillie Reckman pointed an old revolver in the face of Miss Dora May who was visiting her from Ashland, Ky. Mrs. Reckman said "money or your life" in regulation style and the revolver went off killing Miss May instantly. The old weapon had not been used for years, but had been loaded by a brother only a few days defore.

Split His Eye-Ball.

Robert Garringer, a farm employe residing two miles south of Portland, Ind., met with a terribly painful accident. He was repairing a fly-net, and had his knife in hand to sever a knot. When he made the cut, the weapon slipped and split his eye-ball completely in twain. The sight is completely destroyed.

A Double Murder.

A double murder was discovered in Bloomfield, Conn., when the bodies of a German farmer and his wife were found in a well. It is supposed that they were killed by Italian laborers, who have been employed in the vicinity of their home.

Killed by an Express Train.

As the limited express was running through Dearborn, Mich., at full speed it struck and instantly killed John Ruttiman and his 7-year-old daughter as they were walking across the track. Both were fearfully mangled.

The Clothes Line Route.

At Cleveland, Ohio, Joseph Campbell, a young man of wealthy parents, was found dead in a cellar. He had committed suicide by hanging himself with a clothes line to a rafter.

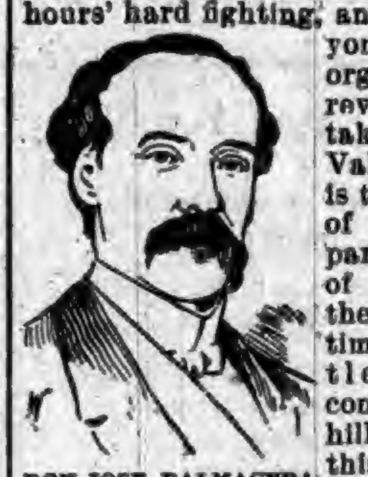
CANTO HAS CONQUERED

BALMACEDA'S TROOPS DEFEATED IN CHILI.

Valparaiso Is Taken—Great Carnage Reported—Generals Barbosa and Alcerreca Among the Slain—Whole Regiments Desert the Dictator and Join the Victorious Army.

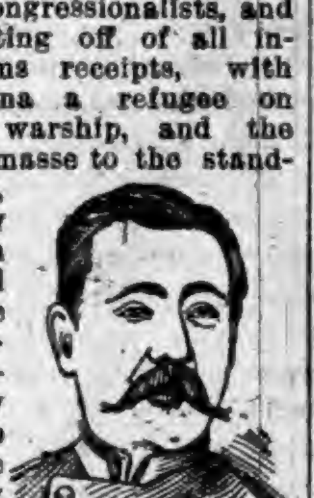
A Terrible Conflict.

Balmaceda's power in Chili is broken. His army has been crushed after five hours' hard fighting, and is scattered beyond all hope of reorganization. The revolutionists have taken possession of Valparaiso. This is is the latest budget of news from Valparaiso. The future of Chili, continues the dispatch, for the time has been settled, and settled conclusively, on the hills to the east of this city by the grim arbitrament of war.

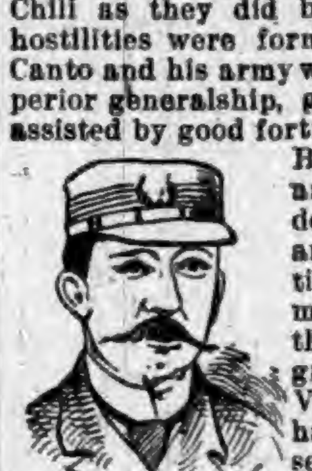


DON JOSE BALMACEDA.

With Balmaceda practically a fugitive without resources in men or money, with the principal seaports of the country in the hands of the Congressionalists, and a consequent shutting off of all income from customs receipts, with President-elect Vicuna a refugee on board a German warship, and the country flocking en masse to the standard of the invaders, it is a matter of only a short time when the capital will fall into the hands of the revolutionary leaders. A new government, with possibly Judge Belisario Prats, head of the last parliamentary cabinet of Balmaceda, or Manuel Jose Irarrazaval, head of the congress cabinet, at its head, will be formed, and things will go along in about the same way in Chili as they did before Jan. 7, when hostilities were formally begun. Gen. Canto and his army won the battle by superior generalship, good hard fighting, assisted by good fortune in the killing of Balmaceda's Generals and the consequent demoralization of the army and the desertion of entire regiments. Ever since the arrival of the congressionalst army at Vina del Mar there has been a constant series of maneuvers for position on the part of both Generals. Ever day, and nearly every hour of the day, there have been skirmishes, in some instances amounting almost to battles. In nearly all of these the opposition has had the better of it. A close censorship of dispatches was established by Balmaceda, however, and only an inkling of the reverses to his arms could be got through.

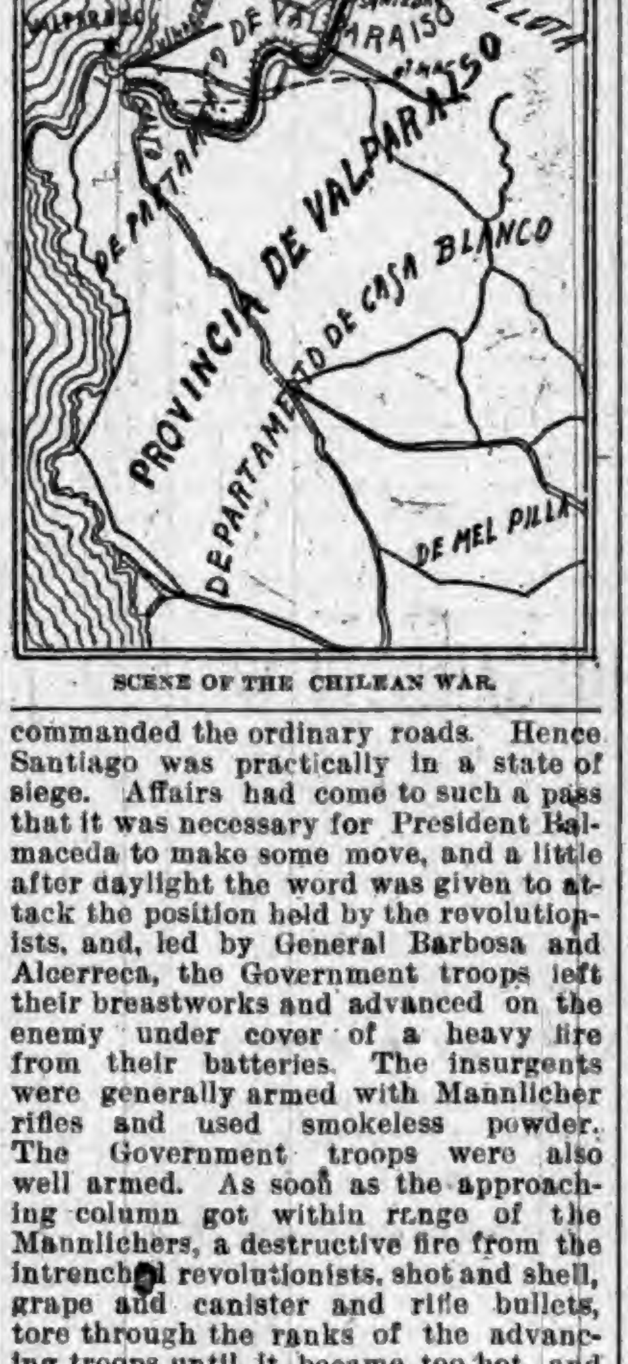


GEN. CANTO, REVOLUTIONARY LEADER.



A. FUEUTIS, COMMANDER OF THE CAPTURED TORPEDO-BOAT, ALMIRANTE LYNCH.

The boom of cannon announced to the people of Valparaiso that a movement beyond the ordinary skirmishes had begun. The occasional loud reports of the heavy guns soon swelled into one continuous roar, and then it was known that the final decisive struggle which, at the cost of thousands of lives, perhaps, was to decide whether Balmaceda or the junta was to be the ruling power in Chili had begun. Excitement was intense in Valparaiso. General Canto's position was on the hills above the race track at Vina del Mar, outside of the city. He had absolute control of the railroad at Santiago and commanded the ordinary roads. Hence Santiago was practically in a state of siege. Affairs had come to such a pass that it was necessary for President Balmaceda to make some move, and a little after daylight the word was given to attack the position held by the revolutionists, and, led by General Barbosa and Alcerreca, the Government troops left their breastworks and advanced on the enemy under cover of a heavy fire from their batteries. The insurgents were generally armed with Mannlicher rifles and used smokeless powder. The Government troops were also well armed. As soon as the approaching column got within range of the Mannlichers, a destructive fire from the intrenched revolutionists, shot and shell, grape and canister and rifle bullets, tore through the ranks of the advancing troops until it became too hot, and despite the efforts of the officers they broke and retired almost in a panic. Officers worked like beavers to re-form their columns as soon as they got within range of the deadly Mannlichers and at last succeeded. Then came another attack. In steady ranks the government troops started on a double-quick up into the torrent of fire and lead which blazed from the ranks of the insurgent army.



SCENE OF THE CHILEAN WAR.

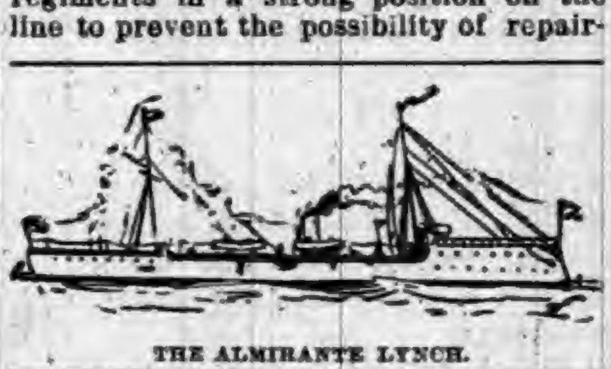
Early in the second charge General Barbosa was shot down and killed. The line wavered but kept on. Then General Alcerreca fell from his horse, wounded unto death. He was removed from the field and died within an hour. Another break and then General Canto gave the order to charge. With a wild yell the congressionalist army left their defenses and charged on the retreating enemy. Their artillery poured a deadly fire into the ranks of Balmaceda's army. The loss of their generals left them without a head, and all the efforts of the subordinate officers to rally them to meet the onset of Canto's regiments and squadrons were of no avail. The retreat became a rout, the rout a panic, and then came utter demoralization. The Government cavalry made a stand, but it was short. They were literally cut to pieces. Volley after volley was poured into the demoralized mob of Balmacedists. Whole regiments which had not lost their regimental formation went over to the victorious troops of Canto and joined in the attack on their late comrades.

The fighting lasted a little less than five hours, and its desperate character may be judged by the fact that fully 5,000 men were killed and wounded. The defeat of the government is absolute and complete. There is no possibility of a reorganization, and if Balmaceda does not succeed in making his escape through the mountain passes which are yet open the chances are that he will be captured and shot.

The inhabitants of Valparaiso are now apparently revolutionists in their sympathy, for as the insurgent troops, flushed with victory, marched through the streets they were greeted with the wildest enthusiasm. From the windows of the houses showers of flowers were flung by the enthusiastic women on the heads of the leaders. Shortly after the entry of the army of General Canto, Captain Alberto Fuentes, of the torpedo boat Almirante Lynch, which was lying at the Fiscal Mole, was summoned to surrender. He attempted to steam out, and opened fire with his machine guns on the insurgent troops. There was a sharp engagement, lasting fifteen minutes, and then Captain Fuentes hauled down his flag and there was not an enemy to the revolution from Fort Aldivia to Vina del Mar. Valparaiso is as quiet as could be expected under the circumstances and no trouble is expected. Not much has been done as yet toward reorganizing the city. But this will be attended to as soon as possible. Nobody here has any knowledge of the whereabouts of President Balmaceda. The insurgent leaders are exceedingly anxious to find out where he is, and if they succeed in finding him the chances are that it will go hard with him. The general belief here is that he is making his way out of the country, perhaps overland to Buenos Ayres.

Senor Lazcano, the Chilian Minister at Washington, on being interviewed, said that he had received no news from Chili other than the dispatch given to the press.

The fall of Valparaiso insures that of Santiago. General Canto, the congressional leader, has had this object in view in every movement he made since he landed on the beach of Vina del Mar. Mar. He maneuvered so that he was able to swing his little army round until he got it into a strong position between Balmaceda and Santiago. The President had already drawn every available man from the capital for the defense of Valparaiso when Canto got possession of the railroad and cut it so effectively that it could be of no further use. Then he stationed one of his best regiments in a strong position on the line to prevent the possibility of repairing it until he should be through with Balmaceda. The President saw his intention, and hastily made arrangements to smuggle off on one of his steamers in the dead of night a body of troops to reenforce Santiago's depleted garrison. But it will not be able to make even a decent show of resistance, and the surrender of the capital is only a question of the length of time it will take the victorious army to get there. With Santiago in the hands of the junta's army, the war is over.



THE ALMIRANTE LYNCH.

An Artist's Costume.

Rosa Bonheur's practical but unusual style of dress sometimes serves the great artist as an unintentional disguise, and leads to odd mistakes as to her identity. Her costume is perfectly suited to the work which is the absorbing interest of her life, and now and then she forgets that it is not appropriate at all times.

She once returned, after painting all day in the country, to a new house, just as the movers were putting in the last pieces of furniture. Her hair was cut short, and she wore her usual costume for painting out of doors, a blouse, trousers, and stout shoes. The men were carrying something up-stairs, and she sat down to wait until the way was clear.

One of the men looked up and saw, as they thought, a young man in workman's dress coolly watching their efforts, and cried:

"Only look at that lazy gentleman! Give him an easy-chair! Here, move your feet, you gentleman of leisure, and lend a hand!"

Rosa laughed and hastened to help them carry a heavy dressing-case. But her strength was not equal to her good-will.

"What an absurd boy! He hasn't the strength of a flea! Get out of the way, young man!" cried the movers in disgust.

When, a little later, they saw Mlle. Bonheur, her working clothes exchanged for a gown, giving orders in the rooms where they were at work, they realized the situation and hastened to beg her pardon. The artist convinced them that she was not offended by giving them an extra fee.

One evening, in a fit of absent-mindedness, having painted until the carriage which her friends sent for her was at the door, Mlle. Bonheur went to a public entertainment in a paint and oil-stained gown and old slippers.

An elegantly dressed man who sat next her went to the manager to complain because such a common person was admitted to that part of the house.

"Your name, if you please?" said the manager.

"Why?"

"I will go to the lady, Mlle. Rosa Bonheur, and ask her in your name to leave the theater or change her seat."

The exquisite waited long enough to beseech the manager to do nothing of the kind, and beat a mortified retreat.

Ancestors and Titles.

In regard to aristocracy Daniel Webster once wrote: "There may be, and there often is, a regard for ancestry which nourishes only a weak pride; and there is also a care for posterity which only disguises an habitual avarice or hides the working of a low and groveling vanity. But there is also a moral and philosophical regard for our ancestors which elevates the character and improves the beast." Aristocratic titles are often obtained by dishonorable means. Many a man becomes ignoble to become noble. The confidence of nobility of birth has rendered men ignoble, just as the opinion of wealth makes some men poor. Lord Bacon has compared those who lived in higher spheres to those heavenly bodies in the firmament which have much admiration but little rest. Titles are properly the insignia of wise and honest men. The fool or knave that wears one is a falsifier. They who dilate upon their glorious ancestry are foolishly vain of a debt which probably they will never be able to pay. It has also been remarked that a river generally becomes narrower and more insignificant as we ascend to its source. The stream of ancestry, on the contrary, says Texas Siftings, often vigorous, pure and powerful at its fountain head, usually becomes more feeble, shallow and corrupt as it flows downward.

BRITISH BUBBLE BURST.

VAIN ATTEMPT TO CORNER THE WORLD'S RUBBER.

A Former Experience Gives American Manufacturers Some Pointers, and They Very Promptly Squeeze the Life Out of a Promising Scheme.

The Rubber Syndicate Collapses.

The great rubber syndicate of Para, New York, and London has collapsed, and John C. Gonalev Vianna, alias the Baron de Gomderiz, the bugbear of the trade, has once more been defeated in an attempt to corner the world's supply of crude rubber. This time the loss will fall chiefly on bankers of Rio and London, who were inveigled into the Baron's latest scheme. The syndicate represented by Mr. Vianna was organized under the title Companla du Gran Para, with the Baron as manager. The headquarters of the concern are in Para, with branch offices in London, Paris, and New York. Although the syndicate, during the last nine months, obtained possession of 90 per cent. of the available supply of the world; the capital—said to be $25,000,000—under its control is not sufficient to hold this and also to buy up the new crop now coming into Para from the forests of Brazil. The result is that the syndicate could not cover its margins with the London houses with which the Baron made his deal two months ago.

Singlehurst & Co. and the Baring Bros. were mentioned as the principals in the deal, but there were other firms also that held stock on margin for the syndicate, and it is they who first began to sell.

The unloading of 100 tons on the market was followed by a general break, and rubber, which had been forced up to 85 cents by the syndicate, fell to 64 cents, or 32 pence British money. It was a severe blow to the Brazilian bankers and London capitalists. When the rubber merchants of the United States noted the large quantities of rubber coming into Para they prepared for a break. They had previously kept out of the market and sold all the rubber they had in stock. Only three weeks ago 200 tons were shipped to Liverpool from the syndicate, the shippers acting on the policy of giving Baron de Gomderiz rope enough to hang himself. Rubber manufacturers here curtailed their requirements in every possible way, and some of them temporarily closed their establishments. Thus they pricked the second great rubber bubble of a decade.

The manufacturers of the United States were caught by the Baron in 1883, but they crushed him by closing down their factories after rubber had been forced up from 40 cents to $1.25 per pound. They do not suffer now by the collapse of the wily Brazilian, but the English and Brazilians do. When the Baron's bankers saw the policy being pursued by the United States importers and manufacturers they called on him to cover his margins. Had the syndicate been able to carry out its plans it would have made many millions of dollars, but as soon as its backers refused to carry stock any longer the market was broken and they began to sell. One small firm in London that held fifty tons called on the Baron to cover his margins, and he failed to do so. Then another small holder unloaded a like quantity. This was followed by Baring Bros. and Singlehurst & Co., and then the run on the market became general. Rubber fell from 84 cents to 64 cents, 400 tons being unloaded at the latter figure.

At the opening of the year's business the outlook of the United States rubber manufacturers was not bright, as the Baron's speculations had forced rubber up so high that there was no profit to be made. Even the druggists' supplies and surgical instrument trades felt the effect of the Baron's manipulations of the market. The rubber-shoe trade suffered most severely, as more than half the crude rubber imported here is used by rubber shoe men. The present decline is a gain for the entire trade, and the Baron's scheme, which was directed chiefly against our manufacturers, inures to their advantage.

TWO MEN OF SAME NAME DIE.

Singular Coincidence at a Detroit Hotel—Neither Man Known to the Other.

A most extraordinary coincidence happened at the Russell House, Detroit, Mich., within twenty-four hours. A. H. Whitney, of Toronto, a consumptive, arrived in the city by way of the Canadian Pacific Railway at 9:45 o'clock, accompanied by his wife and C. K. Thomas, a relative. They at once proceeded to the Russell House and Mr. Whitney was taken to a room, where he died in the act of lying down. He had been an invalid for about three years. The next morning at 10:30 o'clock another Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Whitney arrived at the Russell House. They were from Quincy, Ill. After registering they went to their room. Here inside of ten minutes after entering Mr. Whitney was seized with heart disease and was soon dead. C. K. Thomas, the gentleman who accompanied the Toronto party, was appalled by the strange coincidence. These brothers in death were neither relatives nor known to each other. A. H. Whitney of Toronto had been one of the best-known accountants in that city. The gentleman from Quincy, Ill., was the manager and principal stockholder of the A. H. Whitney Organ Company. He was in Detroit on business and partly on a visit. He had been subject to heart disease, so the doctors were informed by Mrs. Whitney. He was 58 years old.

DESTITUTION IN MEXICO.

In Chihuahua Not a Drop of Rain Has Fallen for Twelve Months.

A letter from Chihuahua, Mexico, gives a fearful picture of the destitution of the peasantry. For twelve months not a drop of rain has fallen. Land which is usually covered with waving grass is for miles as bare as a billiard table. The cattle have died by the thousand, and the bones dot every hillside and valley. The streams have gone dry, and no water could be obtained for irrigation. There has been a total failure of crops—not enough corn was raised for next year's seed. The small farmers and ranch hands are starving. To relieve to some extent the necessities of the people the Governor of Chihuahua has obtained permission from the national authorities to import free of duty 60,000 bushels of American corn and 60,000 bushels of wheat. Upon both these grains there is a heavy duty. Despite these importations the coming winter will be a hard one, and many of the people will die.

MISS PHŒBE COUZINS is as plucky and determined as ever in her intention to assert her rights to recognition as the motive power of the World's Fair, and at the bare mention of throwing up the sponge her bright eyes snap with a sharpness which indicates that she'd sooner go to live in New York and marry an Alderman.—Philadelphia Times.

THE Egyptian exhibit at the World's Fair will be a reproduction of a street in Cairo. The attendants in the booths and shops will be dark-skinned beauties of the Orient, sent by approval of the Khedive. Will it do to say that they cannot be Tewfik to please the Chicagoans?—Detroit Free Press.

OF FRESH INDIANA NEWS, PERUSE THE FOLLOWING:

Important Happenings of the Week—Crimes and Casualties — Suicides—Deaths—Weddings, Etc.

—Sixteen eloping couples were married in New Albany last week.

—The long continued drought in St. Joseph County has been broken by copious rains.

—In a runaway accident at Covington, W. H. Miles and Jesse Haupt were dangerously hurt.

—Burglars at Greensburg looted the residence of George H. Dunn, jr., carrying off jewelry and money.

—Mrs. William Snyder, of Clarksville, Clark County, was gored in the abdomen by a cow. Her injuries are serious.

—Alice Percy, of New Washington, fell from a load of hay some weeks ago and has been paralyzed from the hips down ever since.

—Ohio river pirates are plundering everything and everybody within reach. They operate chiefly between Madison and Jeffersonville.

—The safe in M. A. Pickering's dry goods store at Cadiz was blown open by burglars, but no money taken. Part of the stock was carried away. The loss will amount to $500.

—The directors of the Owen County Agricultural Society say that, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, the society cleared several hundred dollars on its recent exhibition.

—Rev. J. M. Oldfather, of Hanover, for eighteen years a missionary in Persia, brought home with him a valuable collection of war curiosities. His home is described as a veritable museum.

—At Farmland, Charles Ross and John Harness attempted to jump on a train after it had started. Ross was thrown to the ground and seriously hurt, having his face mashed and one leg hurt.

—Thousands of martins are gathering in Clark County. The birds roost on the islands in the Ohio falls and in the trees near the river. In the evening, as they return to roost from the north, their flight fairly darkens the sky.

—The condition of William Bullard, the Hope desperado and barn-burner, who wounded himself in an attempt to assassinate George Rothrock, at Hope, on the morning of July 4, and who is still lying in the hospital of the Bartholomew County jail, is very serious.

—Milo Spencer, of Napanee, was leaning with his arm upon the muzzle of a loaded gun. His dog, while playing about him, caught its foot in the hammer and discharged the gun. The load of shot went in at the armpit and came out above, lacerating him in a terrible manner. His recovery is doubtful.

—A large barn and all its contents except eight horses was burned on the farm of James Reynolds, on Terre Coupe prairie, near South Bend. Besides the barn the destroyed property consisted of 1,000 bushels of grain, sixty-five tons of hay, harness and farm implements. Insured in Farmers' Mutual of St. Joseph County.

—A fatal accident occurred on the Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City Railroad about a mile west of Wingate. The west-bound passenger train was running at a high rate of speed, when one of the connecting rods on the engine broke, and crashing through the cab, killed the engineer. The engine was stopped by the fireman without further accident.

—A young man named Hall was accidently killed near Windfall. His father, Henry Hall, a farmer residing three miles east of that place, was cutting down a tree, when the boy approached, unnoticed by the father, at the time the tree started to fall. A limb struck the young man on the back of the head, crushing his skull. He lingered a few hours unconscious and died from his injury.

—While digging a well on the farm of John Wenrich, a few miles southwest of Martinsville, the 15-year-old son of Thomas Fulford, a neighbor, died from what is supposed to have been asphyxiation. Stone was encountered at some depth, which it was necessary to blast. After the charge was exploded young Fulford was lowered to see what effect the blast had. He reported a large hole torn in the stone. The rope was withdrawn to lower an assistant, when he called, "Let the rope down quick." This was done and the boy grasped it with a firm death grip. After being hauled to the surface he gasped for breath and was dead.

—Mr. Geo. Dixon, a well-to-do farmer east of Seymour, has a hen that is now several years old, which, up to last spring, was clad in a coat of feathers after the fashion of other hens, and layed an abundance of eggs each season up to the present. Early last spring the hen shed her feathers almost to nudeness, and when the feathers grew out again the first to appear were the long and beautiful tail feathers, common to the barnyard rooster, and in a short time the body was fully feathered in a brilliant coat of male attire, giving the hen every appearance of a rooster except the large comb and head-dress of red. She now crows in good style, but continues to lay eggs.

—The onion crop raised by the farmers residing on the river bottom west of New Albany is said to be very large and fine this season. Four hundred barrels have already been shipped to Northern points.

—A beautiful owl of an unknown species was captured by D. P. Enoch, near Crawfordsville. The bird had a back of a gold and silver color and a white breast covered with bright spots. The bird was exhausted when captured and soon died, but it has been sent to a taxidermist for mounting.

—A remarkable relic has been found at Brown Hill, Clark County, imbedded in a large tree. It is a sandstone tablet three by six by eight inches. Upon it are carved the names of L. Wetzell, Jacob Shelby, John Wetzell, Daniel Boone and the date 1812. The first and fourth names are in Roman characters; the other two in script. The tablet had grown deeply into the butt of the tree. The Wetzells, like Boone, were celebrated Indian fighters, and Shelby was one of Indiana's first pioneers. Professor W. W. Borden pronounces the relic genuine.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

Wonderful Remedy

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XIV—Continued.

At the same time Jenks was driving at his nephew in his savage way.

"Now, whatever you know, or have earned, be sure you do not waste any more time than you can help bringing this old man and this girl together, or in taking him where he can see her. I don't want him to speak to her. Above all, they must not be permitted to speak. I only want him to identify the girl—you understand?"

"I know what you mean—yes. And if I can get word before I go to bed, I'll do it—for I want that money, uncle."

"I'll double it, Ike," said his uncle, in a spasm of generosity.

"I'll try to earn it—you'll see," said the nephew.

"It all depends on how you manage now."

"Oh, I'll manage, uncle; you'll be surprised how well I'll manage this business."

It was well for Ike his uncle did not detect the double meaning in his nephew's speech. But as often happens with double dealers, the elder deemed the younger man entirely his tool for the time.

That same evening, as Joe was walking home from the dyer's, the man with the hang-dog face pushed suddenly against her, leered in her face, and laughed in an insulting manner as she hastened on, endeavoring to avoid him.

"What's the matter, miss? Ain't you the gal I met——"

At that instant a hand was laid on the loafer's shoulder, the loafer was whirled around, and a pair of hands caught and shook him.

Joe observed all that occurred, but she moved quickly on, then paused and looked back in time to overhear what followed.

"See here, you scoundrel, I'll give you over to the police if ever you speak to her again."

"You will?"

"Yes, and I'll break every bone in your body, too, before I turn you over."

"You will?"

"If you don't clear out, and promise never to insult any one again——"

"I'll promise."

"See you don't, then. I've got my eye on you."

"Don't make a fuss—there's a Bobby."

"You git, then."

The loafer hastened away, and the man overtook Joe quickly, saying:

"Don't be alarmed, miss."

Then Joe recalled the voice, and looking up at the hero of the hour, discovered it was the young man who had called at M. Dufaur's to warn her.

"O! thank you, sir."

"What for?" said Ike, loftily, as he swung his light cane. "They're a bad lot around here—but you'll not be bothered again. That capper will know better."

Joe wondered what a "capper" meant, but she refrained from inquiring. Ike walked beside her proudly, like the valiant protector he had proved. Joe felt very grateful to him, of course.

"I'm ever so much obliged to you, sir."

"O! don't mention it—it's nothing," said Ike, as if he had rescued a young miss from a ruffian every day in the year. "I'm glad I came along. Besides, now you know what I told you is true—you've got to keep a sharp lookout for yourself. And if you'll allow me, I'll do all I kin to throw folks off the scent—yes, and arrest whoever comes near you."

"You are very kind, indeed," said Joe.

"Well, miss, it's not all disinterested either. I'd like to number you among my friends, if you'd allow me to."

"I am sure I would be glad to have more friends. I know so few."

"Maybe that's because you're particular who you make friends with."

"O, no! Not at all! I mean—I mean I am not the least bit stuck up."

"That's the sort of a young lady I like," answered Ike. "If you'll not be offended, I'll walk home with you."

"O, my, no! You needn't trouble yourself."

"It ain't any trouble."

"I couldn't think of it."

"It would be a pleasure, miss."

"Well—but it's only a little ways now."

But he walked beside her, and as he walked he talked—talked so wise and smart—he seemed to know so much. Joe thought he was the smartest young man she had ever met.

At last they were at Monsieur Dufaur's.

"So, this is where you live?"

Joe waited for him to say good-night, but Master Ike was conning a plan in his mind.

"I often come past this way."

"Do you?"

"Yes. But I never see you. Maybe you ain't home always."

"Why, I'm never out—only to go an errand for Madame Dufaur."

"Well, then, you don't look out of the windows or come near the door?"

"Me!" Joe laughed merrily. "Me! Why I'm at the windows half the time."

"Oh, then maybe I can see you to-morrow when I'm going past?"

"Of course; there's nothing to prevent that I know of. All you've got to do is to look right up."

Joe blushed, and the blush made her very pretty.

"When are you likely to be at the window?"

"Oh, why, along about eight, and I'm always there just before lunch."

"When's lunch here?"

"At half-past ten — never later; Monsieur Dufaur has a regular warm meal, with meats, at one: then we have another at six, and always a cup of coffee at ten."

Joe gave this information with an air of pride. The sumptuous living at Dufaur's quite overpowered her. It was not as lavish as Job Wonder's, but there was more style about it. Everything was fine, and such dainties as Joe did not dream were in the wide world.

"Well, I may pass to-morrow at half-past ten."

"There's nothing to hinder you passing all day," Joe replied, with a merry laugh: "I guess I'll see you once; but I'll tell Madame Dufaur. It wouldn't be proper for me, she says, ever to speak to a young gentleman without telling my friends."

"Of course, of course. That's all right, too," said Ike, uneasily. "But I say, don't make any more of my—of that fellow skulking off than you can help."

"Won't I? I'll tell her just how he was glad to be let off, and slunk away."

"Of course—but really it wasn't so much to talk about. Glad I have made your acquaintance—and may be Madame Dufaur—but I'll maybe see her some day myself. Good evening, miss."

Ike bowed grandly, and walked away. Joe looked after him, then entered the house, saying to herself, thoughtfully,

"He seems like a nice young man."

The nice young man was ready now for the farmer. He smiled to himself.

"What a greeny she is—O! green's no name for her. Now, I'll get the old one to walk a good ways behind me, and when he sees me touch my hat, and look up, he can look at her, and then turn back like as if he'd forgot something. It's as easy."

Ike sucked the head of his cane, and grinned at the success which had crowned his endeavors thus far.

"Won't I surprise my uncle one of these days! Won't I, though?"

CHAPTER XV.

BLACK BESS.

"You look charming," said Mrs. Brown to Dick, as he entered the green room and dismounted.

"Oh, Ben's a clown," exclaimed Dick. "I never thought of Ben being the clown."

Mrs. Brown laughed heartily.

"Would you like to be a clown, Dick?"

"Me! Oh, if I only could."

"You are ever so much prettier as you are. And you'll make more money as a —a lady."

Dick blushed through his powder.

"I'd rather not."

"Oh, but think how you'll be admired by everybody."

"I—I don't like to be admired."

"Yes, you do. Everybody does."

At that moment Mr. Buckett entered the greenroom, and approaching Dick looked at him curiously. Dick reddened under his inspection. Buckett walked away coolly, and Mr. Mitchell glanced in. Then Buckett and the master of equestrians walked away together.

Directly Ben came in and addressed his wife without noticing Dick.

"You'll have to change your act, Kate; put it back fifteen minutes. I see the brown mare's lame—you'll ride the gray."

Then turning to Dick.

"Oh, why you did first-rate. Ain't he a beauty, Kate. The people say he's the prettiest girl in the lot."

"Am I to wear these all the rest of the performance?" Dick asked ruefully, as he look at his attire.

"We'll talk about that again. You ain't afraid, anyhow."

"No, sir."

"I suppose you'd best remain here until we see if you are needed again. Best be ready. You never know what's up in the ring."

As if to verify his assertion, Mitchell hastened in with a frown on his face.

"What's up now?"

Ben turned to the ringmaster as he he spoke.

"Curly is down."

"What! Not hurt I hope."

"Can't tell—he was infernally awkward. His own fault," growled Mitchell.

"That isn't true, Mitchell, and you know it. Curly is as careful as any man in the company. But I warned you not to try that devil until some of us took her in hand. She has a bad reputation."

"You are always kicking, Brown."

"And I've good cause to."

"You'd do more nearly right if you'd help straighten the ring up."

"I can do that, too."

"I wish you'd do it then," Mitchell sneered.

"Certainly. Why, of course. Here!" shouted the clown to a man who was handling a spirited black mare.

"Bring Bess here quick."

"What are you going to do, Brown?"

"Keep the ring full."

"With Black Bess?"

"With this mare."

Mitchell laughed.

"Why—every woman is getting ready to go on in the gypsy race."

"I know that."

"Then who——"

But Mitchell paused as Ben turned quickly to Dick, and catching his foot as the black mare was brought to his side, uttered the single word, "Mount!"

Dick felt himself shaken, but the man and Ben held the mare firmly. Mitchell stared with all his might.

"Go on; I'll see the gap is filled; have the band play lively, and I'll keep them occupied with Dick till the next act is ready."

Mitchell ran into the ring, and Dick smiled down at the clown, saying: "Don't think I'm afraid."

"If you are she'll throw you. Here." The clown put a whip in Dick's hand.

"I know her. Hit her with all your might if she throws her heels up; give it to her on her rump—anywhere, and I'll be there, you bet. Don't be alarmed. Now, get ready to rush in—ready—there they come off. Now!"

Dick never forgot that short, sharp "Now!" The ring was clear when he dashed in, with the clown bawling at his heels. The band played lively, the black mare flew once round the ring, then, holding down her head, was preparing to raise her heels, when whish! whish! the whip cut her flank. The black mare stretched out her neck instantly, and gave a terrific bound.

The crowd looked on in fear; a murmur ran around the multitude as Dick flew round the ring. He held his place firmly, and cut the mare again. Once, twice—aye, ten or twelve times she flew around the ring, shaking her beautiful head, and still the whip descended.

Men, women, and children—all there saw it was a contest for supremacy, but the rider won. The mare slackened her pace of her own accord, ambled gently around the ring twice, then deflected to the center, and stood trembling.

"Double Dick, you're a brick!"

The clown's eyes sparkled with pleasure as he patted Dick's hand.

"I didn't think there was so much stuff in you, little one. This is a clincher on Mitchell. Buckett will be too glad to take you on my terms—and they'll be high enough, you bet."

The crowd cheered and cheered, until Dick blushed. To be the hero of the hour, to hear the plaudits of ten thousand people was enough to thrill—to turn the head of men who had fought great battles.

As he was led out of the ring, the clown at his heels, Buckett followed both into the green-room.

"That was fine—fine—fine."

"Yes, it was," said Ben.

"Now, Dick, skip over to my trunk and get your own toggery on, then you can come into the tent and see the remainder of the show."

Then Buckett and the clown talked apart a few minutes; when Dick looked again the clown and owner had disappeared—he heard a peal of laughter, then a tremendous clapping of hands, and he knew Ben was in the ring again.

Before he entered the tent, two of the female riders passed him. One glanced at him scornfully—the other took his hand and said with a smile:

"However did you do it—why you are just wonderful!"

And a little later, the clown's wife tapped him on the arm as he sat near the entrance to the green-room, all eyes and ears.

"Dick, you are a dear boy."

That was glory enough for one day—glory enough for a year—Dick said to himself as he looked at the antics of the clown, who excelled in grace, suppleness, and strength all the other men in the ring. What they did he clumsily imitated—then excelled with an ease that excited great wonder, which was expressed in loud laughter and much clapping of hands.

CHAPTER XVI.

DOUBLE DICK'S DOUBLE CONQUEST—MAN AND BEAST ACKNOWLEDGE HIM SUPREME.

Much more thrilling sensations were in store for Dick. That night, when the vast tent was dark and gloomy, and the riders were lounging and talking in groups in their dressing room, Ben Brown led Dick out and into the city, where he found the clown's wife at her sister's house. The sister was a lady in a prominent position, but she did not hesitate to invite the clown and her sister to her house.

Indeed she made much of both. Ben Brown had shown the world he could do several things well—he was a manly, independent fellow. Dick was made much of, too—so much that he blushed continually.

Ben was called away half an hour, and when he returned, he looked very much pleased.

"What's it Ben—some good news?" inquired Mrs. Brown.

"Yes, it is. I've got ahead of Buckett—I've made him agree to give twice as much as he expected to pay Dick here."

"I'm glad you did," said his wife heartily. "How much?"

"What do you think of forty dollars a month and found," said Ben to Dick.

"I don't know—it's a lot of money, Mr. Brown, and ——"

"O, don't Brown me—call me Ben, Double Dick."

"I'm ever so much obliged to you." Dick was going to say more, but the husband and wife stopped him.

"What must I do?"

"You are to ride Black Bess to begin with. You will be billed as 'Idalia, the Arabian Queen.'"

Dick started to his feet.

"Me! A Queen!"

"Yes. Fancy you see yourself on the bills." Here the clown assumed a striking attitude, and pretended to read from a bill.

"Idalia, the greatest female rider in the world (or the universe for that matter), the Queen of Arabia, who was for two years the reigning star in London, queened it for three years in Paris, and who is known in every capital in the old world as the most fearless and accomplished equestrienne the world ever saw. How'll that do, Kate; eh?"

"But," Dick stammered, "I don't want to be a woman."

"Bless my soul!" said Ben, laughing. "Most boys would break their necks for the job—and find lots of fun in it—whole oceans of fun. Why, just imagine the love-letters you'll be getting. All the young men—yes, and the women, will admire you. And forty dollars a month; whew! No work—nothing but to ride. I've fixed all that with Buckett. You are either a boy or girl—always to be regarded as such on the pay-roll—and the public to be none the wiser; and whoever blabs, or gives the secret away to be discharged and lose three months' pay."

"O!" said Mrs. Brown, "there's no danger of any one telling who the queen is—nobody will care to lose their place and all their earnings, for Buckett has a way of making it very hard for people who try to collect more than he chooses to pay. The only man he pays on the nail is Ben here—and he knows better than to quarrel with Ben."

"That he does. Well, Double Dick—it's all settled. And Buckett is to find you new dresses—or, rather——" Here Ben took out a roll of bank notes and handed them to his wife—"there's what he thinks you ought to be able to get up something fine for Dick for."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Unpacking Alligators.

The author of the "Recollections of a Lion Tamer," relates how, after being for some years employed as an animal trainer, he and his wife had, by great economy, saved enough to buy a modest menagerie, and received their stock of crocodiles, serpents and monkeys at an inn near Lyons, France. One evening several alligators came, and were placed in a store-room which opened from the courtyard.

Maria and I, with several persons to hold lamps, set to work to unpack them. You can imagine how agreeable that unpacking was. The alligator is wholly lacking in grace and gentleness. Each of his jaws is ornamented with seventy-five teeth, his body is covered with armor that defies attack, and his tail is an invincible weapon that can overthrow, cripple, or destroy an adversary. Our alligators had had a long voyage.

Never of an amiable disposition, alligators are in particularly bad humor after a journey, and become the most ferocious of creatures if they escape. Ours escaped! What confusion there was! Every one rushed to the door, the lights went out, and my wife and I were left in the darkness, face to face with this horrible, invisible danger.

We had climbed on a table. At one blow from the tail of one of the saurians the legs gave way. Terrified, we rushed from one side of the room to the other, hunting the door. The frightful grumbling of the angry beasts, mingled with the sound of their tails and jaws striking against the furniture, the flag-stones and the walls. At last I found the door.

We were free; but that was not the end of the matter. Not to be injured by a stroke of the tail of one of the alligators was one point, and not to be ruined was another, for these delightful companions had cost us our little fortune. I went back, carrying a torch. I threw myself resolutely into that melee, and finally succeeded in getting the saurians into safe quarters.

Aged Warriors.

Moltke did not quite reach the years of Wrangel, who died in 1877 at the age of 93, nor did he quite equal Emperor William I., who lacked but thirteen days of completing his 91st year. Two years ago the St. James Gazette, noting that "the majority of Prussian field marshals been old men," found plenty of examples also of aged English soldiers of celebrity, present and past, including Sir Patrick Grant, who at that time was about 85 years old, with seventy years' service; Lord Napier, then 79; Wellington, who died at 83, after sixty-five years of service; Lord Gough, who lived to 90, with seventy-five years of service; Sir John Burgoyne, who entered the army at 16 and reached the age of 89. Of the French veterans it cited MacMahon, at that time 81 years old; Canrobert, at that time 80; Soult, who died at 82, after sixty-six years of service; Grouchy, who died at 81, and so on. To these examples may be added that of the longest-lived of our more distinguished revolutionary soldiers, Stark, who died at the age of nearly 94. Admiral Wallis, of the British navy, celebrated recently his hundredth birthday.

But, of course, the interest on this point in Moltke's career is that the great work of his life was done after he had reached the age of 66; and, indeed, until 60 he was little known outside of Prussia. His supreme achievements were effected at the age of 70 and 71; but no one ever questioned that he was still in his full vigor as a strategist at the age of 80.

THE old rule that there is safety in numbers works right along in the case of the terrapin, that greatest luxury among edibles, which is becoming so plentiful that very rich people refuse to eat it. This is all owing to terrapin farms along the Chesapeake and on the Patuxant River, where the dainty morsels are kept safe from muskrats and foxes. When terrapins are as cheap as lobsters the society table will eschew them altogether.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

The Reason of It.

Quester—I wonder why it is that a man is heavier when he is in liquor than when he is sober?

Jester—That is easily explained. It's because he's "half shot."

Acquitting Providence.

Quester—You know Shrimper, don't you? That chap that's made himself so conspicuous in town affairs of late.

Jester—Oh, yes. Very well, indeed.

Quester—He claims to be a self-made man.

Jester—Good! I'm glad to be able, on his own testimony, to relieve Providence of the odium of having made such a mistake.

Husband—I should say so. It was about forty minutes too long.

Hardly a Suit.

Mrs. Pry—Does bathing suit you, Miss Dazzler?

Miss Dazzler—I think so, but ma says there's hardly enough of it to call it a suit.

An Economical Darky.

"I jess can't do hit," replied Parson Baxter; "I has to s'port my pore ole mudder."

"But your pore ole mudder says yer don't do nuffin for her."

"Well, den, ef I don't do nuffin for my pore old mudder, what's de use ob an outsider like you trying to make me shell out?"—Texas Siftings.

"You Write Illegibly, Sir."

A Yale student recently handed in a paper to his professor and was surprised to have it returned with a note scrawled on the margin. He studied it diligently, but was unable to decipher the note, and so he brought his paper back to the professor. "I can't quite make out what this is, if you please," said the student. "That, sir," said the professor "why, that says: 'I cannot read your handwriting.' You write illegibly, sir."—Springfield Republican.

Didn't Meet Them.

Mrs. Hayseed—"Did ye see any o' them sharpers in the city?"

Mr. Hayseed—"Not a one, Miranda, not a one. But I met some old friends I never expected to see again. Do ye remember old Mr. Bigcrop? Well, I met a son of his. Thought both those boys was dead an' lyin' out there in the cemetery; but this one said he was snatched by grave robbers, and just as they was sellin' his body to a medical college he came to. Good enough fer a book, Miranda, good enough fer a book, and I told him he ought to write it, and he said he would, and he'd dedicate the book to me as his father's old friend. There's one queer thing, Miranda. This man's hair is black, while the Bigcrop boys had red hair, but he said it turned black from fright. He's way up in society, Miranda, and introduced me to young men named Vanderbilt, and Astor, and Gould, and Drexel, and ever so many more. I tell you, Mirandy, these young fellers spend money! Some bills fer cigars and things came in while we was talking, hundreds o' dollars worth, an' they whipped out the cash like a breeze. One of 'em happened to run short, and so I lent him all I had, but he said he'd send it by express to-morrow. I tell you what, Miranda, a smart man like me is just as safe in the city as in the country."

A Special Revival.

Mr. Friendly—Parson Limberlip, you are complaining of dull times at your church; don't you think a revival would help things?

Parson L.—Ve'y much, Jedge! Hit'd rimerdy de case in a jiffy, pervided, sah, hit's de right sorter revivum. De kin' dat chu'ch wants am a revivum er de ekschecker, an' how she gwine to git it while de shinin' lights er de sinergogue am wastin' deir supstance at de waterin' places? Tell yo' what it are, genterman, ef de keeps on in dis scan'lous way, h'it won' be no waterin'-place dey'll lan' up [illegible] in de nex worl', deed it won'.

Matrimonial Red Tape.

"Florry, dear," faltered the Washington youth. "I—I couldn't summon courage to tell you what was in my heart, and I wrote it. You got my letter, didn't you?"

"Yes, George, I got it."

"And you read it, didn't you?"

"Yes, I read it. In fact, I—I read it over twice."

"And now, Florry," he said, growing bolder, "I have come to learn my fate."

"The best I can promise you, George," said the blushing daughter of the distinguished Congressman, withdrawing her hand from the ardent clasp of the infatuated young man, "is that I will advance your letter to a third reading to-morrow."—Hartford Courant.

Carlyle's Bluntness.

Thomas Carlyle was once bidding "Good-day" to a very conceited young man who had favored him with a long sermon on things in general; he went politely to the door and then said: "Well, Mr. Bland, I've received ye for the sake of your father. Now, good-by, and I earnestly hope I'll never see ye again!" On another occasion Carlyle looked in a passionless way at the visitor who had been holding forth for ever so long and said: "Man, but ye're a puir creature!"

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY......SEPTEMBER 3, 1891.

CHILIAN revolution given in full on our second page.

THOSE who are claiming so much "brilliancy" in Blaine's foreign policy, would confer a favor by explaining what brilliant things he has done.

THE great republican "Home Market Club" now informs the country that "American wool is cheaper in this country than it is abroad." Of course. The high tariff works against the farmer every time.

THOSE farmers, if there are such, who believe that only a home market is valuable, now have a chance to judge which is best. If foreign countries were not having poor crops, would we get $1 a bushel for wheat?

REPUBLICAN papers seem to be on the run. You seldom, now hear one say the tariff is not a tax, or that it is paid by the foreigner. It would have given them a better standing among thinking people, if they had learned this a few years sooner.

ENGLISH capitalists, headed by Sir Titus Sult, baronet, have established a big plush factory at Bridgeport, Conn. Now they want to import 200 skilled plushmakers from England to do the work. That is the way the McKinley bill helps the workingmen of America.

WILLIAMSON, a North Carolina colored republican wants to run for congress on a platform favoring the payment by Uncle Sam of $300 to each ex-slave, $200 to go to the former owner or his heirs, and $100 to the freedman. Bro. W, would save himself some trouble by reading the fourth section of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution.

CUBA charges her cigar makers 50 cents a 1000 as internal revenue. Our own authorities have just decided that this 50 cents is a part of the original cost of imported cigars, and the usual import duty must be paid on that also. If as republicans assert, the foreigner pays the duty. why do our importers object to any sort of tax on imported articles.

STATESMEN who claim there is such a big cash balance in the national treasury, are invited to publish side-by-side, the last report of the democratic secretary and the last one of the republican secretary of the treasury. The people can then see just what items were used. This is so fair and honest a plan that we apprehend every republican editor will rush it right into his paper.

WORKMEN from Wales are being imported into this country, "free of duty," to do the work in making "American tin." Only three sets of people are interested in the tin business, the employers, the workmen and the people who pay for the tin. The employers are a few wealthy people; the workmen are to be imported; the people will have to pay higher prices. Now where does the benefit to Americans come in? Will some one who thinks the tin business valuable, please answer?

THE Indianapolis Journal, republican high tax says "Reciprocity is the great hit of the age in American statesmanship and diplomacy." But it fails to add what is true, that reciprocity is a little, thin slice, of the great loaf of free and unrestricted reciprocity the democratic party has always and very persistently advocated, but which republicans have always objected to. Blaine saw that the democratic idea was gaining ground, and like the demagogue he is, caught it up by a little obscure corner of its garment and held it up to his party. At once they all flopped, and now there is nothing that shows American statesmanship like this little ragged edge of free trade.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain.

Doctor M. E. Blair, M. D. D. D. S. of Mansfield, O., formerly of Western Reserve Medical University, Cleveland, Ohio, will be at Auburn, Friday and Saturday. The check room at the fair will be at the south entrance to the exposition building. All articles, only 5 cents.

The managers of the Waterloo fair have added several new attractions this year, which will be noted in due time.

Mrs. R. A. Haskins of Waterloo, is recovering nicely from a severe operation. Drs. Buchtel and Darling performed the operation.

The C. L. S. C. will meet next Saturday afternoon with Mrs. Plum. A full attendance is desired as there will be business of importance to transact.

The repairs on the Presbyterian church are not done, and there will be no services there next Sunday. Mr. Healy will preach at the Baptist church in the forenoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott Blain, of Chicago, are in the city the guests of the COURIER folks, who are relatives. Mr. Blain is a locomotive engineer on the Wisconsin Central railroad.

The town is full this week of pretty girls and gallant young men, the flower and intelligence of the county, for the teachers' institute is in session. Auburn welcomes them.

There will be union services at the Baptist church next Sunday at 10:45 a. m. Rev. George Wade Healy of the Presbyterian church will deliver the discourse. All are cordially invited to attend.

Kiblinger is in Auburn, DeKalb Co., Indiana,

Salyer's "ready roaster" for peanuts is always filled with nice hot "Goobers" the very fragrance of which will make one's mouth water. It don't cost any more to get nice warm peanuts than cold raw ones. Try them.

Ice cream social will be given by the young ladies at the U. B. church at Hopewell, in Jackson township on Saturday evening of this week, Sept. 5. Plenty of refreshments on the ground. A good program will be prepared. Rev. H. C. Ashcraft will address the audience.

The Auburn Church Furniture Company is always at the front with the newest inventions and appliances. Just now they are filling an order for "Student boxes," a device for the use of students in dentistry, for carrying the necessary outfit. It is quite an invention but there are not many things the Church Furniture folks can't make.

Dr. Swartz has been called a time or two to consult over the case of G. W. Swartz, a well known citizen of Wilmington, who took carbolic acid by mistake some time last spring. Lately, the trouble seems to have taken a different turn, and the physicians are not agreed as to whether the real trouble came from the poisoning or not. But he got worse and died last week Tuesday. The funeral was at Newville Thursday, services by Rev. F. M. Stone of the M. E. church at Butler.

Geo. Quince and Mr. Bottenberg got home Friday after their four weeks campaigning in Illinois. Mr. Harper of Waterloo reached home at the same time, but Mr. Widney remained a few days longer. Mr. Quince says they had a grand time, good speakers, good music and a rousing enthusiasm. Among the speakers who took part in the campaign, were Ex-Gov. St. John, Mrs. Helen Gougar, M. J. Fanning of Wichita, Kan., Capt. Trevelick of Detroit, Mrs. Lathrop and others. The "Hoosiers" had a generous share of applause, but seem pleased to be home again.

Ed. Eldridge has been obliged to move the iron fence along the south side of his residence, to conform to a new survey. Some years ago he placed the fence, a very expensive one, according to a survey that he had made then, and till now he supposed he had it on the right line. Now, he is compelled to set it in about two feet. This obliged him to have the front line sawed off that much. L. Bowers cut it off with a little saw made for that purpose. The whole job will be rather expensive. Mr. Eldridge is expecting the next survey will make him set it back.

The Century Magazine will celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by publishing a Life of Columbus written especially for that magazine by Emilio Castelar, the famous Spanish orator, statesman and author. The work is written in Spanish, and will be carefully translated. Senor Castelar, whose interest in and admiration for America are well known, has made a careful study of the new historical material bearing upon the subject, and it is said that his papers will be very richly illustrated. Other articles dealing with the discovery of America are in course of preparation for the same magazine.

J. C. Henry, whom everybody knows, has located in the Ford Block, between Robbins & McCord's drugstore and C. C. Shaffer's furniture store, and will open up a large stock of groceries, notions, etc., etc, next Monday, Sept. 7. The room has been fully refitted and put in order. New paper and decorations for ceiling, additional counters and other changes. In addition to the lines named he will have a "fair" or "bazar" of the modern style, and will keep everything usually found at a "fair." John Leasure one of the best known salesmen in the country will be with him as leading salesman, and the "Two Johns" will soon be as famous in Auburn's business circles as they have always been popular. Call on the "Two Johns."

Father Young came over from Garrett last week, and while here, we had the pleasure of a visit. We were pleased to see him looking fairly well, though by no means recovered from his late severe sickness. He is advised by his physician, Dr. Thompson, to take a rest and a few months travel, but he does not feel justified in leaving his people so long. His work among them has been very great as well as successful. In four years that he has been located at Garrett he has been at the head of the forces that have made improvements, buildings etc. that have cost nearly $20,000, and they are nearly all paid for. Besides, he is still as we believe, the regular pastor of the church here. But with all these cares, we trust he may be so fortunate as to recover his usual degree of health.
